A CARELESS REMARK.

Jab at Salvationists Helped to Defeat Labor Lawyer O'Donoghue.

It does not pay for politicians, to speak carelessly, and it certainly behooves the man seeking the popular franchise to treat the Salvation Army with respect. Mr. J. G. O'Donoghue, the barrister who ran for South Toronto on the Labor ticket with the Liberal organization at his back, says that he made this discovery when he went down to defeat before Mr. A. Claude Macdonell, M.P., at the last Federal elections. Two or three years ago one or two so-called socialists, who were merely malcontents with no formulated economic views of any kind, got into trouble with the police by insisting on addressing public meetings at street corners and refusing to move on when rudely interrupted by the men in uniform. They were arrested and were defended by Mr. O'Donoghue, who is counsel for most labor sympathizers when they get into trouble. In the Police Court, in combatting the allegation that these orators were a public nuisance to those doing business in the vicinity of their meetings, he remarked that they were no more of a nuisance than the Salvation Army with its outdoor services, or words to that effect. The remark was made off hand with no desire to offend the religious convictions of anyone, but with a view to helping his clients. An evening paper, however, being short of a subject took it up editorially, and administered a castigation to Mr. O'Donoghue for speaking disrespectfully about the Army.

The episode was apparently forgotten by the time that the elections of 1908 came on and Mr. O'Donoghue found himself a candidate, making a house-to-house canvass in South Toronto, in which the electorate is almost without exception poor. Then he found that the casual remarks thoughtlessly made in the Police Court had proven veritable dragon's teeth and had roused up a host of enemies. He encountered the story that he was an enemy of the Salvation Army on all sides, and many of the poorer classes of his constituents were outraged at the idea.

"I attribute to that matter more than anything else the size of the majority against me," said Mr. O'Donoghue recently.

GERM INOCULATION.

Late Nicholas Murphy, K.C., Tried Hard to Prove a Grave Charge.

Readers of the daily papers are aware that in one of the large American cities a doctor was recently on trial on a charge of murdering his wife's uncle by inoculating him with typhoid germs. Such charges, which seem fantastic but are not beyond the region of possibility, have been made not infrequently since the germ theory of disease became accepted by scientists. Over fifteen years ago the late Nicholas Murphy, K.C., had a case of the kind which he desired to have ventilated in the public prints. It may be said that he did not succeed, for the most sensational editor then would have shied at such a story and there would have to be a prima facie case of overwhelming strength before a Canadian newspaper would touch such a story to-day. The case in question was one that involved a politician long since dead, who was at that time very prominent in Ontario. Charges of disreputable conduct in his private life were made against him, and the chief witness against him was a young woman who lived in his home as a sort of companion to his wife. Her own character, which was good, was not involved, and she was apparently in good health also when she fell ill with some slight sickness and was treated by a physician who was related to the politician in question. She never rallied, and before the criminal charges and the libel actions arising from the charges came to trial she had succumbed to galloping consumption.

To his dying day Nicholas Murphy, who was counsel for the young woman and who was responsible for bringing the original charges to light, averred that she was a victim of tubercular inoculation at the hands of the physician, but he could obtain no credence for his theory in any quarter.

Another Carrie!

An unrehearsed comedy, in which the chief actors were a slightly inebriated Italian, a quart bottle of whiskey and a disciple of Carrie Nation, took place in the Toronto Union Station recently.

While the native of Sunny Italy was inviting some companions to share in a bottle of rye, a representative of the W.C.T.U. arrived on the scene and at once took in the situation. Snatching the bottle from the hand of the astonished Italian, she ran to the track and dashed it on the rails.

When asked the reason for her action she replied that she was only doing her duty by removing temptation, adding that she wished she could break the neck of the saloonkeeper who had sold the whiskey as easily as she had broken that of the bottle.

London's Latest "Princess."

Miss Isabel Jay, who is to take the leading part in "The Balkan Princess," at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, made her first appearance on the stage in the summer of 1897 in the revival of "The Yeoman of the Guard." "An awful panic seized me," she says, "while I was waiting to go on the stage. Just as I felt that nothing could ever induce me to go on, Mr. Walter Passmore took me by the shoulders, and with a kind word literally pushed me on to the stage. The effect of suddenly facing the footlights and the audience was like an electric shock, and seemed to brace my nerves. I was told afterwards that I did not miss a note of my part, though to this day I cannot tell what I did that night."

THE SUGGESTED BEAUTIFYING OF CENTRAL PARK GROUNDS

Was the Theme of an Interesting Discussion of Special Committee Composed of Representatives From the Council, Board of Education and 57th Regiment—Sub-committee Chosen

A definite step toward the improvement and beautifying of Central Park by the three bodies interested in the park was taken yesterday afternoon at a special joint meeting at the city buildings of a committee consisting of three members from the City Council, the Board of Education and the 57th Regiment, this committee of nine being composed of Ald. Hicks, Gillespie and Metheral, D. W. Dumble, Dr. M. A. Morrison and T. H. Adams and Capt. B. F. McWilliams, Major E. B. Clegg and Capt. V. Eastwood, from the Council, Board of Education and Regiment, respectively. There was a very thorough discussion on the matter under consideration, and a sub-committee of Ald. Hicks, Capt. McWilliams and Mr. Dumble, was appointed to proceed with the work in regard to making the park ornamental to the city and uniformily attractive.

Ald. Gillespie was selected chairman and as the idea of the co-operation of the three boards originated with the regiment, Capt. McWilliams, the convenor of the regimental committee, was called upon to explain the general idea of the scheme.

He stated that the movement, of which the present meeting was the fruition, began at a meeting of the officers. At that meeting the opinion was expressed that the Council, Board of Education and regiment should get together and evolve an all round suitable plan for the caring of the grounds. A little over a quarter of the park was controlled by the regiment, a little over a quarter by the School Board and nearly half by the city.

Dr. Morrison thought that if it were made known where the money for the care of the park in general was to come from, more definite arrangement scould be made. The Board of Education had always looked after their grounds and would be able to continue to do so at a reasonable cost.

In response to a request to explain the city's attitude, Ald. Hicks said that a motion in council to build a walk was all that had been dealt with by the council in regard to improvements. The Horticultural Society was given a grant by the city to look after Victoria and Central parks, and had performed their duties satisfactorily. He thought the only necessity of the three bodies acting in unison would be in connection with the grading and levelling of the park.

Major Clegg favored making a plan of the park and gradually carrying out improvements. The main portion belonged to the city, and the city, therefore, would naturally have to bear the greatest part of the expense.

Mr. Dumble's ideas showed a radical departure from any suggestions that might be made to make the park an elaborate one. The grounds to be beautiful had to be simple. There was nothing handsomer than green grass and high growing trees. Where so many people would want to sit down and rest shade trees were a necessity. The walk from McDonnel to Murray street, across the park, and the one between the same two streets in front of the school were quite sufficient. He thought the path across the park should be raised a foot, as it formed a canal in the spring and rainy weather. He didn't believe in the park being cut up into walks and thus having its natural beauty destroyed, and was also of the opinion that each body should look after its own property.

Mr. McWilliams differed from Mr. Dumble and rather than have the park a simple green sward he would have it beautified and made ornamental to the city. The expense in this connection resolved itself into two parts: first, the putting of the grounds into satisfactory shape; and second, the keeping up of the grounds by those interested. The people should be compelled to walk on the path and made to understand that they would be liable to prosecution for trespassing on or injuring the grounds. Another thing—the grounds were very uneven. And also a row of trees on the city property stopped abruptly at the boundary limits of this property, and the same was true of a row of flower beds on the School Board's reservation.

Mr. Dumble couldn't see that the unevenness of the ground was a drawback. A rolling undulating stretch of green sward was his idea of park beauty. He thought, too, that walks and paths would be more ornamental than useful, and stated that the public would persist in leaving them to take short-cuts across the grass if it suited their convenience. He again expressed his opposition to the proposed working in concert of those interested, and said the Board of Education would not consent to the grounds under their supervision being used for other than school grounds.

Capt. Eastwood found fault with Mr. Dumble's past administration in connection with the park, and expressed the opinion that too much authority was vested in one arbitrary individual of the Board of Education. He favored concerted action.

Dr. Morrison suggested that the matter be left in the hands of a small sub-committee representing the Council, Board of Education and 57th Regiment. He thought that each of the bodies should bear the initial expense involved in the improvements, and that those concerned should work in harmony for the general improvements when the preliminary work had been accomplished.

The refining point of the proceedings was reached when Dr. Morrison moved, seconded by Ald. Metheral, that such a committee be appointed, consisting of Ald. Hicks, Mr. Dumble, and Capt. McWilliams. The motion was carried, and the sub-committee was instructed to report their progress and conclusions to the special committee at a later meeting.

If You Have to Fight a Boa.

If any reader of this article should ever be so unfortunate as to experience the embrace of a boa constrictor it is recommended that he try to release himself by taking hold of the creature's tail and unwinding it from that end. It can be easily unwound in that way, but otherwise it is not possible. The way to kill a snake is not to attempt to crush its head, the bones of which are very hard, but to strike the tail, where the spinal cord is but thinly covered by bone and suffers readily from injury. It is the same with an eel. Hit the tail two or three times against any hard substance and the eel quickly dies. The boas are not venomous, but their fangs are sufficiently powerful to seriously wound.

An Argument For Social Frankness.

It is best to be sincere, as a family in an eastern city recently found out. They had been entertaining a distinguished novelist from abroad who was not altogether acquainted with society's way of saying things it does not mean. The time came for her departure, and as the host was handing her to the carriage he said very courteously, "I am sorry you cannot stay longer."

To which came the unlooked for retort, "Oh, but I can!"

There was only one course open. The trunks were taken down, the carriage sent away, and, to the consternation of her hosts, the lady re-entered the house.

A BOOMING LETTER FROM PRINCE RUPERT B. C.

The Review has received the following letter from Chas. H. Sawle, formerly of Peterborough, now editor of "The Optimist," of Prince Rupert, B. C.:—As many of your readers have asked me to write them about Prince Rupert, I beg to use your columns. To start, I wish to say that only those who have a little nerve, a fairly broad mind and are sincere in their desire to make some money without much effort need read this. Others may give it the merry ha, ha, as I would have done had I not come out and seen for myself.

Prince Rupert is actually only 10 months old. In that time the building that has gone on here is amazing. You cannot imagine it. There are three and four storey stores and apartment houses, big hotels, hundreds of residences and shacks. The latter are rapidly disappearing. The people are the best on the continent—mostly young, active, clever and willing to take a chance. Everyone is here to make money, and at the same time make Prince Rupert. Men came in here without a hundred dollars in the world. To-day they are worth thousands. Fortunes are still being made in real estate and buildings.

Those two items are very important here. But do not for one moment run away with the idea that there is no other way to make money. Business is good. The merchants and professional men are making money and so are the laborers and mechanics. The lowest possible wage is $3.00 for 8 hours. The average is $5.00, and from that up. Living is about one-third more unless you board at a high priced hotel.

For the next few years many fortunes will be made in mining. Prince Rupert is the hub and chief supply station for Portland Canal District—the greatest mining camp on the continent yet discovered. There are many valuable mining camps up the Skeena River and across on the Queen Charlotte Islands. Every boat that comes up, and there are now ten boats making regular trips from Vancouver every week, brings a full list of passengers. The prospectors are going into the mining camps like bees to a honey-suckle bush. There are many mining camps still to be settled, and the next few months a great deal of money will be made. This will be the headquarters, and it is here where a great deal of the money in mining stocks will be made. There is gold, silver, copper and other minerals, and valuable coal fields have been discovered not far away.

On Graham Island, 80 miles out to sea, is the greatest, or will be, dairying and agricultural district in B.C. The cattle pasture the year round, and the soil is such that anything from cabbage to the finest fruit can be grown. It is very easy to clear and drain. Money will be made there as that will be the garden for Prince Rupert.

For the past three weeks we have had perfect weather. It rained only one day. The others are all sunshine. Weather is not considered here by anyone. Men, women and children are out in the rain the same as in the sunshine. Ladies go to afternoon teas and parties in light dresses no matter what the weather. They are prepared for it, and that is the end. The life here is very fascinating and no one feels any regret at having come. The ladies even enjoy it, and it is a little hard on them at first.

At some future time I may write you again, but we are extremely busy.

Yours truly,
CHAS. H. SAWLE.

Prince Rupert, B.C., May 8

True Etiquette.

One of the best stories told about Mr. Birrell concerns a poor client, whose case he took up for nothing. When the case was won the client gratefully sent him the sum of 15s., which he accepted in order not to give offense. A colleague reproached him, however, for this "unprofessional conduct" in taking less than gold. "But I took all the poor beggar had," said Mr. Birrell, "and I consider that is not unprofessional."—M.A.P.

Foolish Economy.

Dick—You got engaged last week, old chap, didn't you?

Frank—Yes, my boy, but that's all off now.

Dick—Why? Incompatibility of temper?

Frank—Not at all; rather the reverse. She advised me to practice economy, and I started by getting her an imitation gold ring!

A Cabinet Record.

Almost 300 men have served in presidential cabinets since the formation of the government, and of the whole number the record for long service is now held by James Wilson, secretary of agriculture. He achieved this distinction recently, when he passed the mark set by Albert Gallatin, who was secretary of the treasury from May 14, 1801, to Feb. 9, 1814, or twelve years, eight months and twenty-six days. The third in length of service is William Wirt, who was attorney general from 1817 to 1829, almost equaling Gallatin's record. Very few cabinet officers have served over eight years. Secretary Wilson was appointed by President McKinley March 4, 1897, and so at the beginning of 1910 he had been in the office twelve years, nine months and twenty-seven days.—Youth's Companion.

CHIEF THOMPSON IS HIGHLY THOUGHT OF IN WOODSTOCK

The Woodstock Sentinel-Review says:

The Police Commissioners met this morning and gave permission to Chief Thompson, to apply for the position of Chief of Police in Peterborough, which is at present vacant. The commissioners unanimously decalared that they would deeply regret losing such a valuable man, but they could not allow themselves to stand in the way of his advancement, and therefore gave the desired permission.

If Woodstock is to lose the services of Chief Thompson more, than the commissioners will regret it. He has shown himself to be not only a capable and conscientious police officer, but a likeable man and a good citizen.

RETAIL MERCHANTS WILL MEET AT KINGSTON IN JUNE

In Annual Convention—Incorporation of Association of Great Importance in Affording a Means of General Organization Among the Retailers—Subjects for the Convention

Retail merchants—

The following is a letter in part received by Mr. R. G. Kingan, of the local branch of the Retail Merchants' Association:—

Toronto, May 18th, 1910.

Dear Sir,—We are pleased to tell you that after having devoted fourteen years of hard and earnest effort to impress the importance of the retail merchant class upon the minds of the manufacturers and wholesalers, and upon our Provincial legislators and our Dominion representatives at Ottawa, that we have at last succeeded far beyond our expectations.

During the session of Parliament at Ottawa that has just closed we have succeeded in securing a special Act of Parliament incorporating our association and giving us the right to keep in close touch with every retail merchant in the Dominion in every effort we make, to improve our trade from one end of Canada to the other. With this special act of incorporation, and with the recent legislation to regulate trusts and combines, introduced by the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, we now have an opportunity of improving the retail trade conditions of Canada, that we never had before, and with this new life that the association must now take on, we trust that you will endeavor to take your part and do your share to help us and help yourselves.

The eleventh annual Ontario provincial convention of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada will be held this year on June 21st and 22nd, at Kingston, Ont. Invitations have been sent out inviting retail merchants from every city, town and village in Ontario to attend. Some very important subjects will come before the merchants for discussion, among them such subjects as:

"How farmers can make their farms more attractive and valuable by co-operating and understanding the aims and objects of the retail merchants' organization better."

"How the local press can be made more vauable to the retail merchants and why they should support its advertising columns."

"The injurious effect that the bargain counter advertisements of the Toronto dailies have on the growth of the cities and towns."

"The cause of the increased cost of food products from the practical standpoint of the merchant who knows the conditions."

"Why co-operative stores are commercially unsound."

These, and a number of other subjects that will be of great interest to all retail merchants will come before the convention, and every merchant who has a trade grievance will have an opportunity of presenting it.

The Kingston retail merchants are making extensive preparations for entertaining the visitors, and every retail merchant who would like to have a holiday combining business and pleasure is invited to attend, and full particulars will be forwarded to him by addressing the secretary, Mr. E. M. Trowern, 21 Richmond street west, Toronto.

POINTED LOADED RIFLE AT HIS NEPHEW'S WIFE AND THREATENED TO SHOOT

Harvey Windover Convicted by Magistrate Edmison, But Judgment Was Reserved—Charge of Assault on Police Constable to be Proceeded With Next Week—Another Serious Charge May be Laid—A Deplorable Condition of Affairs.

Harry Windover was convicted this morning of the charge of having on or about April 21st, assaulted and ill-treated the wife of Nelson Windover, of Cavandish, by pointing a rifle at her and threatening to shoot. Judgment was reserved.

The case was tried before his Worship, County Magistrate Edmison, and he refused an application for bail.

The hearing of the other charge against the prisoner, that of assaulting Wm Dickson, a police constable, was adjourned to Friday, May 27th. Dickson was not present, owing to sickness.

County Crown Attorney Wood intimated that another serious charge might be preferred.

Mr. G N. Gordon conducted the case in the interests of the prisoner.

The evidence showed a demoralizing state of affairs having existed for for some time, owing to the conduct of the principals of the case. At the conclusion of the evidence, his Worship remarked that it was a sad thing that there should be such people with such conduct in the country.

There was some evidence that there had been illegal sales of liquor at the home of Nelson Windover and Mr. Gordon in his examinations endeavored to bring the true facts out, but his questions met with the opposition of the Crown Attorney and Magistrate Edmison. The prisoner, Windover, was arrested at the home of Nelson Windover on the night of Friday, April 13th, by County Constable Wm. Dickson, of Westwood, and brought to this city. He appeared before Magistrate Edmison and was remanded to jail and the date of the hearing fixed for today.

THE EVIDENCE.

Gertrude Windover, wife of the complainant, Nelson Windover, said that the prisoner was her husband's uncle. The prisoner came to the home last September. In the spring her husband ordered him away several times but he refused to go. On the night of April 21st he came to the house and to her room, and told her to get up or he would shoot her. She got up as soon as possible and he went upstairs, got his rifle, and brought it back. He said: "I am going to shoot you," and at this placed the point of the rifle to her breast. He said: "I'll drop you right in your tracks." Prisoner afterwards showed her the cartridge in the rifle. She begged him off for a while, and finally he put the rifle on the table. Her husband was present, but he had been threatened by prisoner and was afraid to interfere.

Mr. Wood produced a letter and witness identified the writing as that of the prisoner.

Witness continuing, said that the same night about one o'clock he took the gun up again and said he was going to shoot her. He then caught hold of her and placed the barrel of the rifle to her neck.

To Mr. Gordon witness said that her husband had not gone after prisoner to ask him to come to the house. Her husband was at the prisoner's house in September, but on other business. In October her husband went to the woods. He was at her home the morning of the day her last child was born. Two other ladies were at her home off and on. Last fall, in October, she had relations with the prisoner when her husband was away, and until he returned in March. She had not told her husband but he began to suspect something when he came home in March. She didn't tell him because prisoner said he might kill her and her husband. Prisoner had bought her a gold watch and chain, a waist, a skirt, some hose and cuff links. This was all before April 21st. The prisoner used to drink to excess.

"Have you seen whiskey sold at your house?" asked Mr. Gordon, but his Worship objected to the question.

NO LIQUOR SOLD.

The witness answered that there had been no liquor sold, but the answer was not noted by the court.

"Did you drink whiskey with prisoner last Christmas?" asked Mr. Gordon.

This question was objected to by his Worship.

At this point information was amended to read "on or about April 21st."

Witness said her husband had told her that he and the children would leave if she did not discontinue her relations with the prisoner. She thought the only way to have the prisoner kept away from the house was to have him arrested.

HUSBAND'S EVIDENCE.

Nelson Windover, the complainant, thought it was the latter part of September that prisoner came to his home. He came to see about some minerals, and wanted to board at the house. He had not been asked to. Witness was not at home the first day he came. The price for his board was to be $10 per month.

Witness remembered the 21st of April he and his wife had retired. Prisoner came to the verandah and yelled: "Are you in bed, Gertie?" The door was fastened and he got up and opened it. Prisoner said: "I told you I would be home; what did you go to bed for?" He picked up a chair and threw it across the room. He next said: "I'm going to shoot you." In the meantime his wife had dressed. Prisoner got the rifle and walked up to his wife with the words: "Gertie, I'm going to drop you," and placed the rifle to her breast. He had not loaded the gun in witness' presence, but he (witness) had afterwards found out that it contained a cartridge. The rifle was a Winchester. Prisoner was asked to put the rifle down and, by coaxing, he did this. About two o'clock in the morning prisoner was sitting at the end of the table and he picked up the rifle and, pointing it at his wife's throat, said: "I'm going to blow your head off." He had brought a bottle with him. Witness wouldn't say that prisoner was very drunk.

To Mr. Gordon witness said prisoner had not bought any whiskey from him. He did not sell whiskey to Owen Young last Friday nor to any lumbermen. Prisoner's children had not bought any whiskey from him, but the witness had at prisoner's request, purchased liquor for him.

Witness said that his wife and the prisoner had promised to put a stop to the improper relations existing between them, but he had later found out that they were not stopped, and he told the prisoner at different times to get out. He did not go to prisoner's home and ask him to come to his (witness') home. He did not tell the prisoner not to remain with his own wife.

To County Crown Attorney Wood: Prisoner did not live with his wife because he abused her and she left. The letter shown to the first witness was also shown to the witness and he identified it as the one handed to him yesterday morning.

Mrs. Windover, recalled, told of the commencement of the relations with the prisoner. She said that he had threatened to shoot her if she did not accede to his requests.

Mr. Gordon asked the witness a question in regard to the birth of her last child, but His Worship objected to her answering it, as he held that it didn't effect the case.

Mr. Wood, at this juncture, read the letter which he had asked the two witnesses to identify. It was addressed to Nelson Windover and signed "your loving friend, Harvey Windover." The writer intimated that Nelson Windover and his wife should say that he (the writer) was drunk at the time. The writer wished that Windover would think of the writer's dear children, and he would take his oath not to make any more trouble. He would leave the country and never return. He asked for pity and wanted Nelson Windover to come and visit him before seeing a lawyer, and he had something to tell him which would give him the opportunity of making $150.00.

THE DEFENCE.

Eva Windover, a daughter of the prisoner, was the first witness called for the defence.

Mr. Gordon asked the witness if she had purchased whiskey at Nelson Windover's, and this brought an objection from Mr. Wood, who contended that it was not material evidence, but His Worship allowed the question to go. Witness said she had purchased liquor from Nelson Windover and his wife. She did not see any other liquor at the house.

To Mr. Wood: Witness said that her father had sent her to Nelson Windover for the liquor. Her father had been coaxed [illegible] Nelson Windover to come to [illegible]

Continu[illegible] answer to Mr. Gordon, w[illegible] said that Nelson Windover [illegible] said that he wouldn't live wi[illegible] meaning her mother. Lucy W[illegible]ndover, eleven years old, and a daughter of the prisoner, said she was at Nelson Windover's last Christmas. Her father and "Gertie" went upstairs to a room. They went into the room. Witness looked through a knot hole from her position in the store and saw them go into the room.

LIQUOR SOLD.

A man named Nichols came to sell oats to Nelson Windover that day and when he arrived her father and Mrs. Windover came down stairs. She saw liquor sold to her father and another man. They paid Nelson Windover 5c. a drink. George Phillips also got liquor. She was home when Nelson Windover came to her father's house. He wanted her father to leave her mother. Nelson Windover called her mother a bad name and said he wouldn't live with her if he was her husband.

Mrs. Caroline Windover, wife of the prisoner, said that her husband went to Nelson Windover's house, after being coaxed. Witness, however, was in Peterborough on this day and did not hear him. She had been home in September when Nelson Windover and his wife visited her home to get potatoes. She never heard any conversation in regard to her husband going away. She had purchased three bottles of whiskey at Nelson Windover's last September from Mrs. Windover at one dollar a bottle.

"I'm afraid there's two much whiskey in the neighborhood was the Magistrate's comment.

Witness told of the actions of her husband and Mrs. Nelson Windover on Christmas Day. She didn't appear to be afraid of him at that time.

WEDDING BELLS

GAIN—McFARLANE.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season took place yesterday afternoon, at half-past two, at the residence of the bride's father, 509 Homewood Avenue, when Miss Margaret Winnifred McFarlane, the youngest daughter of Mr. Andrew McFarlane, president of the Wm Hamilton Mfg. Co., was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph Harrison Gain, B.A., son of Mr. Thos Gain, of Toronto; The ceremony was performed in the north drawing room of the bride's beautiful home, which was tastefully decorated, the color scheme being green and white. The happy couple stood beneath a large bell of apple blossoms, while Rev. J. G. Potter, B.A., pastor of St. Andrew's church, officiated, in the presence of a large number of guests. To the strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin," played by Miss Mabel Sing, of Toronto, the bridal party entered the room. The bride looked very pretty in a beautiful gown of white liberty satin, with hand embroidered panels studded with pearls. She wore a bridal veil and coronet of orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Hazel McNeil, of this city, as bridesmaid, looked charming in a dress of pale blue satin with a large white hat, massed with blue roses. She carried a sheath bouquet of pink roses. Little Eleanor Meek Wilgar, all in white, niece of the bride, made a dainty flower girl. Mr. R. M. Glover, of this city, acted as groomsman. While the registrar was being signed Miss Florence Scott sang, "Love's Coronation," by Florence Aylward.

After the ceremony the bride and groom received the congratulations of a host of friends, after which the guests repaired to the dining room where buffet luncheon was served. Mrs. McFarlane, mother of the bride, who received the guests while assembling, wore a dress of pearl grey crepe.

Among the out-of-town guests who were present were Mrs. W. D. Wilgar, of Port Arthur, and Mrs. R. G. McCuish, of Winnipeg, sisters of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Gain, of Toronto, Misses Jaffray and Sing, of Toronto, Mrs. M. L. Cameron, of Meaford, and Mrs. E. Parker Crossley, of Bracebridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Gain left on the 4.38 train and will reside for the summer at Balmy Beach, Toronto. Mrs. Gain travelled in a tailored suit of French serge, possum shade, with hat to match.

Norman France, the lad who wandered from his home at Elkhorn, Man., last Sunday, has not yet been found.

DELIBERATE MURDERS

Are Committed in Pennsylvania Hospitals Says Laborite to Senate Committee.

Washington, May 20.—Steel manufacturing concerns in Pennsylvania were characterized as "human slaughter houses," and it was charged that in the hospitals "wilful murder" was committed, on the theory that dead men were less expensive than cripples, at a hearing before the Senate committee on public health and national quarantine, in connection with the Owen bill, providing for the creation of a department of labor and health. These sensational statements were made by Arthur E. Holder, legislative agent of the American Federation of Labor. He promised to furnish the committee with a statement giving the source of his information.

"A few days ago," said Mr. Holder, "I was sitting in the office of a Pennsylvania member of Congress, and was informed that in the hospital of one of the Pennsylvania steel concerns willful murder was committed when it was found that it would be better for the company to have a dead man than a cripple."

Senator Smoot demanded to know the name of the concern accused of these crimes and the name of his informant. Mr. Holder responded that the name of the concern was the Bethlehem Steel Co., and he promised to supply the committee with all of the facts connected with the charge.

THE TAIL NOT ON STRAIGHT WHEN COMET CAME NEAR US

Astronomers Saw Startling Apparition Across the Face of the Sun Yesterday—What Causes the Spots on the Sun?

Yerkes Observatory, Williams Bay, Wis., May 20.—Following closely on the wholly unexpected astronomical condition that prevailed early yesterday, when the tail of Halley's comet was plainly seen in the east, astronomers at Yerkes observatory yesterday were further bewildered by a startling apparition across the face of the sun at noon.

A broad spectrum of light, extending across and a considerable distance to each side of the sun, challenged the attention of excited observers. Prof. E. B. Frost, who first sighted the phenomenon, declared he had never before witnessed its like. Prof. E. E. Barnard said the same. Hoping to obtain an accurate check on the strange spectrum, Prof. Frost telephoned to observers within a radius of 100 miles of Williams Bay, calling attention to the peculiar occurrence. The apparition lasted less than half an hour.

The spectrum at once became a topic of overmastering interest and conjecture. Enormous sun spots seen Wednesday afternoon and the brilliant displays of northern lights on Thursday night had been passed by the astronomers as having absolutely no direct connection with the comet. "Although I cannot advance an opinion at this time," said Prof. Frost, "I can see no other cause but the comet for the appearance of the spectrum."

The passage of the earth through the tail of the comet, delayed a day in its schedule, is believed to have taken place last night, although observations did not give positive proof of this.

Not Near Enough Wednesday.

Princeton, N.J., May 20.—Prof. Henry Norris Russell of the astronomical department of Princton University, in a signed statement to the Associated Press yesterday, declared that, basing his calculations on the width of the comet's tail yesterday, as compared with previous mornings, the earth was not near enough to pass through the tail of the comet yesterday morning, but that very likely it would do so some time during last night. The statement says: "At three a.m. to-day the sky was brilliantly clear, without trace of moonlight or dawn. The comet's tail was conspicuous in the east as a band of light about eight degrees wide and quite straight.

"The tail was apparently between two and three times as wide as on the morning of Tuesday, May 17. If its real width has not changed it must still have been fully one-third as far from us on the 18th as it was two days before, which would make the time of the earth's passage through it come on the morning of the 20th. If this is the case, the central line of the tail, where the earth's orbit cuts it, it is about four million miles behind the prolongation of the line joining the sun and the comet, and the line from the comet to this point (which may be taken roughly as the line of the tail) makes an angle of about 20 degrees with the line just mentioned. The tail, if viewed from a point outside its plane, would appear strongly curved, as was the case with this comet when it could be so observed in 1835."

BIG PRICE FOR COAL MINES

Vancouver, B.C., May 20.—At Victoria last Saturday Mackenzie and Mann Co. made payment of $2,750,000, representing one-quarter of the purchase price of the Dunsmuir collieries and coal lands on Vancouver Island. James Dunsmuir is taking in part payment two million dollars of the stock in the new company recently floated in London, and in which ownership of the property will be vested.

An important stipulation in the option is that the purchasers would not be given possession until the last payment shall have been made. The mines in the meantime will be operated by Messrs. R. Dunsmuir and Sons, but once the deal is finally closed, the back profits will go to the new corporation. It is expected that possession will be secured by the owners long before the dates mentioned in the bond have been reached, as all deferred payments bear interest at the rate of six per cent.

DENIES (big) DIVIDEED RUMOR

Montreal, May 20.—In an interview yesterday, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy gave an emphatic denial to the story that the C.P.R. was to pay a ten per cent. dividend.

When told regarding the story that English shareholders were determined on a ten per cent. dividend, and to obtain this end were urging upon the directors the necessity of having a holding company take over all the lands of the C.P.R. Sir Thomas laughed, and said it was news to him.

When asked if there was a possibility of an increase in the dividend as a result of the increase in the revenut from the land sales, Sir Thomas said: "Oh, that I cannot say. Such things as increases in dividends are dealt with as needs arises, but for the present it has not been considered."

SCALES LIE FOR SUGAR TRUST

How the Great Corporation Defrauded the United States Customs' Department.

New York, May 20.—There was wheeled into the criminal branch of the U. S. Circuit Court late yesterday a huge scale, an exact duplicate of the scales used on the docks of the American Sugar Refining Co. in Brooklyn. And while the twelve jurors bent forward tensely, a weight of 997 pounds were placed thereon. Then a steel wire was thrust in a hole drilled in the stanchion, and the result was noted. The scales, though accurate, registered only 988 pounds—nine pounds short.

This was the Government's first practical demonstration before the jury of how the sugar trust is alleged to have cheated the treasury department out of thousands of dollars in duty. Proving this, the prosecution hopes to convict Charles R. Heike, secretary, and four former employes of the company.

Albert Lambert, a machinery expert in the employ of the Postoffice Department, told how he had examined all sixteen scales of the company on the docks, how he found holes in all the stanchions, and how each yielded to the pressure of a steel spring just as he had shown the jury.

40,000 JEWS WANT TO VOTE

Montreal, May 20.—It is stated here that the Jews of the city, numbering about forty thousand, will take steps in the near future to have their nationality represented on the City Council, as well as on the floors of the Local Legislature and in the House of Commons.

It is said, in fact, that, with this end in view, a concentration of the enterprising race is taking place in St. Louis and St. Lawrence wards, and it will be in this section of the city where the future agitation for membership will take place.

As far as can be ascertained, there are about fifteen thousand Jews in St. Louis and eight thousand of the same nationality in St. Lawrence.

ST. CATHARINES CANADIAN CLUB

St. Catharines, May 20.—The last regular meeting of the St. Catharines Canadian Club for the season was held yesterday evening, when Prof. B. E. Fernow of Toronto University spoke on, "A Forest Policy for Canada."

The following officers were elected: President, Dr. E. M. Hooper; vice-president, Dr. J. Sheehan; secretary-treasurer, D. M. Mir; executive, Rev. Mr. Almon, Charles McGhie, J. A. Forster and A. E. Coombs.

WHITE SLAVE TRADER WAS CONVICTED

New York, May 20.—Belle Moore, a mulatto, was found guilty last night of selling girls into lives of shame. The maximum penalty is fire years and $1,000 fine.

Belle Moore was not called in her own behalf, but two witnesses were called for her—Alice Milton and Belle Wood, the two girls she was accused of having sold into shame. Both admitted that they were living together in a house of ill-fame, and that they had been induced to go to her house to meet a man who could make them an advantageous offer. Both had agreed of their own free will. One said she was married and gave her aged at 25; the other said she was 24. Neither looked like children, although Belle Moore had previously represented them as being under eighteen.

CANADA A FIELD FOR ENGLISH DRAMA

London, May 20.—Forbes-Robertson, interviewed, said there was a great future for the drama in the Dominion. Not only the principal cities, but many smaller towns possess splendid theatres, though Canada has no dramatic companies entirely her own, and performances are practically entirely confined to American and English touring companies, principally the former, for not many English touring companies go there. Here, perhaps, lies a way to relieve the present overcrowded condition of the dramatic profession at home.

Cannot Elect Coadjutor.

Quebec, May 20.—All hope of the synod agreeing to elect the coadjutor bishop asked by Bishop Dunn, has now been practically abandoned, owing to the laity's opposition to the selection of one with right to succession. It is practically agreed that the bishop will be asked to take a year's vacation and to accept $4,000 to obtain an episcopal assistant from England or elsewhere.

NINE MONARCHS ATTEND KING EDWARD'S FUNERAL

Selling Seats at High Prices Along the Route of the Procession—Observance of the Day in Ottawa and Toronto—Age of King Represented by Sixty-Eight Guns.

London, May 20.—Nine crowned heads of Europe and several heirs to thrones sat down in Buckingham Palace last night to a dinner which King George gave to all his eminent guests assembled in London for the funeral of King Edward to-day. After the dinner, the members of all the suites were introduced to the King.

It is noteworthy that though the presence of so many rulers and princes must necessarily throw a great sense of responsibility upon the authorities and the police, all move about quite freely and no word is heard in the press or the public places of any apprehension of untoward incidents.

London yesterday filled rapidly with people from all the provinces, and foreigners. The whole line of the funeral route has been from early morning until late at night a surging mass of people. The seat stand business has been greatly overdone, and seats for which $25 or $50 were asked a few days ago, are now being hawked for from $5 to $10.

Emperor William, who arrived yesterday morning, was met by King George and later had an affecting meeting with the Queen Mother, Alexandra. The Emperor then accompanied by King George, proceeded to Westminster and paid a tribute to the memory of Edward VII. The two monarchs knelt by the body and prayed and on rising to their feet gripped hands. It was a striking scene and greatly moved all those who witnessed it.

Thirty thousand soldiers from Aldershot and other military stations camped in the parks last night. The weather is hot and thunderstorms are not improbable. Many thousands of people passed last night in the streets in order to secure points of vantage from which to view the cortege. All London is garbed in mourning. In the royal train which will carry the body to-day from London to Windsor will travel King George and Queen Mary, the Queen Mother, Alexandra, eight other sovereigns and near relatives. Special trains will convey the high officials, the foreign representatives and special envoys.

The little town of Windsor has assumed a purple hue. From the station to the entrance to the castle every building is covered with a mourning pall of royal purple.

Throughout the day hundreds of people came to Windsor from London and the surrounding districts, carrying floral memorials to the dead King. The cloisters of the chapel are already filled with flowers, and scores of extra racks have been erected on which to place the others. On the lawns there is another great mass of flowers, little bunches of daisies or buttercups from the village children lying side by side with great wreaths of orchids and roses sent by officials and the Governments of the world.

Among the callers at Buckingham Palace yesterday were the King of Denmark, the King of Greece, Prince Henry of Prussia, the Lord Chief Justice of England and Theodore Roosevelt.

The funeral services will be conducted in St. George's Chapel at Windsor, where Edward VII. will be temporarily sepulchred among the tombs of his fathers.

The last day of the lying-in-state of the body of King Edward brought a repetition of scenes on an even larger scale. The resolute band of a thousand or more persons, mostly women, who had braved the storm throughout the night, was increased to a score of thousands before the sun rose above the roof tops, and by noon the queue awaiting admission to Westminster Hall stretched for miles to the westward of the Houses of Parliament.

Because of the enormous number of persons who were sure to be disappointed Thursday night it had been planned to keep the doors open until midnight instead of closing them at ten o'clock, as was the original intention. This plan, however, was frustrated by the action of those nearest the entrance, who became unruly and fairly rushed the buildings. To avoid a panic the doors were hastily closed and the police reserves summoned to assist in restoring order. It was a half hour before this was accomplished. Soon afterwards rain fell heavily, and all but about 1,000 persons returned to their homes.

G.T.R. Trains Will Stop.

Montreal, May 20—The management of the Grand Trunk Railway System has issued instructions for a stoppage for three minutes of all traffic to-day, at the time corresponding to the hour of the King's funeral. This will be at 8 o'clock eastern time.

On Parliament Hill.

Ottawa, May 20.—As part of the ceremony in connection with the funeral of his late Majesty King Edward VII. to-day, there will be a cessation of industrial and other activities in Ottawa for a space of three minutes, commencing at 1.30 o'clock sharp, corresponding to the moment at which the King's body is lowered into the vault at Windsor. Details of this are announced in a proclamation by Mayor Hopewell.

The military ceremony on Parliament Hill will be most impressive. The militia and cadets will assemble at 12.45 p.m. At 1.15 the Governor-General, Prime Minister and other Ministers and officials of the Government will take up their position on the steps, the militia and cadets being drawn up on three sides of a square round the green. The bands will be placed in the centre, facing the main steps. The militia will present arms and then stand with their arms reversed while the bands play

Chopin's Funeral March. In Toronto.

Toronto, May 20.—In Toronto services will be held at various churches, and, commencing at 2.45 p.m., an official service will be held in front of the Parliament buildings. All the troops, volunteer and regular, will form up in the armories at 1.45. A proclamation will be read to the troops before starting, proclaiming King George V. Then the garrison will march up University avenue to the park. No music will be played en route. Gen. Cotton will be in command of the troops.

In the evening the 9th Field Battery will fire a salute of 68 guns. They will start at 6.33 p.m. and fire the guns one minute apart until sunset at 7.40. During the firing, Chopin's funeral march and the Dead March in Saul will be played.

The number of guns represent the age of the late King. The custom has been in use for many reigns. Immediately the last gun is fired, all flags will be hauled down. In this, the western Ontario command, salutes will be fired at London, Hamilton, Guelph and Toronto. All units of the permanent force will parade at the time of the salute, form up in the vicinity and stand with arms reversed. When the firing has been concluded there will be a pause. Then the crepe will be removed from the flags and the black from the drums.

DANGEROUS WORK ON CRIPPLED LINER

Quebec, May 20.—Owing to the size of the crippled liner Grampion, she is unable to go into drydock at Levis and is being temporarily repaired in the Louise Basin. The work is so dangerous that the insurance companies have refused to insure the men engaged at work.

The character of the work demands that 18 men go down into the compartment formed by the ship's two hulls.

Yesterday a yawning gap appeared between two plates when one of the men was below. He stuffed his hat into the hole, but by the time help had arrived there was six inches of water in the compartment.

IMPROVEMENTS AT WELLAND

Welland, May 20.—The Falls Power Co. has just completed a brick transformer building on Hallams avenue here and installed its machinery.

A division of the boy scouts has been organized here with a large number of members.

The Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Electric Railway are building a large brick transformer house here to increase the power for their lines here. The branch to Port Colborne is nearly all granded, and will be in operation in a few months.

Welland's new postoffice will be opened on Monday. The customs' officials also have accommodation in the building, which cost about $50,000.

MR. BORDEN COMING

All Canadians will regret to hear that Mr. Robert L. Borden has been very ill, but everyone will be pleased to know that he is recovering. It has been arranged that Mr. Borden shall make a tour through Ontario, beginning in the eastern counties next month and going west. He is certain to get a hearty welcome. Arrangements should be made to give the people of Peterborough and the surrounding country an opportunity of seeing and hearing this great Canadian. Mr. Borden is a man whose honesty, patriotism and fairness, as well as his great ability as a lawyer and Parliamentary debater command the respect of his opponents as well as of his friends. The people of Canada may have confidence that when he is Premier the Reign of Graft will come to an end.

A WEAK HOLD ON POWER

The Ottawa Correspondent of the Toronto World points out that in the last general election the total vote cast for straight Laurier candidates was only 587,644, while the vote for Conservative and Independent candidates was 588,440, in many constituencies the Government candidates won by narrow majorities. A very slight change in the popular vote in the next election would place the Conservatives in power. No wonder the Government is anxious. There is no doubt that popular sentiment in all the English-speaking constituencies of the country is distinctly more unfavorable to the Laurier Government than it was at the time of the last election. How matters stand in Quebec is uncertain, but there is no reason to believe that the Administration is more favorably regarded there now than it was two years ago.

The outlook for the Conservative party is certainly very encouraging.

ONTARIO'S NORTHLAND

The visit of the Ontario Press Association to Northern Ontario will probably have the effect of making that part of the Province more widely known. The editors will only get a glimpse of the east end of the great clay belt which is said to contain as much good agricultural land as the whole of Old Ontario.

There are perhaps greater opportunities in this part of Ontario for the sons of Old Ontario farmers than there are in the far Northwest.

It is well for Canada that many thousands of young men went from Ontario to the Canadian west. They laid the foundations of the country on a Canadian basis. Canadian law and order, Canadian customs and Canadian national sentiment prevail there largely as the result of the great flow of population from Ontario to the west. But now it will be better for the future of the Province and the Dominion at large that the greater part of the outflow from Old Ontario shall go into the northern part of our own province.

The editors should not be content with the knowledge gained in their brief trip to the end of Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway. They should study the resources of the north country, watch its progress and keep their readers informed. Some remarkable changes will take place in New Ontario during the next ten years and the opportunities for money-making will be as great or greater than in the far Northwest.

We call it the North Country and think of it as very far north, but in fact Moose Factory on the shore of James Bay, the southern extension of Hudson Bay, is slightly farther south than London, England.

THE CITY OF MONTREAL

Arrangements are now being completed for the annexation to Montreal of a number of contiguous suburbs. According to an estimate prepared in the Montreal City Hall and vouched for by the mayor, the city will have a population of 596,000 when these annexations are made. It is stated that the annual growth is fully fifty thousand. That is a city nearly three times as big as Peterborough is added to the population of Montreal every year. If these figures are correct the Dominion census next year should show a population of about 650,000, and within eight years the population will be not less than one million. Indeed, if the present annual increase is 50,000 and the percentage of growth is maintained, Montreal will reach the million mark in about seven years.

Montreal is in many respects a magnificent city. The old town is situated on a series of terraces extending from the great St. Lawrence river to Mount Royal, but when the suburbs are all annexed Mount Royal will be completely surrounded by the city. At one time it was a city of narrow streets, but in recent years many miles of buildings have been torn down and the streets widened. There are now more wide business streets in Montreal than there are in Toronto, and there are a large number of handsome public squares in the central part of the city. The buildings are nearly all of stone, which gives the city a solid and dignified appearance. But in one respect Montreal is much behind the age. Its streets are badly paved and disgracefully dirty. The new Board of Control have promised to remedy this, and if they carry out their promise all Canadians will have reason to be proud of the commercial metropolis of the Dominion.

Although nearly one thousand miles from the ocean, Montreal is a port for large ocean vessels, so that it has the advantage of being both an inland city and an ocean port. No other city in the world has such a unique position in this regard. If navigation were open throughout the year it would probably become the greatest city in America, but the season of navigation only lasts about seven months.

Mr. W. D. Lighthall, K.C., lawyer, poet and novelist, recently made a count of the names in the city directory and came to the conclusion that the French names were in the minority. The Jewish population is now about 40,000 and steadily increasing. All the Jews learn English. The French-Canadian population is larger than any other element, although not equal to all the other elements combined, but the great majority of the French-Canadians in the city of Montreal can speak English. Taking these facts into consideration, there is little doubt that the Montreal of the future will be an English-speaking city.

DEAFNESS OF WHITE CATS.

An Affliction Which Prevents Their Being Good Mouse Catchers.

According to a magazine writer, the acuteness of the average cat's sense of hearing is proverbial, but it is a proverb that needs qualifying. For example, many white cats are absolutely deaf, and though the idea may appear absurd at first sight, I am inclined to believe that the color of the cat is associated with its sense of hearing.

I have several times imported Persians or long haired cats from abroad, but not one white one in the number has been able to hear the slightest sound. Of course I have possessed white cats that could hear, but they have been the exception, and that applies as much to the short hair pet of the fireside as to the aristocratic long hair of the shows. Moreover, I have observed that the white cats dullest of hearing are those with blue eyes.

The cats with orange eyes which I have had could hear quite well, those having odd eyes—that is, one orange and one blue—could hear a little but not well, and those having blue eyes were quite deaf, though all have come from the same litter. All kittens have blue eyes till they are about six weeks old, when the eyes change to their adult or permanent color. But to show how widely the permanently blue eye differs to begin with from other eyes I may say that immediately the eyes of white cats that are to have permanently blue eyes open they will shine bright red in the dark and neither the ephemeral kitten blue nor any other color eye does this.

One peculiarity of deaf cats is that they seem to have an aggravated sense of feeling in their feet pads. It is very difficult for a heavy walking animal such as man to approach a deaf cat from behind without giving it warning, and this I attribute to the extreme sensitiveness of the cat's feet, recording the slightest tremor of the ground and so to a certain extent taking the place of hearing. It is a belief held by some country people that white cats do not make good hunters, good mouse or rat catchers, even if they do hear. I am inclined to think that there is a foundation for this idea, and I would go further and say that dark colored cats make the best mouse and rat catchers because they hear best.

Where Slavery Exists.

Joseph Burtt, of England, who has visited the slavery part of West Africa, and seen how the Portuguese are treating the hapless natives, says:

"The world should unite and stamp out slavery in Africa and everywhere else. The cultivation of the cocoa in the islands of San Thome and Principe, West Africa, employs 50,000 ignorant blacks who are kept in pitiable servitude. In the islands fevers and tropical diseases carry off the people rapidly and 5,000 slaves have to be taken there yearly to maintain the needed labor supply.

"These slaves come principally from the central regions of Africa. Some are sold for debt; some are given up on accusation of witchcraft; some are captured in tribal feuds and village raids, but most are captured by expeditions equipped and sent out for the damnable purpose. They are conveyed to the coast, fastened together with wooden shackles to prevent them escaping. It is a long march, many hundred of miles, nine days of which is over a desert. Approximately 50 per cent. of the slaves die on the march."

The Strength of a Shark.

Given special advantages, such as that of holding the end of a stout rope at the other extremity of which is a hook fixed in a shark's mouth, man may, with the assistance of a number of his fellows, have the best of the shark. But alone and in the water the advantage is wholly and absolutely the other way, and the strongest swimmer and the bravest heart fail when the tyrant of the sea seeks to make his acquaintance. The shark is gifted with great strength, a savage temper, dogged perseverance and exceptional power of jaw. The lion and tiger may mangle, the crocodile may lacerate, the bulldog may hold fast—the shark alone of living creatures possesses the power of nipping off a human limb at a bite.

Making It Simple.

The scholarly looking man with the big eyeglasses had been invited to address the Sunday school and was making a few remarks concerning the lesson.

"I see the word 'line' occurs here," he said. "Will some one give me a definition of 'line'?"

Nobody answered.

"It is very easy," he proceeded encouragingly, "though you may find it a little perplexing to convey the idea in simple terms. Try again. Well, the ordinary signification of the word is longitudinal extension, but here it denotes a predetermined boundary. I am sure, my young friends, you can remember that."

Needed No Help.

The old colored woman ambled into the police court where her son was to be tried on a charge of petit larceny. She had been talking to a police court lawyer the evening before, and, catching sight of her, the limb of the law hustled toward her.

"Well, did you get up that $5 for me?" he inquired eagerly. "They are going to try Hamp's case now."

"Well, now, suh, I didn't git de money, mister. Times is jes, so hard I done colluded ter let Hamp go on en be c'nvicted widout de 'sistance ob counsel."

Tomboy.

Verstegan gives the following origin of the word "tomboy" as applied to romping girls: "Tumbe, to dance; Tumbod, danced; hereof we yet call a wench that skippeth or leapeth lyke a boy, a tomboy; our name also of tumbling cometh from hence."

A Born Leader.

"Why are you constantly referring to Bliggins as a leading citizen?"

"I can't help having an admiration for the man," replied Miss Cayenne. He belongs to our whist club and always knows which card to play first."

J. G. Armstrong, Pittsburg's Director of Public Works, is held on charges of forgery and perjury.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"Probably the next time we can be alone together. And don't let it be a week from now. When and where shall it be?"

"In this room tomorrow night?" she suggested.

"Can't you come to me on the terrace again?" he proposed, quite unwilling to expose her to the scandal which must arise if they were found alone in this chamber in the small hours of the night.

"We would not be interrupted or in any way disturbed here," she said, her clear eyes so innocent of any impropriety in her proposal that he would no more have suggested it to her than he would have offered poison to a babe.

"You know," she added, "they all have great fear of this part of the house. On the terrace we might be seen. Abe"—

She stopped short as though to ward off an anathema upon Abe.

But Kinross realized that perhaps she was right. They ran little or no risk of interruption in this room.

"Let us meet here, then, tomorrow night, and I will tell you what I can."

He was conscious of the fact that in the course of their talk she had seemed to him like one roused out of a long torpor, like a drooping wild flower reviving under a soft rain.

"Do you know, Eunice, it isn't true—what you told me the other night—that you 'have no education.' You have read and, I have reason to believe, assimilated the best of English letters."

"You call me educated?" she asked, with interest.

"Technically an educated person is no doubt one who knows the multiplication tables. I am not sure that you do."

She shook her head sadly. "No," she humbly acknowledged. "And I can't spell either."

"Your education is dreadfully one sided," he said, smiling. "But take comfort. This is the day for specialties. I believe that your knowledge of English at least is rather thorough."

"Would it serve me in supporting myself?" she eagerly asked.

"Surely. The wonder to me is that you have not through some occult process learned to read those Balzacs."

She looked at him doubtfully.

"You never even glanced into them?"

"Long ago I used to take one down occasionally and wish I could read it."

Had it been fortunate or unfortunate for her, he wondered, that she had missed this "confession" in his pocket? That remained to be seen, and he was eager to be alone in his room to read it. He felt a reluctance to bringing this interesting tete-a-tete to an end, but he must without delay be alone to read the secret in his pocket. He rose from his chair.

"It's getting awfully late, Eunice. I'd better go now. We will meet here tomorrow night then? At what time?"

"I can come as soon as Ollie falls asleep. She was restless tonight, and it made me late. She is usually quiet by half past 8 at the latest."

"I shall be waiting for you here at that time. And now I think you'd better get some rest and not stop here to read."

He held out his hand to her. "Good night."

Without rising from the bed she laid her slim fingers in his, and he clasped them for an instant as he looked down into her eyes upraised to his. There was something in her passionate gaze, "pure as very fire," which set his own pulse to bounding and which made him feel for the first time in her presence the full force of a fascinating personality, the charm of a most sweet womanhood.

He clasped her hand almost fiercely, then turned away abruptly and went from the room.

CHAPTER XVI.

SEATED on the side of his bed, his lamp burning on the bureau at his elbow, Dr. Kinross, in the small hours of the morning, read the paper he had found in the haunted room.

Both the wording of it and the penmanship gave evidence that the writer was a person of some education, though at times her phraseology was stilted, bookish and even a little melodramatic.

The child, Eunice, is not ours. For the sake of the moneyed reward which we knew would undoubtedly be offered for her recovery by her wealthy father we stole her away from her home. Her mother died at her birth, and I, being a trained nurse, was employed by the father to come into the house and take entire charge of the baby. When she was a year old I secretly married her father's secretary, whose learning and brilliant talents attracted me almost to the point of hypnotizing me, and together we hatched the scheme of stealing the child as a means of extracting money from the father. But an unforeseen event thwarted our well laid plan. On the very night of our flight with the child her father was killed in a railroad accident. Somehow the story got out that he had his child with him, and the mutilated body of a year-old girl was actually found in the wreck and identified as Eunice by some of the servants of the household. In this turn of affairs his entire large fortune went to the half sister of Eunice's father, a single woman of about thirty who lived alone in Washington.

We wrote to her and told her what we had done and offered to give up the child for a certain sum, but whether she didn't believe us or whether it served her purpose better not to have the child recovered I do not know. We have never had any answer to our repeated communications to her. It is now four months since we came away with the child, and we have accomplished nothing.

We are living here incognito on this out of the way Pennsylvania farm.

It is my wish to take Eunice to her aunt. The lady has seen the child several times in her visits of a few days each to her brother's home in New York, and of course she would remember me as her caretaker. She always seemed very fond of Eunice, who is her namesake. I do not believe she would deliberately do her the wrong of keeping her out of her inheritance. If I do not soon take Eunice to her the child will have changed past recognition. I cannot longer endure the burden of the crime I have committed. I must make amends. But my husband will not let me expose us both to the risk of punishment, and he still hopes to make profit out of the child. He says he will murder me before he will let me confess our crime. I never would have done this wrong of myself. I have been led into it through my insane passion for this diabolically clever and conscienceless man. Tonight must decide my fate. I shall either depart for Washington with the child or else I shall die either by my own hand or that of my husband. I leave this confession, which I trust will escape my husband's eye and fall into the hands of honest people.

I shall now write here every fact which may serve to restore Eunice to her rights. The sum of $4,000 which I took from my employer's desk the night I fled will be found pinned to the child's clothing, to be used in paying the expenses which may be involved in restoring her to her aunt or, in case of failure to prove her identity, to support her until she is able to take care of herself.

"Four thousand dollars!" mused Kinross, his face pale with the excitement of the story. "The yearly interest of that sum would have more than paid the girl's board in this meager household. And they have made a slave of her, not even allowing her to go to the public school!"

He felt a ghoulish glee in the thought of confronting old Morningstar with his discovery.

He read on:

The father of the child was the late S. S. Wolcott, Esq., of the New York city bar. His half sister is Miss Eunice Wolcott of —— avenue, Washington.

Miss Wolcott can identify the child by the two tiny moles on her neck just under her left ear, for I once heard her say when she had the baby on her lap that Mr. Wolcott had two moles in exactly the same spot.

The little necklace and locket which will be found on the child were given her by Miss Wolcott and contain her photograph and the child's.

I solemnly affirm that what I have here written is true.

BEATRICE DANIELS.

A date twenty years back was affixed to the paper.

Kinross' heart thumped in his breast, and he sat transfixed as the hand which held the paper fell to his knees.

Seated on the side of his bed.

Eunice was the niece of Miss Eunice Wolcott, whom he had known all his life. They had lived neighbors in the city of Washington. Eunice a Wolcott! Incredible! The foster child of the Morningstars a Wolcott, than whom a prouder race had never developed out of that boat load of immigrants that the Mayflower had dumped on Plymouth Rock! Eunice was an heiress if her identity could be proved, and Miss Wolcott would own her. He suddenly saw, with clearness, the plight of Miss Wolcott in this discovery of her niece, and a cold fear crept over him that there might be some difficulty in restoring to Eunice her inheritance. It would have been difficult enough if it had been attempted at the time this confession was made. But after all these years? He had been a youth of eighteen when Miss Wolcott had come into her fortune, and he remembered well how it had changed her mode of living from a style of modest dignity to a luxurious elegance. How, after all these years of lavishness, could she go back to a simple habit of life? And then the hurt to her pride of race (which in the absence of anything more substantial to be proud of she had nourished and brooded upon almost morbidly) to have to own kinship with a girl reared in such a sordid environment as that of this farm, with less knowledge of the world than any servant of her establishment. He had a tiresome memory of Miss Wolcott's motherly warnings to himself in his callow youth against "dragging in the mire" his fine old family name by his lamentable lack of that "exclusiveness" which, she assured him, had characterized his mother of blessed memory and both his paternal and maternal grandmothers. It was on the occasion of his having brought home from college for the holidays that splendid fellow, John Lowry, a diamond in the rough, and in his pride in Lowry's friendship having taken him to call on Miss Wolcott, who, with her literary tastes and extensive travel, he was sure would appreciate his brilliant college mate, instead of which he had brought on himself long philosophic homilies upon the duty incumbent upon "the old families" to preserve their exclusiveness and not to admit into their sacred circle any vulgar new element. When, with youthful enthusiasm, he had rebutted her theories as narrow, old fashioned and so forth she had pinned him down to the fundamental question, "Do you or do you not believe in blood, Peter Kinross?"

"I do! The blood that makes true men and women, not the blood that makes snobs!" With which parting shot he had left her, and the coolness between them thereafter had never been overcome.

He remembered his cynical reflection at the time of her brother's death. "She'll think the angels in heaven will feel honored at the arrival of a Wolcott!"

Yet he found himself just now, perhaps, inconsistently patting himself on the head for his perspicacity in having recognized that Eunice was of no common stock.

He himself had no doubt of the truth of the "confession" and of Eunice's identity with the stolen child. But while the moral evidence seemed clear and convincing, would it be sufficient without the legal proof which he recognized was lacking to persuade Miss Wolcott of her duty to give up a fortune after nineteen years' possession of it? Here would be a test of the "good blood" of which she was so proud.

"It would be more than common honesty; it would be heroic. But if she 'takes after' her niece she won't lack the heroism!"

The fact that the communications to Miss Wolcott of Beatrice Daniels, the trained nurse, had been ignored did not promise well for Eunice's case just now.

Kinross threw himself back on his pillow and clasped his hands under his head. No use to undress—he couldn't sleep. The thought of this girl, brought up as a servant to the Morningstars, her marriage to their son opposed because her poverty made her "not good enough fur our Abe," her ignorance of life combined with her knowledge of books making her unique to the point of being pathetic—this young creature to suddenly find herself a great heiress. The speculations which the situation gave rise to drove sleep far from his brain. Would she be good enough for "our Abe" when her story was known? He chuckled when he thought of old Morningstar's earnest endeavors to hang himself, metaphorically speaking, by opposing his son's marriage to a great fortune.

"She may imagine she's in love with that fellow Abe, never having seen any other sort of men, but of course a few months in 'the world' will cure her."

He wondered whether he would do well to tell her at once all that he knew of her or to wait until he had seen Miss Wolcott and learned whether or not there was going to be difficulty about her coming into her own. It would be cruel to raise her hopes before there was some assurance of their being realized. He would do well to put her off when they met tomorrow night in the haunted room with as little as would satisfy her for the time being. He would then communicate at once with Miss Wolcott. If she was spending this summer at her Newport house he would run on to see her immediately. If she were abroad (she frequently spent the summer in Switzerland) he would cable her to return home at once on important financial business.

"A good thing for Eunice that this matter has fallen into my hands," he thought, "one wholly disinterested and with time, inclination and, I flatter myself, skill to work the thing out for her in the best possible way, not merely for the fun of the excitement of the case, though there's that side of it, too, but for the spice that there is in seeing a beastly wrong righted."

He fell to wondering what had become of the husband of "Beatrice Daniels," whether her death had been a suicide or a murder and whether if the man could be found his presence would lend any proof to the "confession."

The oil in his lamp was nearly burned out as he reached this point in his meditations, and he rose, blew out the flickering light and in the dawn of the early morning flung off his clothes.

CHAPTER XVII.

KINROSS rose so late next morning that the early 11 o'clock dinner of the household served for his breakfast.

Miss Ellery and Miss Parks when they took their places were eager to hear of his adventures of the night before.

"Was there anything doing in the haunted room last night?" Daisy eagerly inquired. "And were you game, Pete, or did you cut and run?"

"Och," exclaimed Mrs. Morningstar, aghast, "now you didn't sleep over there, after all, did you? I didn't hear you make any, and you was in your room till (when) we got up a'ready this morning."

"Yes," answered Pete, surreptitiously watching Eunice's face opposite him as he spoke. He observed that Abe, at her side, was nearly dislocating his eyeballs trying to look at her without betraying himself by turning his head. Her habitual manner of utter withdrawal from her surroundings was unchanged today, though he fancied he detected a quivering of her lashes as he spoke.

"You really did have the fine courage to sleep in that room?" Georgiana asked, leaning toward him across the table, with her smile and tone of inviting his confidence.

"I didn't do so very much at sleepin'," he answered.

"Did the spirits keep you awake?" she asked indulgently.

Mrs. Morningstar had dropped her knife on her plate and was staring at him apprehensively, while Mr. Morningstar suspended his onslaught upon his food as he awaited his story. Abe and Ollie also fixed their eyes upon him wonderingly. Eunice was the only one who did not look at him.

"Did you see it, Doc?" Mrs. Morningstar asked breathlessly, evidently forgetting in her anxious interest her objections to Eunice's hearing anything of the story of the room.

"I seen it, yes, ma'am," Peter answered.

"Oh, tell us about it!" cried Daisy. "What did it do? And what did you do?"

"I ast it was it the spook, and it sayed it was. Then I ast it would it set, and it sot. Then I ast would it have a drink, and it sayed it didn't drink. 'A cigarette?' I ast. Didn't smoke, it sayed. Ain't up to date, I tole it. Ladies where thinks anything of theirselfs these days smokes cigarettes, I says."

"Oh, a lady, was it?" exclaimed Daisy. "Did you have a sympathetic time with her? Go on; tell us."

"Want some more?" he inquired amiably. "Well, then, I ast her would she play solitaire with me. Didn't gamble, neither, she says."

"Oh, look here, Peter—skiddoo!" cried Daisy. "Now, stop jollying us and tell us what you did really see—please," she begged. "Were you up against anything? You're so foxy I never know when you are jollying us."

"No use my tellin' you if you don't blee' me," Peter returned, ostentatiously holding a huge slice of bread on his palm and spreading butter all over it.

"I shall sleep there tonight!" Daisy declared. "I'm game! And I'll fix that ghost! I only wish it were a man!" she sighed.

WEDDING BELLS

HANLON—NUGENT.

The Herald of Sharon, Pa., contains the following notice of the wedding of Miss Frances Hanlon, a niece of Mrs. John Hunter, of Otonabee, and who has relatives in this city:

The marriage of Miss Frances Hanlon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hanlon, of East State street, and Attorney James Nugent, of Pittsburg, was a quiet affair, which took place in Sacred Heart Church at 11 o'clock this morning. Rev. Fr. J. H. McAdam performed the ceremony in the presence of a few friends and relatives of the families. The bride, who was attended by Miss Florence Roberts, wore a beautiful gown of white satin and carried a bridal spray of lilies of the valley. Her hat was of white chip and trimmed with white willow plumes. The only jewelry worn by the bride was a pendant, the gift of the groom. The bridesmaid wore an embroidered Swiss and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The hat worn by Miss Roberts was of white, trimmed with a maline bow and pink tarlton roses. The groom was attended by his brother, John Nugent, of Pittsburg. Simplicity marked the decorations of the church, ferns, palms and cut flowers being used. Immediately following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents on East State street. Covers were placed for only the immediate relatives of the families. The young couple left this afternoon on a wedding trip to Boston, New York, Washington and other eastern points, and on their return will be at home to their friends in Pittsburg. The bride is one of the most popular young women of this place and has a wide circle of friends here. The groom is a prominent lawyer in Pittsburg and is also well known here, having visited friends a number of times. Among those present at the nuptials were: Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hanlon, Miss Mary Hanlon and Master Thomas Hanlon Fox, of Erie; Miss Anna Nugent, Mrs. Nugent, mother of the groom, and John Nugent, of Pittsburg.

Sir,—As I was comin' home from a Grit meetin' last night about 1 a.m. or thereabouts I seen the tail of the comet stickin' out and I gave it a pull. A piece broke off and I've got it at the house. If anybody would like to see it let them inquire.

A Close Squeak

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The returns for the last federal general election show that the "independent candidates in the Parliament at Ottawa hold the balance of power. Few people realize this. The straight Laurier ticket was beaten in the whole Dominion by a small majority. If this state of things is not improved Sir Wilfrid and his men realize it is all up with the Liberal party and they are about right. It will be all up with them. Hurrah for Borden!

PETERBORO SHOWS ITS RESPECTS TO KING'S MEMORY

The day of the funeral of King Edward VII. was fittingly observed in Peterborough. The stores were closed as a token of respect to the beloved King's memory, and many of them were draped in mourning. Flags were hung at half mast and the picture shows suspended business until three o'clock this afternoon.

The manufacturing concerns which did not observe the day by closing down, ceased operations for five minutes at ten o'clock.

In the three Anglican churches memorial services were held, and the public assembled in large numbers at the union memorial service at the armories.

The 57th Regiment will parade at the armories at 6 o'clock this evening. Sixty-eight minute guns will be fired in royal salute at the Driving Park at 6.23.

PETERBORO' LOYALLY OBSERVED DAY OF THE KING'S FUNERAL

Armouries Would Not Accomodate the Crowd That Congregated for the Solemn and Impressive Memorial Service---Eloquent and Sincere Addresses in Eulogy of the Departed Peacemaker---Resolution of Sorrow at the Empire's Loss.

An event which will go down as a memorable and impressive one in the history of this city was the memorial service, held at the armories this morning, as an evidence of the deep sorrow which is felt by the citizens of Peterborough in the death of King Edward VII. The attendance was eloquent in itself, and the thirty-five hundred people assembled maintained a spirit in keeping with the occasion. Over twenty-one hundred comfortable chairs had been placed in the armories and these were all occupied. Both galleries were filled, and the entrances and doorways of the armories were taken up by many people. Shortly after ten o'clock the band left the city hall and headed a procession in which the members of the City Council and other civic officials marched. The members of the Board of Education joined in the procession at Brock street.

The east gallery of the armories was the point from which the devotional exercises of the service were held, and the addresses by Rev. Mr. Potter and Rev. Mr. Trumpour were delivered. Rev. E. A. Pearson, president of the Ministerial Association, was in charge, and others on the gallery were, Rev. J. G. Potter, Rev. H. R. Trumpour, Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. G. W. Henderson, Rev. C. H. Coon, Rev. W. C. Riddiford, Rev. R. Pogue, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt and His Worship Mayor Morrow and Mr. T. F. Matthews.

The service was commenced with the playing of the Dead March in Saul by the band, under the direction of Mr. Gliddon, and at its conclusion Rev. Robert Pogue led in the invocation, the gathering joining in the Lord's prayer. A hymn was next sung and this was followed by a scripture reading, Psalm XLV., by the Rev. J. R. Webb. Prayer was next offered up by Rev. G. W. Henderson and another hymn was heartily sung. Rev. Mr. Potter was next called upon for an address and the reverend gentleman responded in a manner that must have touched the hearts of his immense audience.

THE ADDRESS.

Fellow Citizens and Fellow Countrymen,

It is with a profound sense of responsibility and honor that I seek to carry out the wishes of my ministerial brethren in addressing such a large number of the citizens of Peterborough on this most solemn occasion. I will confine my remarks to the national side of the life of our late beloved King and the Rev. Mr. Trumpour will follow with some refernce to the late King's life as the first gentlemen of the realm. What I have to say falls naturally along four lines.

1. The King in his relation to his own nation.

2. The King in his relation to other nations.

3. The King in his relation to the higher and more extensive Kingdom, whose interests he sought to further.

4. Our duty to the King.

Brittania weeps to-day for her King has been laid in the tomb. The greatest Empire in all the world mourns the death of a noble and illustrious Sovereign—the devoted princely son of the best loved Queen the world has ever known.

From his early days he took a deep interest in everything that would help him in the devlopment of all parts of the British Dominions.

As early as nineteen years of age he was sent to British America and at that time, 1859, presented to the Royal Canadian Regiment new regimental colors, and in his speech on that occasion referred to the fact that they were seeking to unite the different parts of the Empire under the one great Sovereign. In 1860 he opened the Victoria Bridge which has since become a utility of international importance.

When King Edward VII. ascended the throne he plighted his faith that he would strive to follow in all things the example of his illustrious mother. He proved himself true to his promise and in his great work for the peace of the world has rightly won him the most distinct title of "The Peace Maker," the most honored of all titles by universal consent.

When King Edward came here as Prince of Wales, Canada was far behind the position she occupies to-day. There was no cable uniting us with Great Britain: there was no railway linking any two Provinces of Canada, except Quebec and Ontario; no bridge anywhere across the St. Lawrence, and no Parliament at Ottawa. We were very far behind in many ways; but Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales, as well as Tennyson, and Forster, and imperialists like Lord Rosebery and Lord Palmerston and Joseph Howe and others, had in their hearts and minds the ideal of a united and invincible Empire. King Edward caught this noble thought and he and his family have lived up to it.

In this connection it will not be out of place to rehearse the noble words of King George V. before the assembly of the British counsellors;

King George in addressing the assembly of the Privy Counsellors said;

"I have lost not only a father's love, but the affectionate and intimate relations of a dear friend and adviser. No less confident am I in the universal loving sympathy which is assured to my dearest mother in her overwhelming grief.

"Standing here a little more than nine years ago, our beloved King declared that as long as there was breath in his body he would work for the good and the amelioration of his people. I am sure the opinion of the the whole nation will be that this declaration has been fully carried out.

"To endeavor to follow in his footsteps, and at the same time, to uphold the constitutional government of these realms, will be the earnest object of my life. I am deeply sensible of the very heavy responsibilities which have fallen upon me. I know that I can rely upon Parliament and upon the people of these islands and of my Dominions beyond the sea for their help in the discharge of these arduous duties and for their prayers that God will grant me strength and guidance. I am encouraged by the knowledge that I have in my dear wife one who will be a constant helpmate in every endeavor for our peoples' good."

One great lesson that as Britishers we must learn: The King always reigns. It is a continuous realm in that sense. The King never dies. The King is dead. Long live the King. Personalities change, Albert the Good, Victoria the Best, Edward the Peacemaker. Through all these years the British Empire has passed through many grave crisis; it has passed through many severe storms; has seen very perilous days; has made most precious sacrifices; has exhibited the greatest courage; has wrestled on the battle field, and by the devotion and heroism of Sovereigns, leaders, legislators and people our nation has triumphed over all forms of difficulty and danger.

Great as were his personal power, influence and popularity in his own nation, the entire world of nations has yielded up its testimony to his superior skill in guiding the affairs abroad.

Related to almost every European court, he seemed to express, by his attitude to all other rulers, the principles of the golden rule, and was always exercising his wonderful gifts and talents in securing for others the security he himself enjoyed. His friendly relations with France saved many misunderstandings, and the time spent by him at the various European courts tender always to allay any suspicious of selfish motives and at the same time developed a very strong friendship between the nations. His ready command of so many languages made him an ever welcome visitor with the populace or the palace in foreign countries.

From his earliest days, as Prince of Wales, he took a personal interest in the life and growth of the United States, and his frequent visits are all noted with marked joy and delight on the part of the American people.

In King Edward's deep interest in the highest things for which his Kingdom stood, one is made to feel what a blessed touch is the touch of the King. Dr. Barnardo's Homes tell us that these were the objects of his love. Dr. Barclay, of Montreal, urges as a memorial to the late King the erection of an institute for the blind, for he took an interest in all these unfortunates. His deep concern about the housing of the poor won for him the admiration of the whole nation. The Church Missionary Society claim him as a friend; the Bible Society esteem him for his devotion; the sailors considered him their friend; the soldiers held him in honor; the veterans praised him for his mother's sake. He must have loved the highest things to a large extent when his life revealed such a heart of love. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

One is reminded of the story told in the life of Queen Victoria, how that in the rendition of the oratorio "The Messiah," her late Majesty and the members of the royal house present, bowed in deep reverence in the reference made to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

The ideal of the nation and the duty of the nation will be in carrying out the spirit that actuated the Sovereign. No boastful aggressivement, but a strong, gracious, universal influence for good to all nations.

A nation is not made good by the bigness of its territory or by its extensive commercial importance, or by its great parties, or by its gold and silver mines, or by its great lakes and rivers, or by its magnificant churches, or its infinite ecclesiastical forces. While all these contribute to a nation's wealth and influence, these perish and pass away. But the throne of a great kingdom endures insofar as it comes into living and active contact with the spirit and life established for nations by the King eternal. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

This is an age when the real loyalty of a devoted people will be: "Ich dien,"—I serve.

In conclusion, if we wish the best for our new King, we must be willing for the removal of every barrier that will hinder the complete unification of all parts of His Majesty's subjects from whom we expect loving loyalty and devotion.

We must have confidence in each other. Let all classes of citizens in the vast Empire do all in their power to obliterate everything that has caused distrust, disturbance and disquiet and hurt Christian cordiality and with Christian cordiality, and with faces toward a future of growing splendor for a Christian nation, fulfil what we know to be the will of the King Eternal.

After the conclusion of Rev. Mr. Potter's address, the late King's favorite hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee," was sung and an offering taken up. Rev. Mr. Trumpour's address then followed.

REV. MR. TRUMPOUR.

Rev. Mr. Trumpour, M. A., B. D., Rector of All Saints' church, addressed the congregation as follows;

Ages ago the writer of the Wisdom Literature wrote of such occasions as this; "Let us praise famous men and our fathers that beget us.......... Such as did bear rule in their kingdoms, and were men renowned for their power, giving counsel by their understanding; leaders of the people by their counsels and by their understanding men of learning for the people." Such was the beloved monarch who has gone forever.

And I would call you from the eloquent, loftier tribute to the illustrious Prince, to the lowlier and yet most sacred theme of the man whom we have lost. For in Edward VII. the man appears above the King—only he wore the robes of a King over the heart of a man. For, while his reverered Majesty was first of the kings of earth, he was first also among the men of an empire, whose men own no superiors in the world.

Not upon the character of him who wears the crown does our loyalty as British subjects to the Crown of Britain rest, we will be loyal no matter who is King, but when the King has all the qualities of manhood's heart and head, as King Edward had, loyalty is intensified; our hearts are proud, and in the hour of death we mourn as though a friend had gone.

Nor is it in the hour of death alone we thought upon this manhood of our King: we do not need to enter that chamber with its strong master for the third and last time, wrestling with the sable messenger of God, with its mistress' broken heart weeping tears of widowed love, and a man of God, reading the last prayers of comfort for the living and commendation for the dying—with its last brief word and sinking into sleep, to feel our King was one of us; but in all the life that Edward lived in his too swift passing reign, the man stood above the king, and we felt the royal heart beating in unison with and for the common heart in all the realms.

And, while we are proud of him as a King, and our proud Empire's pride in its monarch, but adds to his royal lustre—we are not less proud of him for the man our King has been! For the fierce light that beats upon the throne has failed in these nine years to illuminate in him we mourn ought but the truest qualities. He has passed through the scathing fires of royal temptation, and emerged most kingly and most manly. He has done more than that; for he has shown Britons, in a pleasure-loving age that a King thinks first of duty in a self-seeking age, that a King thinks first of service for the sake of man.

And this is why, in our materialistic age, the moral and spiritual and humanitarian forces in our Empire throb with ever newer and richer blood. Carlyle, it is, who says the history of the world is the history of its greatest men, while Maculay says the real history of a nation is the noiseless movements and tendencies of all branches of the nation's life. These both have met in Edward the greatest figure of his time. His bare heart came into contact with the spirit of his time, and safeguarded it in proper channels; for not less than his blessing to the world by his labors in peace is conspicuous in the advance in the forces of righteousness in the empire the influence of a King, who kept his court no less pure than the spotless purity of Victoria the Good, whose philanthrophies for the poor and the suffering were personal in their activity, whose busy life, with all its varied demands, gave every respect to the religious observance of his faith, who set his face against the impure in speech, and with a courage truly royal, denounced gambling and intemperance as the greatest curses of a people.

This is, indeed, a day of mourning. For the richest possession of earth is not its wealth of gold but its worth of men. This we have lost in Edward VII; for all admit he was not prince alone by birth, but a prince of men by nature, one for whose passing the world is poorer. And so, to-day, the Empire and the Nation's, as well, are the vast world-wide choir singing the praises of his work, and chanting dirges of true sorrow. We assembled here are but one unit of that choir, and this day's tribute the last note of a composition many years in the making, and many days in the rendering.

But proud as we are, and mourn as we do for the man who has been King, we are yet most proud and mourn the more for the quality of greatness his personality enshrined. You have been told before how he had his victories of peace, no less than Wellington and Nelson theirs of war. But it is not the greatness of achievement whereof I now speak, for the greatness that achieves by dint of force and tact and command of men is only the greatness of the world. He had all that, but he had more. His was the greatness of unselfishness and the greatness of sincerity.

On the side of unselfishness we have heard of his unwritten victories of peace. This was his destiny, because he could bear such training. His sixty years of life, overshadowed by his royal mother, meant forty years of apprenticeship to do his nine years' work. He had the same ambitions, and he had the same wondrous personality as Prince of Wales that we have learned he had as King, but with the same unselfishness as that with which he gave himself as King, unwearied to the duties of the state, he gave in self-effacement these gifts unknown and unthanked to the service of the Queen.

And then the greatness of sincerity. His countenance, his daily life, the record of his reign all told of a heart that was sincere. Tact, he had, unmeasured in degree, in diplomacy, he had no peer; but these were not acquired for the moment to gain a point, or to maintain a place; they were natural and native to a heart whose aim and motive was the prosperity, security and happiness of his people, for the prosperity, security and happiness of the British Empire demands the larger liberty and prosperity of the world. His people saw this soon—and so, although he stopper the ravenous encroachments democracy made upon Victoria's crown, although he restored the medieval splendor of royalty lacking in Victoria's reign, his people saw the sincerity of his loyalty to their constitution, that all he did for the Crown more than his wondrous grasp of was for its greater service to the state, and they pinned their faith to him more than to any man or group of men. Europe saw this, too, and

SCHOOL LEAGUE GAMES

The scorer had a busy time at the South Central-King Edward Junior School League game, played at the King Edward grounds yesterday afternoon. The score was 20—8, with the King Edwards on the big end. While the fielding on the whole was not up to the mark there were, nevertheless, several fast plays, and the contest was featured by a triple play, pulled off by the King Edwards.

Wise twirled a nice game for the winners and was steady in the pinches. Bennett on the firing line for the South Centrals, had a hard time in locating the plate, and his charities placed him in a bad hole several times. He received poor support throughout.

The teams were—

King Edward—Taylor, c; Frost, Eakins, Jackson, Campbell, Wilder, Wise, p; Liddell, Doughty.

South Centrals—Smyth, ss; Reid, cf; Jabbitt, lf; Brown, c; Clark, 1b; Bennett, p; Moore, 3b; Patterson, rf; Stuart, 2b.

Score by innings—

King Edward	7 6 1 6 0 0 x—20
South Centrals	0 4 0 3 1 0 0—8

CITY LEAGUE OPENING TO-MORROW RIVEPSIDE

With fine weather for to-morrow the opening of the City Baseball League promises to be a memorable one. Never before has so much interest been shown by players and fans alike, and one of the largest crowds that ever attended Riverside Park is looked for.

Particularly during this week the four clubs have been hard at work getting a lineup in shape, and the four teams which take the field will be much stronger than was the case last season. Both games will be interesting and hard fought, and judging from the form shown by the twirlers and infielders, the ball will be tossed in a classy manner. Light batting may be looked for to-morrow as the clubs have been too busy weeding out basemen and garden men.

The parade of players from Simcoe street is called for 1.30, and it will be headed by an automobile containing those taking part in the opening ceremonies at the grounds.

West Ends and T.A.S. play the first game, with the P.A.C. and Strathconas clashing in the second.

The admission for gentlemen is 15 cents. Boys will be charged 5 cents, but the ladies will be admitted free. The Grounds Company feel that the fans should make use of the grandstand, and have instructed the league to make it known. For admission to the stand a small fee of 5 cents will be charged.

The lineups of the West Ends and Strathconas are as follows:

WEST ENDS.

Rose, Kirn, Cresswell, Dobson, Laing, Heaslep, Geal, Minorgan, Brydie, Guerin, Dickey and Gibson.

STRATHCONAS.

Macafee, Hickey, Leitch, F. Craig, Matheston, Kendrey, Abbott, V. Craig, Curtis, Shaw.

Peterboro' Loyally Observed Day of King's Funeral

human nature, his sincerity opened every cabinet of suspicion, convinced his foes, he sought no gain for self that meant unjust loss for others, and made him strong to lead the nations of the world to give humanity at large the liberty and happiness God meant for them.

One would fain dwell on the noble character taken from the world today. One would fain lay at length the affections of the people as a tribute on his bier. We must leave all this unsaid, but there is one thing we may never leave unsaid: The example of loyalty and obedience to England's traditions of duty. England's history has given this call and set the example to every son of the Empire, till God Himself shall give it in a higher and a better world. The signal on the masthead of Nelson's victory is only the outward and visible sign of the writing on every heart that has lived and has bled for England and the Empire. And we are glad the King's life has given us the call again, and those dying words—spoken amid all the confusion of death and the distractions of the death of royalty—those dying words: "It is all over, but I think I have done my duty," show that duty was the King's real subconscious life.

How well he did that duty in the political life of the Empire, the world I shall not repeat. This were achievement great enough for any man but Edward VII. did a duty larger than that. Yes, his sympathies had no limit, his person seemed well night ubiquitous, his influence reached to the remotest recesses of his Empire's life. And as he lived so he died—literally harnessed to duty. What else means the presence of Winston Churchill in the palace when death was also climbing the palace stairs? Yes, only when the King saw the Dark Messenger of God put his hand upon the latch of the royal apartment did he snatch time from his work to do his duty to the King of Kings, and as he gave his life to the Empire's people now gave his life to God.

It would take long to tell how hard he labored to touch all left of his people, how he answered the calls from the realms of education, industry and labor, sport by land or sea, agriculture and society, the industrial development and material upbuilding in every municipality of Britain, the army and navy, philanthropy, and hospital and moral reform, State and Church, science and learning. King Edward did more than his duty to his people by his almost superhuman energies to touch all their life.

And yet no duty he did lays his people under heaveir debt to him than his life within his palace—or may we say of him within his home. It is not only that his court was pure, but the royal home was a true home. It was not a union of royal entities with their own strifes of tongues; its relationships of love and friendship are a crown fitly resting upon, and an example shining forth to the home life, which linked with religion, is the pillar and strength of British civilization. Edward's highest, truest duty was his duty to his home.

This comes to us with its sadder and its brigher message to-day. The sadder message, for true love has been severed and a queen weeps with a broken heart to-day. O Alexandra! there is one heart in all this Empire, and that heart to-day with thine is sore. O God! grant that as her sorrow is royal so is her comfort and consolation may be royal, too. The brighter message, for amid an Empire's fears a son succeeds who in the family circle was the companion and confidant of his father, and we may be assured that George V., to whom the mantle of monarchy has fallen, has by that father been trained and counselled for all the duties of the ship of state. We would be loyal to those whoever wears the Crown, but because George V. is the son of Edward's home our hearts rise high in the hope that we cannot but be as loyal to him as to the crown he wears. God Save the King.

Yes, Edward VII. ere he fell to sleep served his generation and did his duty. How could he else have done! Son of Victoria and Albert, one of the first influences on his life was that Iron Duke, of whom Tennyson wrote:

"The path of duty was the way to glory."

May we at Edward's obsequies read these lines of Edward, who as a boy wept at Wellington's obsequies, for which they were written:

"The path of duty is the way to glory;
He, that ever following her commands,
On with toil of heart and knees and hands
This the long gaze to the far light has won
His path upward and prevailed,
Shall find the toppling crags of duty scaled
Are close upon the shining table lands
To which our Lord Himself is moon and sun,
Such was he; his work is done."

Rev. Mr. Pearson announced the singing of the National Anthem as the next order of the service and after it had been heartily sung he called upon his Worship Mayor Morrow, who moved the following resolution:

That whereas in the inscrutable wisdom of Almighty God our late lamented King, Edward VII., has been called into the eternal world and whereas his son George V. has been called upon to assume the honorable and responsible position of Sovereign of the British Empire be it resolved.

That we the citizens of Peterborough, Ontario, assembled for Divine worship at the hour of the royal funeral do express our profound sorrow that the one who has so nobly reigned over us is no more with his people.

That we assure the Quen Mother and Royal family of our sincere sympathy and

That we declare oursives as prepared to render not only the loyalty of subjects but the love of sons to our present Sovereign, Gorge V.

The resolution was secondd by Mr. T. E. Matthews and the gathering showed themselvs to be in favor of it by rising and remaining so with bowed heads for a moment.

Rev. Canon Davidson was next called upon to pronounce the bendiction and this was followed by Chopin's funeral march by the band. The next and last number was "The Last Post" by the Bugle Band.

NORWOOD'S FOURTH FIRE WITHIN A FEW WEEKS

Special to the Review.

Norwood, May 20.—The fire of this morning which threatened to do much destruction to property in the centre of the town was fortunately through the exertion of the citizens with two hand fire engines confined to the building in which it originated. A bard belonging to James Raffon and an old stable adjoining the Methodist church sheds were considerably damaged. A horse of Mr. Raddon's valued at two hundred dollars perished in the flames. The loss is about one thousand dollars, insurance three hundred dollars. This makes four fires in about as many weeks. Incendiarism is suspected.

HOW LIKE HIS FATHER PEOPLE SAY OF KING GEORGE

Growing Popularity of the New King Who is Performing All the Duties of His High Office Most Satisfactorily.

London, May 19.—King George's rapidly growing reputation is perhaps the most remarkable development of the hour in England. Less than two weeks ago His Majesty, so far as the popular mind was concerned, was a shadowy personality. To be sure, his life had not been wanting in activity; he had made a number of public appearances, and had even made a few effective speeches to the nation, but King Edward and Queen Alexandra filled the royal stage. Both were popular and tireless in the service of the people, and the heir to the Throne spent much of his time in comparative seclusion where he read and studied a great deal, and became known among his intimate friends as the most serious and most intellectual member of the Royal family.

When King Edward died his son stepped into the fierce light, and since then the eyes of the people have been upon him. They have assembled by hundreds of thousands to watch him go to and fro in the streets and through the windows of his carriage they have observed his bowed head and sad, sympathetic face.

"HOW LIKE HIS FATHER," PEOPLE SAY.

From the first the King has attended to the arrangements for Edward's lying-in-state and funeral, the lines of march and the allotment of places in the procession. At the same time he has kept the interests of the public in mind, issuing statements affecting the theatres, the question of mourning, and the Whitsuntide holidays, and sending all the letters and telegrams demanded from the Crown, including one of sympathy for the bereaved families of the miners sealed up in a fiery tomb under the Irish sea.

Thus the King is impressing himself swiftly and deeply on the popular imagination. "How like his father!" is a frequent exclamation. The resemblance to the dead King seen in the look and manner of George V., is still more striking in the tender and happy quality of his spoken and written words. The rapidity with which the King is winning the people is a source of the deepest gratification to those in positions of political responsibility.

AS A FACTOR IN THE STATE.

Before the loss of King Edward's powerful and pacific character, statesmen and politicians suddenly stood aghast, and over the brawling forum of politics fell a dramatic hush. Politicians feared that without their head, the long and bitter domestic strife might result in a danger to England for transcending any foreign menace. While this hush continues, amid the mournful and splendid events attending the gathering to rulers, princes and statesmen to honor the memory of Edward, King George's character assumes consistency and his prestige grows, and British public men hope that by the time the conflict between the Lords and the Commons again becomes critical the new King will have gone some way toward making himself an adequate substitute for his father as a factor in the State.

ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE WALL

The Secret That Disclosed Itself to Miss Hargraves.

By VIRGINIA LEILA WENTZ.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

When Miss Hargraves had driven home in her brougham from the art exhibit she was utterly weary. She asked her nurse, Miss Brown, to telephone for Dr. Imbrie.

"Pulse quite regular, temperature normal," remarked Dr. Imbrie dryly. It was an hour later, and he had made the required examination. "My dear lady," he added briskly, pulling on his left hand glove, "as I told you at the time of my last visit, you no longer require my professional services. Miss Brown is remaining more as companion than as nurse. What you need"—

"Yes, yes," interposed Miss Hargraves with an eager upward inflection; "what I need"— —"is to get out of yourself."

"Ah, that's precisely what I tried to do directly after luncheon when I drove down to the art exhibit." Here she mentioned some well known galleries. "Do you know they have a really wonderful collection there and unusually well hung?"

THE GIRL STOOD BEFORE AN EASEL.

"Half as many pictures would have hung easier, and a good score of those already hung could be spared," returned Imbrie brusquely.

"So you have seen the collection?" In her interest Miss Hargraves had risen on one elbow, allowing the point lace to fall away prettily from her forearm. Here was a pretext to spin out the interview. Oh, luck! "What did you think of 'Driving the Cows to Pasture' by Mauve? They say it has a money value of $3,000. Of course it's finely executed, but"—

"A picture of cows always sells well," vouchsafed Imbrie, "even when not done by an artist of repute. The majority of people take to cows and sheep."

"Well," she laughed frankly, "maybe you like Henner better. He has three portraits"—

"Too much blue in his skin," cut in Imbrie decisively. His keen, inventorying glance hit upon a small painting hung over the cabinet. "That flying figure there, with the misty drapery—a Purvis de Chavannes, isn't it?" nodding with appreciation toward the canvas.

"Yes; his best period," assented the lady, marveling at Imbrie's exhibition of sure artistic knowledge. "I never knew before that you were interested in art."

"No?" He smiled, one of his rare, illuminating smiles, which had all the surprise of a spring day in it. The ticking of the watch in his pocket was distinctly audible. He seemed hovering on the edge of a confidence, then: "I had once hoped to do something in the world of art myself, but the need of immediate financial returns made it impossible."

There was actually a note of sentiment in Imbrie's deep voice. Why, she had supposed him to be as devoid of sentiment and emotion as the granite bowlders of his native state.

"In the last three years," he continued, "how many famous pictures have been exhibited in those same galleries we were speaking of? On only the other side of the wall, where they have hung, perhaps some little woman has been wielding brush and pencil, working, watching, waiting till she, too, shall come to her own. A little money—comparatively very little; a few friends—two, or even one—and the way would have been easier, shorter and surer."

To Miss Hargraves' chagrin the confidential tone vanished almost as quickly as it came. Dr. Imbrie extended his hand. "Good afternoon, Miss Hargraves, and remember that you shall try to get out of yourself and your accustomed environments is my only prescription."

After her physician had gone Miss Hargraves ordered her brougham again and dressed for a later afternoon drive. "No, my dear," she said in answer to a slight remonstrance from Miss Brown; "he said I needed plenty of oxygen."

Presently she bade the coachman drive to her florist's. Selecting dozens of exquisite yellow roses—all he had in his place—she asked for satin ribbon to match the petals. This she tied, with nice deliberation, in a knot peculiarly of her own devising. Handing the florist her card, she gave him Dr. Imbrie's address.

* * * * * * *

The next day Miss Hargraves stopped in the galleries again to have a last look at her favorite among the collection, a translucent, delicate landscape of Corot's. Slowly she made her way about the three small rooms, moving with the throng, which talked loud and learnedly the patois of art.

"On the other side of the wall—on the other side of the wall"— Somehow, as she watched the tiny scarlet cap of the shepherd lad leaning against the tree trunk, that phrase of Imbrie's flashed across her. And the little woman, watching, working, waiting there—who knew? Perhaps, after all, it might not be entirely a hypothetical case? Certainly, in speaking of it, there had come into Imbrie's voice a quality hitherto unsuspected. And if by any possibility she, Harriet Hargraves, might aid this struggling worker, who could tell how it might ingratiate her with—well, how it might serve her purpose? The whim held her.

When the janitor of the adjoining building, whose first floor was let to a tailor and the second to a milliner, informed Miss Hargraves that there was—that there actually was—an artist or something on the top floor, that lady smiled at her own Sherlock Holmes work.

"Yes'm," in response to a low pitched question, "you're likely to find her at home; she's a'most always workin'. Anyhow, you'll be sure to find her mother, who's an invalid and never goes out."

It was the mother, indeed, who opened the door and ushered her visitor into the tiny front studio.

The girl stood before an easel working rapidly, a ragged, picturesque street urchin of the Latin race posing as her model. She was absorbed in her work, and it was more than good. Miss Hargraves came and stood quietly beside her, drawing a long breath and watching with interest the sure, strong touch of the brush.

"There!" cried the girl, allowing her model to relax and turning with a gracious little smile upon her caller. "I beg your pardon." She laid her palette on her color box, and Miss Hargraves saw the dark ring around her thumb where she had held it so long.

She was a slightly built little thing, with an exquisite, orchid-like face of that transparent pallor through which the fire of the spirit burns like a pure flame. She had soft brown hair that waved capriciously, and her wide, earnest eyes were of the deepest gray.

Miss Hargraves dropped her pendent lorgnette, which she had brought to bear upon her young hostess, with a half sigh of satisfaction. Ah, yes; this girl that stood before her in the homely apron was not only an artist, but a lady. So she need not hesitate; she could proceed with her hastily inspired project.

"My dear," she said after the girl had pushed forward a crude green burlap covered chair with the courtesy of a grande dame, "word of your talent reached me—we won't say just how. At this particular moment don't tease me to tell. And it has occurred to me that I might be able to throw a little profitable pleasure your way. You've never been to Italy—no? Well, it would help a lot. Now, I'm going to take a Mediterranean cruise myself next month, and if you'd like"—

Miss Hargraves broke off suddenly and lifted her lorgnette again. It was no word which interrupted her sentence, but a curious, fleeting little smile in the great gray eyes, elusive as a will-o'-the-wisp. Such a smile had played no part in the fancy picture she had drawn.

The girl dropped her black lashes for an appreciable fraction of a second and clasped her slim hands, which lay idly in her lap. Then, with a girlish, pretty gesture, half shy, half proud, she raised the left hand with the right, and, looking at the only ring she wore, a telltale solitaire, she said in a voice whose keynote was spring:

"Italy? That's where we are going, he and I—that is, you see, I'm to be married next month. It's a secret as yet, isn't it, mother? But," turning to her visitor again, "I tell you because I don't want you to think I'm ungrateful for your kind offer. Indeed, it's most awfully sweet and kind. There was a time—not so long ago either—when it would have overcome me with its beauty, when it would have been to me as a miracle, but now this other miracle has come, and everything else— Oh, I never knew before how wonderful life is!"

Miss Hargraves rose shortly.

"Well, I wish you happiness," she said, holding out her gloved hand with languid interest. The girl's sentimental youth jarred on her nerves. "And I'll tell your friend who is interested in the galleries next door that you won't be long 'on the other side of the wall.'"

"Why, yes," laughed the girl, pushing back a rebellious curl; "tell him if you like, since I haven't mentioned my fiance's name. But for the life of me I can't imagine who this good friend is. I have so few friends. Life has been such an uphill"—

But on her way to the door Miss Hargraves had stopped short before a green burlap covered table.

There, in a vase, was a huge bunch of yellow roses—roses tied together with a familiarly devised knot of satin ribbon the color of their petals!

Miss Hargraves' lorgnette dropped clattering down and struck against the burlap cover.

An Interesting Calculation

HERE is an interesting calculation for young housewives or old ones for that matter. A pound of the best bread in the world made from ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR costs less than four cents. A pound of the best beef steak costs 25 to 30 cents. Yet a pound of bread made from ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR contains more working energy than a pound and a half of beef steak. Or three pounds of pork, or two pounds of veal.

Whether figured by the pound or by actual units of health and strength, bread made from

is the most economical food in the world.

Especially is bread made from ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR good for growing children. They can't eat too much of it. For their general healthy growth and development, it furnishes an almost complete food. As a matter of household economy, children ought to be given all the bread they can eat at all times.

Statistics also prove that ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR will sustain life longer than animal food. It is extremely rich in high quality gluten which comes from the best Red Fyfe Wheat—the finest in the world. This large percentage of high quality gluten is what makes ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR so much better than ordinary flour. Red Fyfe Wheat is known the world over for its richness in high quality gluten.

The beautiful white color of ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR is natural. It indicates the richness of the wheat from which it is made.

The one safe rule in buying flour is to get ROYAL HOUSEHOLD, and in that way you will make sure of getting the largest percentage of nourishment and the cleanest, purest and most uniform flour. Best for pastry as well as for bread. Rich, nutritive, natural, most uniform and most satisfactory for all household baking. Insist on ROYAL HOUSEHOLD—your grocer will be glad to furnish it if you tell him that substitutes will not do. 15

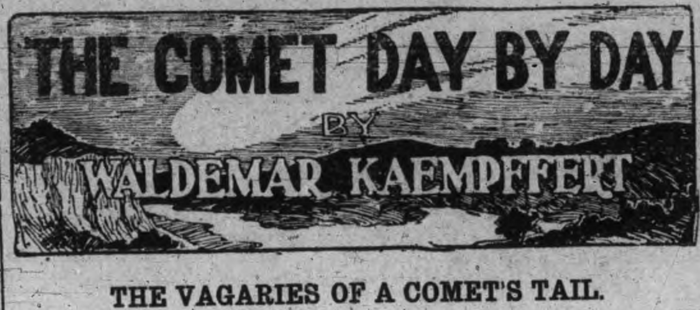
NO EXTENSION OF STREET RAILWAY TO LAKEFIELD

Will be Made This Season—The Closing of the Cement Works Would Have a Depressing Effect on the Freight Traffic—Road Would Only Pay for Short Period Says Mr. Larmonth.

Although it has been rumored that the Peterborough Radial Railway Company would extend its line to Lakefield this year to make connections with Stoney Lake, Mr. J. H. Larmonth, the manager of the company says no extensions will be made this year. The Cement Company having closed in Lakefield, the freight traffic on the road would be very light, and it was in connection with the Cement Company's requirements that the largest freight traffic was expected.

The passenger traffic on the road would be very heavy during the summer months, but outside of that period it would not pay to operate the line, he said.



THE VAGARIES OF A COMET'S TAIL.

To-day the comet is only 14,300,000 miles away, nearer to us than any heavenly body ever comes, except the little planetoid Eros, which on rare occasions comes within 13,500,000 miles of us. Look for the comet in the western sky after sunset.

A comet is first seen as a hazy patch of light, frequently without any appendage. As it speeds toward the sun it throws out first jets or streamers, and eventually a luminous tail, which increases in length and brightness as the sun is approached which trails behind like the smoke of a steamer. When the comet whirls around the sun (its peribelion passage, as astronomers call it) which occurred with Halley's comet on April 20th, something very amazing happens. The tail no longer floats behind, but actually precedes the head, just as if a mighty wind were blowing it from the sun. By all the laws of gravitation it should always point toward the sun. Yet some strange solar force more powerful even than gravitation, must repel it from the sun. Only within our own time have more or less satisfactory theories been advanced to account for this anomaly. An undreamed of source of power has been discovered to which we may attribute at least some of the vagaries of a comet's tail, a power which is nothing less than the pressure of light.

It is rather startling to learn at this late day that the sunbeams which play upon the green grass and blue water are actually pressing the earth. Yet that pressure has been so accurately measured that we now know that the earth sustains a light-load of one hundred and fifty thousand tons. Why is it that we do not see objects pushed into space by the solar effulgence? Simply because light pressure acts not so much on masses as on surfaces. Divide a ball of lead weighing one pound into one thousand little balls. The total weight remains the same, but the surface has been increased. Divide each little ball again into a thousand little balls. The resulting one million balls still weight one pound, but the surface has been enormously augmented. Carry this sub-division so far that leaden particles are obtained measuring one-twenty thousandths of an inch in diameter each. Every one of these particles, if placed in instellar space, would remain stationary, because its weight (gravitation) would exactly counterbalance the light pressure of the sun. If sub-division be carried beyond that critical diameter, light pressure will wrench each particle from the grip of solar gravitation and hurl it into space.

As the comet approaches the sun, the matter composing the head boils up with volcanic fury. That matter is composed of hydro-carbons (compounds of hydrogen and carbon). The particles into which these hydro-carbons are resolved are smaller than the critical diameter. Hence they are flung away from the sun by the pressure of light.

Like every force light pressure has its limitations. A thirteen inch gun can fire a projectile so far and no farther. Light pressure can explain the ejection of tails which are repelled by the sun with an energy not exceeding twenty times the force of gravitation. In order to explain the occurrence of tails which are flung away with a force that may be as much as forty times more powerful than gravitation, we must rely on the tremendous electrical repulsion of the sun.

The photographic plate in the hands of Prof. E. E. Barnard of Yerkes Observatory, has revealed some extraordinary changes in comet's tails, changes which are not apparent to the eye and which cannot be explained by light pressure or by solar electrical forces. He has collected a formidable mass of photographic evidence which seems to show that there are other influences at work besides the sun's radiation, and that these influences manifest themselves in distorting and breaking a comet's tail. In some comets of recent years, streams of water have been shot in large angles to the main direction of the tail without being at all bent by the pressure of light. In Morehouse's comet of 1903 tails were repeatedly formed and discarded to drift bodily out into space and float away. Sometimes the photographic plate has shown the tail twisted like a corkscrew, and sometimes it has revealed masses of matter at some distance from the head, where apparently no supply has reached it. At one time the entire tail of Morehouse's comet was thrown violently forward, a peculiarity so utterly opposed to the laws of gravitation that Prof. Barnard suspects some unknown force at work in planetary space besides a force which undoubtedly resides in the comet itself.

Halley's comet has already betrayed a similar whimsical character. On February 27th, Prof. Barnard found that its tail was fifteen million miles long. On April 15th, when it was visible before dawn in the East through field glasses it had no tail at all. The return of Halley's comet is therefore to be welcomed if for no other reason than that it will probably afford a splendid opportunity for studying the manner in which a comet changes tails.

PERMISSION GRANTED TO BUILD A NEW SPUR LINE

Across the Foot of Simcoe Street on Government's Water-front Roadway Reservation—Special Meeting of Board of Works Held to Consider Request.

A special meeting of the Board of Works was held last night to consider whether the board could grant the Quaker Oats Company permission to have a new C.P.R. siding laid across Simcoe street on the Government reserve at the water-front.

The board's original motion read that no concessions of this nature should be made until the C. P. R. had guaranteed a right of way across their tracks at Simcoe street to the water's edge. But the board did not wish to hold the Quaker people up, and handicap them in the way of getting ready access to their new elevator construction of building material. In considering the situation the committee did not wish to give the C.P.R. a line with which to strengthen any opposition the railway people may entertain to granting this city a right of way over any additional tracks the railway will lay along the water front should the new Georgian Bay air line connect with Peterborough.

Ald. Hicks and the Mayor were inclined to the opinion that an agreement, now in draft form, with the C.P.R., regarding the new line would cover the Simcoe street right of way.

Ald. Duffus argued that the city should not handicap any institution like the Quaker Oats Company in their expansion operations. Such a course would certainly not encourage the location here of new industries.

At this juncture Mr. Denham, superintendent of the local Quaker Oats factory, dropped in, and was invited by the chairman to tell the committee what he wanted.

Mr. Denham—"I have done that so often that you ought to know it off by heart." He then went on to say that all his company wanted was permission to cross the Government reserve. "We have been asking this of you for five weeks now and, I think it rather strange if the city does not allow a concern like the Quaker Oats to put in a siding, to facilitate the erection of new buildings. We could force this concession by appealing to the Railway Commission, but such a course would delay our building operations four or five weeks. It is absolutely necessary for us to have a siding running along the west side for bringing in crushed stone. I think you might have shown a little more consideration for the Quaker Oats Company than to handicap them by dealing with the C. P. R. over our heads."

The Mayor assured Mr. Denham that every member of the board had expressed himself anxious to meet the Quaker Oats Company's requirements, and any unfortunate delay in granting the company's request had been the outcome of the committee's policy of safeguarding the city's interests.

Ald. Hicks remarked that the committee had had no intention of holding the Quaker Oats Company up in this matter, but had simply been actuated by a commendable desire to protect the city's future interests in the matter of right of way to the river, where wharves will be eventually constructed. In the past considerable embarrassment and trouble had resulted to the city from hasty decisions on similar questions.

Mr. Denham offered that the city could not prevent the C.P.R. crossing Simcoe street with another siding as they owned 66 feet along the present spur line. Besides they positively would not give a right of way across Simcoe street on this line. The city would have their opportunities of holding out for what they need in this direction. In any event, just as soon as Peterborough can show the need of a right of way to the river—when wharves are constructed and the canal finished—they can secure an order from the Railway Commission for such right of way as may be necessary.

Mr. Denham was here granted his request in the following resolution;

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Duffus,—That the city solicitor be instructed to consent to an order from the Railway Commission, giving the Quaker Oats Company permission to have the C.P.R. construct a spur line across Simcoe street on the Government reserve for road allowance.

THEATRICAL

BUSTER BROWN.

Buster Prown, Mary Jane, Tige and the surrounding characters left the pages of the newspapers last night and actually existed—on the stage. The presentation of the popular Outcault cartoon comedy at the Grand provided an interesting offering and kept the audience highly entertained and genuinely amused. For in Bustor Brown there are many novel and commendable features and the company was a capable one. The songs of the piece met with much favor. The numbers accorded the warmest reception were "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," "Buster Brown," 'Besty Bolivar," "Bonnie My Hieland Lassie," 'Huskin Bee," "The Belle in the Lighthouse" and "The Billiken Man."

Master Reed was immense as Buster and the antics of Tige provided no end of merriment. G. C. Clennett was responsible for much of the laughter in his portrayal of the character part of Seth Sowders. Loraine Lester was excellent as Mary Jane and the rest of the company were highly satisfactory in their respective parts.

It has been found necessary in order to protect the greens and fair greens of the Peterborough Golf Club Grounds, to forbid further trespassing on the premises. Hereafter the public, with the exception of members, are warned against trespassing under penalty of prosecution. 3d

MISS SEWARD WINS HIGH PRAISE AT DRESDEN

Those who know of the distinctive musical talent Miss Gladys Seward displayed in Peterborough will not be surprised at the musical success she is achieving in her pianoforte studies under Mr. Harry M. Field, in Dresden, Germany. Everybody here will be delighted to learn that at a pianoforte recital given by Mr. Field's pupils in the music salon of the Hotel du Nord, on May 2nd, 1910, she met great success. Playing with evidently advanced student competitors, Miss Gladys Seward won the triumph of the afternoon. A local journal, giving a report of the occasion, and referring to her work, says:—

"Something like a sensation was caused by the playing of Miss Gladys Seward, and only the lack of time induced the audience to refrain from demanding an encore. The "Chant-Polonaise" of Chopin-Liszt, and the "Trokia, Fahrt" of Tschaikowsky, both call for no mean standard of technical skill, but the young artist rose to the occasion magnificently. Her finger work was fine, her tempo good, while the insousiance of youth imparted an additional charm to her performance. Mr. Field is to be congratulated."

And Miss Gladys Seward is to be congratulated upon the promise she gives, of using her undoubtedly great musical talent and her opportunities to realize the expectations of those who take a moral and substantial interest in her musical education. It is a rather striking coincidence that the recital, at which she showed to so great advantage, should have fallen upon the sixteenth anniversary of the death of her father, the late Lewis Seward, one of the most competent all-round musicians that ever lived in Peterborough, and who, evidently, liberally dowered with his musical genius, his daughter, born nine months before his death. Her future will be watched with interest, and none who know of Gladys Seward's rare musical ability will doubt that with application and broad study, she will take rank with the foremost pianistes of her time.

Charles Dunsworth, aged 23, and Bertie Hemmelman, aged 14, of Halifax, were drowned by their boat capsizing.

RECOMMENDATION IN VERDICT OF CORONER'S JURY

Mr. R. J. Todd Examined at Last Night's Session—Jury Deliberated for About Three Hours Before Arriving at a Verdict.

"We find that J. A. Baillie came to his death from natural causes. We exonerate the parents from blame as we think the child was unintentionally neglected while the parents were laboring under the influence of Mr. Todd, who led them to believe that he could restore the child through divine powers or by prayer. We recommend the passing of a law to punish such men as Mr. Todd."

The above was the verdict brought in by the coroner's jury at the adjourned session of the Baillie inquest, held last night. The jury left to deliberate about eleven o'clock, and did not return until nearly two o'clock.

Coroner Grey presided at the session last night. County Crown Attorney Wood acted for the Crown and Mr. A. P. Poussette for Messrs. R. J. Todd and James Baillie, the father of the dead boy.

The first witness called was Mr. R. J. Todd, the Christian Scientist, who attended the dead boy. Some of Mr. Todd's statements were that he was notified by letter to "treat" the boy about 17 days before his death.

He only went out after several days.

"In what capacity were you asked to treat the boy?"

Answer—"As a preacher of the gospel."

The witness then went on to say he treated the boy for sick stomach and vomiting. He did not know what caused the sickness. "We deal with mind, not matter. It was spiritual treatment he gave him but no medicine.

"What did you first do with the boy?" "I got alone with God." He had done no miracles. "Our curing of illness is the work of the Almighty by prayer with the use of my understanding." Mr. Todd then described how he suggested to Mrs. Baillie to send for a physician. He knew that a burial certificate might not be issued and he did not want an inquest. Todd said, "It is our system to make a charge for treatment. I to make a charge for treatment. I deceased. I usually have four or five patients under my treatment. I charge $5 a week and $1 for absent treatment. I have been paid $5 in this case. This pays me in full if Mrs. Baillie says so. If Mr. Baillie offers me more I would take it."

"If we are to make this a great country we must begin at the bottom and look out for the babies."

SOLEMN AND MAGNIFICENT WAS THE FUNERAL PAGEANT

Last Remains of King Edward Laid in the Tomb—Many Kings at the Funeral—King George's Numerous Relatives come to Mourn With Him.

London, May 21.—Sovereigns and representatives of the Powers of all the world paid last tribute yesterday to England's great monarch, Edward VII., whose body now rests in St. George's Chapel at Windsor Castle, where the bones of Edward IV., the sixth and eighth Henrys, Charles I., the third and fourth Georges and William IV. are entombed.

Bright sunshine followed a night of thunderstorms that swept the city and soaked the funeral decorations of royal purple, the half-masted flags and wreaths of evergreens and flowers that hung along the line of march, but had no deterrent effect upon the gathering thousands, who from midnight until dawn sought points of vantage from which to watch the passing of the cortege.

The morning was clear and a hot sun beat upon the great masses of humanity that lined the route of the procession. It is doubtful if so many people were ever before seen in London. At the Mall, in St. James street and at Hyde Park the throng almost overwhelmed the procession.

KING ALFONSO OF SPAIN.

The police and soldier had to fight to prevent the lines being swept away by the crush. There were many broken limbs and other injuries were received. Hundreds of persons fainted more especially among the women who had been standing on the pavement for hours before the procession left Westminster Hall.

Glorious Spectacle.

All the pageantry that marked the burial of Victoria was as naught when compared with the magnificence of yesterday's spectacle, which, though it passed through a multitude of hushed people, reverently bent, was splendid in its accompaniments of gilded coaches, brilliant uniforms and decorations.

Far surpassing the ceremony attending the removal of the King's body from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Hall, the procession yesterday included nine sovereigns, the heirs to several thrones, the members of the royal families, the officers of the household, the officials of the Government, field marshals, generals and admirals whose names are synonymous with Britain's achievements in war; detachments of troops of all the British arms, and representattives of foreign armies and navies in variegated uniforms, a solid phalanx of glittering colors.

The vast throngs along the streets were massed so tightly that those once caught found it impossible to move. The great viewing stands, covered with mourning emblems, were banked high with people; balconies and windows crowded, the roof-tops black. And through this multitude, from among whom not a whisper arose, the gun carriage that bore the King's body moved to the strains of funeral marches, the tolling of bells and the booming of minute guns.

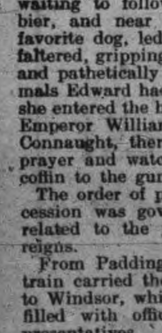
M. FALLIERES, OF FRANCE.

Queen Mother's Last Look.

At Westminster Hall the widowed Queen, going to spend a last few minutes beside the body of the King, was assisted from her carriage by the German Emperor. The Emperor kissed the hand and cheek of Alexandra and passed her to her son, King George. Here the Queen Mother caught sight of the King's charger, waiting to follow his master to the bier, and near at hand the King's favorite dog, led by a gillie, and she faltered, gripping the arm of the King and pathetically gazing upon the animals Edward had loved so well. Then she entered the hall with King George, Emperor William and the Duke of Connaught, there to offer a silent prayer and watch the removal of the coffin to the gun carriage.

The order of precedence in the procession was governed by kinship as related to the position of the sovereigns.

From Paddington station the royal train carried the coffin and mourners to Windsor, while special trains were filled with officials and foreign representatives. Bluejackets dragged the gun carriage through a line of purple to St. George's Chapel, and there simple services were said by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, assisted by other prelates.



COL. ROOSEVELT OF UNITED STATES.

King George, with Alexandra, walked up the nave behind the coffin, with the German Emperor and Queen Mary following.

The casket, borne by Grenadier Guards, was placed on a purple catafalque before the altar, which was fairly buried in floral pieces. The Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward took positions at the right of the catafalque. King George, as the chief mourner, stood at the head of the casket. His Majesty's bodyguard of gentlemen of arms stood at the left of the bier with axes reversed. The funeral party filled the edifice and overflowed into the prince consort's chapel to the south.

There was a moment of profound silence when positions had been taken and then the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Winchester advanced to the casket. The choir chanted "Man that is born of woman," and the congregation recited the Lord's Prayer, accompanied with music.

God Save the King.

The service of the Church of England was followed throughout. The anthem, "How Blest Are They," was sung, after which the Garter-King-at-Arms advanced to the altar and spoke as follows:

"For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God to take out of this life unto His divine mercy the late most high, most mighty and most excellent monarch, Edward, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and Ireland, King, defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, and sovereign of the most noble order of the garter, let us humbly beseech Almighty God to bless with long life, health and honor and all worldly happiness, the most high, most mighty and most excellent monarch, our sovereign Lord George, now by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, defender of the faith, Emperor of India, and sovereign of the most noble order of the garter. God save the King."

KING HAAKON OF NORWAY.

An answering murmur of "God Save the King," arose from the assemblage.

The Last Sad Scenes.

The Archbishop of Canterbury pronounced the solemn benediction, after which, with the Bishop of Winchester, he knelt before the altar in a moment of silent prayer. As the clergy rose to their feet, the hush was broken and the procession withdrew from the chapel in the order of its entrance.

During the service, the widowed Queen moved to the foot of the catafalque and knelt, and just before the coffin was lowered into the crypt, King George placed upon it a royal standard.

QUEEN MARY.

Several of the royal mourners, including Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and Prince Charles of Sweden left London last night, but all the reigning monarchs remain and the King and Queen had another notable dinner party at Buckingham Palace last evening. The departure of the sovereigns will begin to-day, but the German Emperor is expected to stay here until Monday night.

Presidents Followed Princes.

The cortege moved through solid lines of red-coated soldiers standing with rifles reversed and the regimental colors dipped to the ground.

Behind the casket, upon which rested the imperial symbols, followed the late King's charger, while his favorite terrier was led by a highland soldier just before the imperial ensign.

The representatives of the two great republics, France and the United States, were given a position at the rear of all the royalties, and the princes of the European states. Their carriage followed those carrying the royal ladies and they were the last in the line of the representatives of foreign Governments. The Duke of Orleans was given precedence as the envoy of the French people.

KING ALBERT OF BELGIUM.

King George, the Queen Mother Alexandra, and the Princess Victoria entered Westminster Hall before procession, and spent some minutes before the casket. Emperor William, who was at the entrance as they appeared, dismounted, and waving the lackeys aside, opened the door of the Queen Mother's carriage, helped her out and then kissed her on the cheek.

Regalia on Gun Carriage.

The procession started from the hall at 9.50 o'clock, just as the first minute gun boomed. The precedent afforded by the funeral of Queen Victoria nine years ago was closely followed. The oaken casket with the crown and cushion, regalia and insignia of the Order of the Garter thereon was borne on a gun carriage, the same as was used at the funeral of the late Queen.

The procession proceeded through Parliament street and White Hall. The public buildings were heavily draped with black and purple throughout the route. Leaving the district of official dominion, the cortege passed through the Horse Guards parade and thence along the Mall.

Stands Filled With Spectators.

From the Mall the procession passed Marlborough House, emerging in St. James street, proceeding to Picadilly and along that thoroughfare to Hyde Park corner, where it entered the park and passed along the popular drive to Marble Arch. Emerging from the park, the procession followed Edgeware road to Oxford and Cambridge terraces, and turned up these wide thoroughfares on either side of which throughout their length of half a mile, were unbroken stretches of tempergrarily erected stands, filled to their capacity with black garbed humanity.

KING GEORGE V.

By arrangement between the Westminster City Council and the Paddington Borough Council, the official signs of mourning along the route were uniform. Venetian masts with laurel wreaths at their tops had been erected at intervals.

The route was lined with thousands of troops, behind which were massed countless thousands of people in deep black, on the pavements below, and the house fronts above, with the balconies, windows and roofs crowded.

Military Represented.

Every branch of the defensive forces of the Empire was represented in the long columns which preceded the gun carriage. An officer of the headquarters staff, mounted, headed the procession with the bands of the household cavalry. The territorials and colonials came just behind the bands, then other volunteer corps, the Honorable Artillery Company, officers of the Indian regiments in their picturesque uniforms and turbans followed by detachments of infantry. Footguards, Royal Engineers, Garrison Field and Horse Artillery, cavalry of the line and regiments of Household cavalry followed.

The Royal Marine Infantry and Artillery and naval representatives came next, with the military attaches of the foreign embassies, the officers of the headquarters' staff of the army, the field marshal and massed bands playing solemn funeral marches.

The great officers of the Royal House of England, headed by the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, were followed by a non-commissioned officer of the Household Cavalry bearing the royal standard.

In Army Uniforms.

The King rode between the German Emperor and the Duke of Connaught, all in brilliant British army uniforms, and next in line was the group of rulers, heirs to the throne, princes of great states and special ambassadors.

The members of the royal houses on horseback followed in this order: First file, the Duke of Connaught, King George, Emperor William; second, King Haakon of Norway, King George of Greece, King Alfonso of Spain; third, King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, King Frederick of Denmark, King Manuel of Portugal; fourth, Prince Yussuf Zyyeden, the heir apparent of Turkey; King Albert of Belgium, Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Austria-Hungary; fifth, Prince Sadanaru Fushimi of Japan, Grand Duke Michael of Russia, the Duke of Sparta, who is Crown Prince of Greece, and Crown Prince Ferdinand of Roumania; sixth, Prince Henry of Russia, representing the German navy; Prince Charles of Sweden, Prince Henry of Holland, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Crown Prince of Montenegro; Crown Prince Alexander of Servia; seventh, Prince Mohammed Ali, Said Pasha Ulfikar, Watsen Pasha of Egypt; the Sultan of Zanzibar.

Then followed the princely and ducal representatives of a dozen German states, the members of the English royal family, the Duke D'Alencon, and Prince Bovaradej of Siam.

KING FREDERICK OF DENMARK.

The mounted group was followed by twelve state carriages. The first was occupied by the Queen Mother, Alexandra, the Russian Dowager Empress Maria the Princess Royal and the Princess Victoria. The second carriage contained Queen Mary of Great Britain, Queen Maud of Norway, the Duke of Cornwall, heir to the British throne, and Princess Mary. The next four carriages carried royal ladies and ladies-in-waiting. The seventh carriage carried Prince Tsai Tao of China and his suite. The eighth carriage was shared by special American Ambassador Theodore Roosevelt, M. Pichon, French Foreign Minister, and Sanad Khan Montaz Es Sultaneh of Persia. The ninth carriage was occupied by Lord Strathcona, Lord High Commissioner for Canada; Sir George Reid and William Paul Jones.

EMPEROR WILLIAM OF GERMANY.

Tolling of Big Ben, which had been silent since Tuesday, was resumed as the funeral cortege moved away from Westminster. Immediately after the coffin came King Edward's charger, with up-turned boots fastened on either side of the saddle, and after the horse was the late King's little dog, led by a Highland gillie.

"It's his dog, his little dog he was so fond of," cried a woman, with a sob, and perhaps no feature in the whole procession, with its magnificence of costume and allurement of personality, left such a vivid impression on all who saw as this simple human note. As Caesar, the mourning dog, passed through the Hyde Park gate a stray terrier, which had been haunting the spot for some hours previously, dashed up to make his acquaintance. The King's dog turned and showed his teeth, and for as long as the crowd outside the park railings could see him he was being pulled along while giving backward glances of defiance at the intruder.

KING GEORGE OF GREECE.

Arriving at Paddington Station, the casket was placed in the funeral car, which carried the funeral party to Windsor. The royal saloon was upholstered in purple and white silk, and a catafalque erected in the centre supported the casket. The car was occupied by King George, Queen Mary, the Queen Mother Alexandra, eight other sovereigns and near relatives. Special trains followed with the high officials, foreign representatives and special envoys.

At Windsor almost the entire procession was repeated. A striking change which emphasized the solemnity of the occasion was that the royal mourners walked instead of riding on

THE DOMINION PAYS HONOR TO THE BELOVED DEAD

Canada in Mourning From Ocean to Ocean for King Edward VII—Memorial Services Held in Churches and Militia Corps Pay Tribute.

Ottawa, May 21.—Upwards of 20,000 spectators and troops attended the memorial service on Parliament Hill at noon yesterday, including Earl Grey and a party from Government House, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and members of the Cabinet, all the Parliamentarians who are in the city, and all the members of the Board of Trade, both public school boards and other boards and organizations.

The troops formed three sides of a big square on the green fronting the House of Commons and the Government House party and the members of the Cabinet were in full robes of state.

There were memorial services in several of the churches, the different denominations generally uniting.

At Toronto.

Toronto, May 21.—Toronto was a veritable city of mourning yesterday, the manifestation of sorrow because of the passing of a beloved sovereign in the late King Edward the Seventh reaching a climax of wonderful impressiveness at the memorial services in Queen's Park in the afternoon.

CATHOLICS WANT CORONATION OATH CHANGED

London, May 21.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Tablet publishes an expression of opinion by Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, Canada's Solicitor-General, on the King's declaration. He says the resolution passed by the Canadian House of Commons nine years ago still represents the opinion of the country. The Catholics of Canada are now alive and aroused as they never were before to the importance of the question, and would resent the making of the declaration to-day with a depth and intensity of feeling it would be difficult to exaggerate.

Sir Charles concluded: "No man who has the cause of imperial federation really at heart, no man who dreams of drawing closer the ties binding the scattered units of the Empire, can possibly wish to hear George V. at the beginning of his reign repeat the words of the royal declaration."

The Law Journal says the establishment of a general law library in the Privy Council offices will assist in strengthening the movement towards the establishment of one Supreme Court of Appeal for the whole of the King's Dominions.

Fell Eighty-Five Feet.

St. Thomas, May 21.—The body of Richard Rock, aged 22, who was employed by the M.C.R. at Bridgeburg, and who was on a visit to his parents here, was found yesterday morning lying beneath the Wabash Railroad bridge over Kettle Creek.

He had fallen off at the highest point, 85 feet. His skull was fractured, and leg broken. Deceased was unmarried.

A fortnight ago there was a similar fatality at the same spot.

GEN. FRENCH IN CANADA

Quebec, May 21.—Gen. Sir John French arrived in Quebec yesterday morning on board the Allan liner Virginian from Liverpool. He was met at the wharf by Gen. Lake of Ottawa, Col. Lessard of Ottawa, Lieut.-Col. Pelletier, D.O.C., Quebec, and Capt. Victor Pelletier, A.D.C. to the Lieutenant-Governor. At 9 o'clock they attended the funeral services celebrated in memory of the King in the cathedral.

Sons Must Support Aged Father.

Sandwich, May 21.—F. X. Meloche, 74 years old, of Anderton Township, secured a judgment against two of his sons at the Assizes, requiring them to pay $1.50 apiece a week for his maintenance. He claimed that the sons were not living up to the agreement made fifteen years ago, when he deeded his farm in Anderton Township to them.

GEORGE, THE PEACEMAKER

The Review takes pleasure in commending the good sense and courage shown by Mr. George N. Graham, proprietor of the Oriental Hotel, last night. He probably prevented the loss of several lives by persuading young Gorman to come down from his high perch on the bridge where he held the police officers at bay with a revolver. Gorman was insane with liquor. He had already mortally wounded his mother while attempting to kill a policeman, and as there was a crowd of spectators at the bridge when the officers were trying to arrest him there no one can guess how many people might have been killed or injured if he had commenced his reckless firing again.

LIQUOR AND REVOLVERS

A large proportion of the crimes committed in this country are attributable to the fact that men have liquor in their blood and revolvers in their pockets. The dreadful tragedy in Peterborough last night was due to this combination. The sale of revolvers should be as carefully restricted as the sale of liquor. What argument can be advanced in favor of allowing a young man like Gorman to carry a revolver or to own a revolver? If men are allowed to own revolvers they cannot be prevented from carrying them or using them. This is a matter that demands earnest attention from Canadian legislative bodies.

LAWLESSNESS IN BRYSON

At Bryson, Que., some weeks ago a number of young men who did not like the habits of a gypsy named Michael Murphy and his wife, who lived in a small hut near the town, made a raid on the hut, throwing stones at the gypsies. Murphy ran out, chased the young men with a shot gun and finally shot two of them, Harry Howes and William Dale, killing them instantly. Murphy was arrested and tried for murder at Shawville. On May 18, after a week's trial, in the course of which it was shown how the young men had tormented the gypsies, the jury brought in a verdict of "not guilty." Judge Weir expressed surprise at the jury's verdict and told the jurymen they ought to be ashamed of themselves.

This whole case reminds one of the way things are done in the Southern States. If the gypsy and his wife were not violating the law before they were attacked, the young men had no right to interfere with them. If they were violating the law the proper remedy was to have them arrested and tried for their offences. The young men took the law into their own hands and attacked Murphy. He should have appealed to the law to protect himself and wife against them, but instead of doing so shot two of them. Such general disregard of law is not characteristic of Canada. Canadians have always prided themselves on the strict observance of law and order in this country as compared with the United States, but if this sort of thing goes on we will have no reason to boast any longer. Murphy should have been found guilty and punished for his crime and the survivors of the party of young men who attacked him should have been held jointly responsible for the deaths of the murdered men and punished accordingly.

The jury in the case seem to have been influenced by the feeling that the victims deserved what they got for attacking the gypsies. Perhaps if the surviving members of the attacking party had been arrested and placed on trial the jury might have been more ready to have convicted the gypsy. It would have looked more like fair play.

FARMERS' HOME MARKET

The Review has frequently pointed out that the home market for farmers in the Canadian towns and cities that grow up as the result of the establishment of manufacturing industries in this country is of immense value to Canadian farmers and more profitable than any market that could be secured in the United States by a reciprocity treaty. The following article from the Montreal Gazette bears out The Review's statement:—

"The Canadian farmer and his interests will probably bulk largely in any discussion as to the wisdom or lack of wisdom in a reciprocity treaty with the United States. It is difficult to see where the farmer stands in any great necessity of the United States as a market for his produce. Here are the comparative average prices for the second week in May of 1908, 1909 and 1910 and the same week in the period 1901, 1902 and 1903;

Creamery butter..	$ .28	$ .21 1-3	23
Dairy butter	.24 1-3	.17 1-3	28
Top butchers' cattle	6.05	4.92	23
Top export cattle..	6.58	5.62	17
Sheep, ewes.. ..	5.75	4.66	23
Lambs..	7.42	5.83	27
Hogs..	8.05	6.72	20
Fall wheat..	1.05	.76	38
Oats	.50	.38	28
Eggs..	.18 2-3	.13	43
Chickens	.18	.09	50

"These figures are remarkable in a number of ways. First of all, the advance in prices is distinctly due to the demand from the home market. This is shown particularly in the prices given for butter, hogs and eggs. At one time we were doing a considerable export trade in these articles to Great Britain. Thus, in 1901, 1902 and 1903 we supplied Great Britain with 5.7 per cent. of her total butter imports. In 1907, 1908 and 1909 Canada only supplied 1.9 per cent. of the British imports, despite the fact that these imports were 20 per cent. greater than in the first named period. Our egg trade with Great Britain at one time amounted to considerable; at the present time it has practically ceased. Our bacon trade grew in volume for a number of years, but it has since fallen off greatly. Wheat is, as a matter of fact, about the only one of the items mentioned above in which we have shown a greatly increased export trade, and that is due to the development of the Northwest. The farmers in the older portions of Canada are being kept busy attending to the wants of the home market. Dairy butter, which is not exported, has increased more in value than the exportable creamery; butchers' cattle, which are consumed at home, have increased in price more rapidly than export. The home demand has not only, in many instances, carried the price for exportable goods beyond the limit the exporter can afford to pay, but it has also carried the values of the non-exportable to nearly the same level. In fact, the situation is rapidly becoming one in which the country's concern is more as to the ability of the farmer to supply the home demand than as to the quantity we will have for export. When Northwest cattle are being brought to Montreal and slaughtered for home consumption there is proof that the farmers of Ontario and Quebec are not taking full advantage of a nearby and most profitable market. When Eastern Canada is regarded as a possible market for New Zealand mutton it is about time to take stock of the situation. It surely does not indicate any great necessity for looking for new markets for the farmer."

THE DANGEROUS HOUSE FLY

Scientific men are now agreed that the house fly is one of the most dangerous of insects, and city authorities in England and the United States are taking precautions against it. In England there are very few flies, but in Canada and the United States they have been commonly regarded as harmless creatures, although somewhat annoying when they get on one's nose, and consequently they have been allowed to multiply.

The investigations of scientific men having established the fact that house flies greatly endanger the health of the community, many cities and towns in the United States are now beginning to take precautions against them and Canadian cities should follow their example. The Department of Health of the city of Chicago has issued a pamphlet on the subject which every housewife is expected to regard as a declaration of war on the house fly. It gives the following information and advice to housekeepers:—

Don't allow flies in your house.

Don't permit them near your food—especially milk.

Don't buy foodstuffs where flies are tolerated.

Don't eat where flies have access to the food.

Flies are the most dangerous insects known to man.

Flies are the filthiest of all vermin. They are born in filth, live on filth and carry filth around with them. They are maggots before they are flies.

Flies are known to be carriers of millions of death-dealing disease germs. They leave some of these germs wherever they alight.

Flies may infect the food you eat. They come to your kitchen or to your dining table, from the garbage box, from the manure pile, from the cuspidor, from decaying animals or vegetable matter, or from the contagious sick room with this sort of filth on their feet and in their bodies, and they deposit it on your food.

Flies may infect you with tuberculosis, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, and other infectious diseases. They have the habit of feasting on filth, and then go direct to your food, to your drink, to the lips of your sleeping child, or perhaps to a small open wound on your hands or face. When germs are deposited in milk they multiply very fast; therefore milk should never be exposed to flies.

Screen all food, especially milk. Do not eat food that has been in contact with flies.

Screen your windows and doors. Do it early before fly time and keep screens up till snow falls.

Screen the baby's bed and keep flies away from the baby's bottle, the baby's food and the baby's "comforter."

Keep flies away from the sick, especially those ill with typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria and tuberculosis. Screen the patient's bed. Kill every fly that enters the sick room. Immediately disinfect and dispose of all discharges.

Catch the flies as fast as they appear. Use liquid poisons, sticky fly papers and traps.

Place either of these fly poisons in shallow dishes throughout the house; (a) Two teaspoonfuls of formaldehyde to a pint of water, or (b) one dram of bichromate of potash dissolved in two ounces of water, sweetened with plenty of sugar.

Sprinkle chloride of lime or kerosene over contents of privy vaults and garbage boxes. Keep garbage receptacles tightly covered, clean the cans every day, the boxes every week. Keep the ground around garbage boxes clean.

Sprinkle chloride of lime over manure piles, old paper, old straw and other refuse of like nature. Keep manure in screened pit or vault if possible. Manure should be removed at least once every week.

Pour kerosene into the drains. Keep sewerage system in good order, repair all leaks immediately.

Clean cuspidors every day. Keep 5 per cent. solution of carbolic acid in them all the time. Get rid of sawdust boxes used as cuspidors—destroy them—they're insanitary.

Don't allow dirt to accumulate in corners, behind doors, back of radiators, under stoves, etc.

Allow no decaying matter of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises.

Flies in the home indicate a careless housekeeper. Remember: No dirt—no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood notify the health department.

ONE WOMAN'S STATEMENT

Tells Her Suffering Sisters to Use Dodd's Kidney Pills

They Proved a Blessing to Her When Her Pains and Weakness were Almost More Than She Could Bear.

St. George, Man., May 20.—(Special).—Hoping to save her sister women in the west from pains and aches which come at the critical times in a woman's life, Mrs. Arsene Vinet of this place has given the following statement for publication:—

"I have brought up a large family and have always enjoyed good health until the last two years. I am fifty-four years of age and at the critical time of life that comes to every woman, I had pains in my right hip and shoulder. I could not lie down two minutes at a time without suffering the greatest agony. Sometimes I awakened with a feeling as if some one had laid a piece of ice on my head. Another time it would be a burning pain under the left shoulder.

"I took many medicines but could get no relief, till reading of cures of similar cases to my own by Dodd's Kidney Pills, led me to try them. They did wonders for me.

"I want all women to know what Dodd's Kidney Pills did for me."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. The woman who has sound Kidneys is safeguarded against nine-tenths of the suffering that makes life a burden to the women of Canada.

HAVELOCK NEWS

Special to the Review.

Havelock, May 20.—The residence of Mr. Wm. Spinks was completely destroyed by fire on Wednesday afternoon with all its contents except a table and a few chairs. It broke out upstairs and is supposed to have been caused by over-heated stove pipes and in a very short time was a mass of flames. The house of Mr. C. Waymark stands but fifteen feet to the east and with a strong west wind blowing it was only after a terrible battle by the renowned fire fighters of Havelock that the building was saved. A large number of helpers soon gathered on the scene, and by floods of water and pure grit on the part of the helpers, the flames were confined to the one building. At one time the wind increased and the flames wreathed about the heads of the fire fighters, but determination won out and no doubt saved the rest of the houses on the street. Mr. Spinks' loss is covered by an insurance of $700.

While the fire was at its height another section of the bucket brigade was called into action at the west end where the chimney on Mr. Wm. McKay's house caught fire.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"No, you don't, neither!" exclaimed Mrs. Morningstar. "I'll wenture down that there hall myself and make the door locked before I'll leave no more boarders sleep in there! I'm all worried up with thinkin' Doc was in there last night. I get it in my nerves so ugly if I'm worried up!" she said plaintively.

Peter felt a bit "worried up" himself at the thought of his prospective visit with Eunice that night being interfered with either by the locking of the door or, worse still, by the irrepressible Daisy Parks coming in on them.

"What's the matter, pop?" he asked, thinking to divert attention from the discussion of the room to the grotesque appearance of the head of the family, whose neck was swathed in red flannel and who was mixing himself a dose of whisky and water.

"I ain't so good," Mr. Morningstar answered hoarsely. "I took the cold goin' to town yesterday in the rain to git the money off the bank with them checks you gev me, Pete," he said ruefully. "Don't you be payin' me agin in no such checks!" he growled. "Gimme straight, plain cash! I offered that there dude check of yourn to the bank like what you sayed fur me to do and tole the feller at the little winder to pay up. He says, 'You must indorse it,' and give it back. 'How's that done?' I ast him. 'I ain't on to these here dude ways!' I says. 'Indorse it on the back,' he says. So I wrote, 'I indorse this here check heartily,' and gev it to him agin. No, that wouldn't do, neither; I must write off my name, he says. Now, writin' don't come so wonderful handy to me, and I was gittin' mad by that time! But he sayed he couldn't pay me till I got it right done. So I done it fur him. But I don't want to have no more such bother gittin' my money! I don't believe in banks and I never deal at 'em! And here I had to ketch this here cold yet! I got it so bad I can't make very loud no more. But mom she clapt such a tar plaster on me and tied flannen on, so now I kin make a little louder yet. I conceited a little whisky would help—fur all I ain't no drinker, though oncet I did have it so bad in my insides it went two months till I got better ag'in. And," he related with evident pride in the facts, "I had to take a whole gallon of whisky! A whole gallon in two months! Indeed, yes. You'll think I'm a drunkard yet! Ain't? But," he boasted, "when a man is a man he kin temperance hisself. He don't have to leave it be altogether! Abe," he added, turning to his son, "I don't feel fur workin' this after. You'll have to git along without me. I'm goin' to lay. Eunice she can go along to the field over and help you."

"I need her here, pop," Mrs. Morningstar quickly objected, a jealous anxiety in her voice. "It ain't right, her and our Abe bein' out there together by theirselves!"

The woman's tone expressed a distrust of the girl which brought the blood to Kinross' face and made Georgiana and Daisy cast their eyes upon their plates.

Kinross glanced across the table at Eunice. Not even a quiver of her lashes betrayed any effect upon her of the woman's insinuations. Her self control or indifference, whichever it was, seemed to him passing strange, almost blameworthy.

"It's market tomorrow," Mrs. Morningstar went on querulously, "and there's all the churnin' to be did. It comes wonderfully onhandy, pop, your gittin' cold just before market day. And the yeller cow gives such poor milk still this while past it'll hardly churn fur a body. Doc he says feed her chop feed and it'll hearten her up, he says, and make the milk better."

"He says, does he!" sneered Mr. Morningstar in a tone freighted with sarcasm. "Yes, I guess a feller would feed his cows chop feed yet! That would pay, ain't it? It takes towners to have the dumm ideas about a cow!"

"Towners?" Georgiana questioned, with a lift of her fine eyebrows.

"Och, I mean a body'd think Pete he was a towner, recommendin' such a dumm thing like that there!"

Mr. Morningstar received a dollar a week extra on Dr. Kinross' board for aiding and abetting his disguise.

"Ain't you leavin' Eunice stay and help us?" Mrs. Morningstar persisted.

"Her and Abe needn't be together." Her husband obstinately stuck to his will. "She can work in the upper field and him in the lower. Do you hear, Abe?" he sharply questioned his son.

Abe growled an affirmative under his breath. He was afraid of his father.

"Yes," cried Mr. Morningstar sarcastically, "they'll both mind you, too, when they're out of eyesight in the fields over."

"I'll be strollin' over there some time this after," Mr. Morningstar said warningly, "to see how things is goin'."

Georgiana, with a queenly lift of her dark head and a look of disgust, rose from the table.

Kinross so thoroughly shared the feelings which her manner and look expressed and he felt such strong disapproval of Eunice's apparent lack of sensitiveness to the shame of this talk that a sudden warm liking for Georgiana stirred in him. Forgetting his role, he rose instinctively to stand while she passed from the room. But the act was so entirely out of character that neither of the young ladies recognized it for what it was, though Georgiana's glance did for an instant rest upon him uncertainly with a vague surprise which quickly brought him to himself and to his chair.

A little while later as he lingered in the kitchen after dinner to get a word alone with Mrs. Morningstar and (as Providence favored him by keeping old Morningstar indoors) with Mr. Morningstar as well he saw Eunice and Abe start out together for the fields. While Mrs. Morningstar and Ollie cleared off the table he seated himself by the kitchen window and watched the youth and the maiden as long as they were in sight. The incongruity of a Wolcott working in the fields like a peasant and along with a fellow like Abe Morningstar struck him afresh.

"Now, you see"—Mrs. Morningstar turned to him as her husband stretched himself out on the settee and Ollie departed with a pile of dishes to the outer kitchen—"how crazy that there girl is after our Abe—her not havin' a word to say agin workin' in the fields out such a hot afternoon."

"But she never does say a word against anything she's asked to do, does she?" questioned Kinross, averse to this interpretation of Eunice's silence and acquiescence.

"Well, I'd like to see her oncet! What right would she have, I'd like to know? Pop he won't even leave Ollie and Abe speak back. What fur would he leave her?"

"Well, I guess anyhow!" hoarsely echoed Morningstar from the settee.

Kinross saw that his opportunity had come.

"But it's different with Eunice," he began. "She's not your own child and does not owe you a daughter's respect and obedience."

Mrs. Morningstar set down the platter she was scraping and stared at him, and Mr. Morningstar sat upright on the settee and fixed him aggressively with his little sharp eyes.

"She owes us more'n what our own children owes us," the latter affirmed, "us raisin' her like our own and her not bein' ourn."

"But you have not 'raised' her as your own. She was taken out of school at a younger age than Ollie was, and she has never been clothed as your daughter has been. For years she has been doing the work of two women and has got nothing for it but her board."

"Who's been tellin' you them things?" Mr. Morningstar asked, with repressed venom. "And what's it your business, anyhow?"

"Eunice she has the right to work fur our keepin' her when she was a child yet." Mrs. Morningstar repeated her oft reiterated argument.

This brought Kinross to the point which he had been driving.

"To pay you for keeping her when she was a child? But you told me you had been paid for that—the money found pinned to her dress. And then, you know, after a very few years the child's work more than paid for the expense of boarding her. So that really, as I heard her tell you, you owe her back pay; also you owe her, now that she is of age, that large sum of money you found pinned to her dress which you did not use for her."

He had turned from the window and sat facing them both, speaking with a cool precision and in a tone of authority which bewildered them.

"Which you did not use for her," he repeated, "and which, therefore, must be refunded. You will pay to Eunice within the next week the sum of $3,000. I'll allow you a thousand dollars for your care of her up to the age of six years, though of course you never gave her a thousand dollars' worth of care in the whole nineteen years you've had her."

Towered over the shrinking figure.

"You'll allow!" gasped Mr. Morningstar, while his wife's eyes fairly bulged from her face. "What are you got to do about it?"

"And how'd you know it was that much left us?" sputtered Mrs. Morningstar.

"I spent the greater part of last night in the haunted room, and," he said, with a mysterious significance, "I learned things. Four thousand dollars was found on the child when you took charge of her. You will pay $3,000 to Eunice within a week. If you make any difficulty about it I shall exact her back pay—$2 a week for the past five years and interest on the $3,000 for nineteen years. See here, Morningstar!"

He rose and with his hands in his pockets strolled over to the settee and towered over the shrinking figure of the little farmer. "I am not a man to waste words or enter into useless discussion. I mean just what I say. I am going to befriend this young girl and see that she gets her rights. I learned some things in your haunted room last night which have given me the power, I think, to do so. Now, I give you just a week to make up your mind. If you can't come to the point by that time I'll help you—by means of a lawsuit. Do you understand?"

"You must be crazy!" Morningstar chokingly exclaimed. "Pay that there girl $3,000! More'n our Ollie'll git till she gits married a'ready! Why, it would leave us poor yet!"

"You have no right to be rich on other people's money. The $3,000 belongs to Eunice. Now, don't make any fuss or I'll exact nineteen years' interest besides. You must pay the money. That's settled."

"Well, I won't! Go ahead with your lawsuit!" Morningstar retorted, his face apoplectic.

"I never thought, Doc, you'd turn on us like this here—or I'd cert'nly never took you to board!" lamented Mrs. Morningstar, her cheeks very white.

"I'm not 'turning' on you, Mrs. Morningstar. I'm helping you to clear your conscience and do the honest thing to that orphan girl. It is really not so much for the girl's sake—she may not need the money, though again she may—but for your immortal souls' sake."

"What do you mean? She mayn't need it. Is it that you're sweet on her and want to marry her, or what? Why, I ain't never seen you so much as look at her!"

"What was it you seen and heard in that there room?" growled Morningstar, "that gives you such cheek to talk up to us?"

"Ghosts reveal secrets. I may tell you after you've paid over the $3,000."

"Well, I ain't payin' it! Put that in your pipe and smoke it, will you?"

"As you please. If there's a lawsuit you'll pay it with interest and back wages besides. Let me know by the time I come back which you prefer. I'm going away tomorrow morning and will return here in a week."

"Not here. Me and mom ain't boardin' you another day."

"Then shall I put up at the village tavern when I come back?"

"I'll tell them young ladies you ain't no farmhand."

"And lose the money I have promised you if you did not betray who I was?" he asked indifferently.

This always strong argument he saw was answer enough to the threat.

"Now, Mrs. Morningstar," he turned to her quietly, "will you be so good as to let me have the little necklace and locket found on the child containing her photograph and that of a lady?"

Mrs. Morningstar stared at him almost with horror. "Did you see the ghost, and did she tell you about that there chain and locket?" she faltered.

"I can't explain anything to you now. I may tell you when I come back. Meantime give me the necklace."

"Don't you give it to him," Morningstar ordered her. "He'll be usin' it fur evidence or what."

"It's wore thin," said Mrs. Morningstar. "I wore it on Ollie till she overgrew it a'ready."

"Let me have it, at any rate."

"I got it in the chest up attic."

"All right. You have it down for me by this afternoon. Remember, Morningstar," he concluded, turning to leave the room, "I give you one week from today, not a day more."

He strolled out, and the man and woman were left alone to confront the horror of parting with $3,000 of their hoarded accumulation.

CHAPTER XVIII.

KINROSS had time to become very restless while he waited that night in the haunted room before Eunice made her appearance. He was rather apprehensive lest the curiosity of some of the household about this room might lead to his being discovered there alone with the girl. For her sake he would greatly dislike the apparance of it.

It was quite 10 o'clock before he heard her light step in the long hall outside the room.

When at last she stood before him he was held spellbound for an instant by the radiance of her face. Warmth, color, happiness, took the place of the pale, passive, remote aspect she ordinarily wore. Her whole person seemed to breathe her eagerness to hear the story he had to tell her. At least so he interpreted it.

"No one can have suffered more than I did with stomach trouble," writes Phil. E. Pascalar, well known at St. Andrews Corners. "My doctor told me my indigestion and sleeplessness were due to poisons in the blood. Certainly my condition was desperate, and it seemed from the despondent feelings that swept over me that I would lose my reason. I happened to read about Dr. Hamilton's Pills and bought five boxes from the druggist. Such body-cleansing pills I never used; they were mild and yet quite strong enough to drive all the humors out of the blood. My stomach gained strength rapidly with Dr. Hamilton's Pills and I improved so much that in eight weeks I could eat and digest all ordinary food. Depression and weariness passed away and I am, thanks to Dr. Hamilton's Pills, enjoying robust good health."

Facts:

When people buy pianos they want to know facts. They want something more substantial to base their preferences upon than high-sounding phrases, glowing descriptions and fine theories. They want to know that the makers have a high reputation, have had many years' experience, and are devoting zealous study, as well as earnest work, to the perfection of their pianos. They want to know that the instrument has durability, fine appearance, and is sold for a reasonable price.

Every person contemplating the purchase of a piano should accept the invitation to visit our factory and ascertain for himself the truth about every step in the progress of manufacturing the

DOURO FARMERS' CLUB DEBATES

The Douro Farmers' Institute meeting was held on Thursday, May 19th, in St. Patrick's Hall, when an interesting debate on "Resolved, Canada Should Become an Independent Nation," took place. The affirmative was upheld by Messrs. Frank Moher and Michael Maloney, and the negative by Messrs. Michael Welsh and William Condon. The debate was a very interesting one, and brought out good arguments on both sides. The judges, Messrs. Frank O'Connor, Martin Coughlin and Morris O'Brien, decided in favor of the affirmative.

Mr. M. D. Sullivan presided at the meeting.

The next meeting of the club will be held next month, the date of which will be announced later. A musical programme will also be given.

A BIG BELL WITH THE CHIMES

A member of the chimes committee writes to the Review as follows:—

"At midnight, on May the sixth, over the roofs of the silent city of London, the bell of St. Paul's Cathedral gave forth with muffled sound a message of grief. From high up in the tower the sound was carried through the night; slow, regular, melancholy the bell tolled in solemn, minute beats that the King of England lay dead.

"A bell is greatly needed to do similar service for Peterborough. The different bells were tolled yesterday, but none could be heard beyond its own section of the city, and our present bells are entirely too light to produce the deep, rich tone required. Peterborough's need would seem to be accentuated by the fact that on the grounds of public safety we cannot have a salute fired within the confines of the city. Something is needed for occasions of public sorrow or of joy, and a great bell with chimes to play appropriate music would be of real public service. The tenor bell of the proposed chimes will be either 2,100 or 2,500 pounds, according as is warranted by the subscription last."

Then most musical and solemn, bringing back the olden times,
With their strange, unearthly changes, rang the melancholy chimes—
Like the Psalms from some old cloister, when nuns sing in the choir,
And the great bell tolled among them like the chanting of a friar.
—Longfellow, "The Belfry of Bruges."

KILLED MOTHER WITH BULLET MEANT FOR POLICE OFFICER

James Gorham Made Disturbance at His Home and Mother Telephoned for the Police---Shot at P. C. Meharry Who Tried to Arrest Him---Escaped and Took up a Position on Framework of Railway Bridge and Threatened to Shoot But Later Gave Himself up--Preliminary Hearing Adjourned Until Thursday.

The home of Patrick Gorham, at 49 Maria street, Ashburnham, was plunged into sorrow and death last night, when the mother passed away at St. Joseph's hospital, shortly after ten o'clock, from injuries inflicted by a bullet from a revolver, which was discharged by her twenty-one-year-old son, James Gorham, who had shot at P.C. Meharry. The bullet penetrated the liver of Mrs. Gorham on the right side, and although she was hurriedly taken to the hospital, and given every attention by Dr. McNulty, death terminated the unfortunate affair.

THE SHOOTING.

Gorham had been working in the afternoon in the vicinity of his home, which is situated on the south side of the C.P.R. track, but a short distance from the foot of Burnham street. After quitting work, just where he went first is not altogether known for a fact, but the Review learned last night from one of the members of the family that he and several other men went up to the brewery and obtained some beer. Gorham, on returning to the home began to create a disturbance by shooting with a revolver, which he carried, and, thoroughly frightening his mother and the children. Leaving the house for the yard in the rear, he began to tear down a pig-pen. By this time the mother, frightened lest someone would be wounded by the crazy actions of her son, went to the nearest telephone and called up the police station for assistance. Some time elapsed, however, before P.C. Meharry answered the call and arrived at the home. Gorham was in Peck's field to the east, and at the rear of his home. He fired several shots at the police officer, and it was one of these which struck his mother in the right side. She had gone out to the rear of the house and was standing beside a daughter.

All attention was then paid to the wounded mother. Dr. McNulty was called, and then the ambulance, in which Mrs. Gorham was taken to St. Joseph's hospital. P.C. Meharry, it appears, did not have a revolver at the time when he approached Gorham.

WENT FOR ASSISTANCE.

The officer returned to the police station and returned again to the scene of the shooting, in company with P.C.'s Adams, Newhall and McGinty. During the short time which elapsed Gorham had gone to his home, and, it is stated, claimed to be very sorry for the shooting, and also exclaimed that he would finish himself if his mother died. He talked to a number of boys who were about and gave his watch and chain to a friend to keep for him.

When the officers hove in sight he ran east on the track to the bridge which crosses the canal. He had in his possession a long barrelled revolver and a small shot gun. He discharged several shots at Acting Chief Adams and P.C. Newhall, and climbed up the framework of the bridge. At this time an east-bound freight came along, and Gorham succeeded in stopping it by waving his hands and threatening to shoot. The engineer brought his engine to a stop on the bridge, but Gorham did not succeed in his supposed purpose of escaping on the train. The engineer was told by the officers to proceed and Gorham was kept on the framework of the bridge, as he was evidently afraid that the officers might, as they said they would, shoot him if he tried to make the freight. The train proceeded on its way and then Gorham took up a position on the north side of the top of the framework, and threatened to shoot the first man who ascended. By this time many people had gathered at different points, and the conversation going on continually between the officers and their man could be heard distinctly. The officers endeavored to coax Gorham down, but he refused, and maintained this attitude of defiance when Rev. Father McColl arrived at the bridge and tried to persuade Gorham to come down and give himself up. Several young men climed up the framework and conversed with the young man, and to one of these he stated that he intended to drop from his position and on to the midnight passenger train. After bidding Gorham good-night, Rev. Father McColl left and shortly afterwards Mr. G. N. Graham arrived. He spoke with Gorham for some time, and finally, at ten minutes after one o'clock, and after the officers and people on the bridge had gone away for some distance, he came down on the east side of the bridge, and left with Mr. Graham and P.C. McGinty in a hack for the police station. The revolver taken from him was loaded, and he had a considerable number of bullets in his pocket.

HEARING ADJOURNED.

The prisoner appeared before Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning, and his appearance suggested that he realized the serious position in which he was placed. He hung his head throughout the proceedings and did not answer when His Worship read the charge, "that he killed and murdered Ann Gorham."

He was not represented by counsel and as County Crown Attorney Wood was not ready to proceed the hearing was adjourned to Thursday morning at ten o'clock at the police court.

The prisoner is well known throughout the city and he has not much sympathy for the members of the police force. He appeared in the police court Wednesday morning charged with using abusive and insulting language toward a young man, but was discharged. He was also arrested some time ago on complaint of the same person, who charged him with assault. On this occasion Gorham followed and abused him on George street in the neighborhood of Central Park. He was found guilty and fined. Only when under the influence of liquor has he shown a vicious temper and at these times he has shown himself to be a dangerous person to deal with.

When he was told that his mother had died he stated that had he known of it before giving himself up he would have done away with himself.

CARRIED A REVOLVER.

One of Gorham's companions stated to the Review this morning that the youth made a practice of carrying a revolver. His friend said he had told him that he would get into trouble some day if he persisted in carrying the weapon.

INQUEST OPENED.

At eleven o'clock this morning Coroner Grey opened an inquest at the St. Joseph's hospital, and the following jury was empanelled:—Geo. Schneider, Patrick Leahy, Frank McPherson, William Gray, William Merrill, E. Bowie, Will Hall, Gus Lech, Arthur Johnston, Martin Kylie, Myles Henry, Joseph Picard, Harry Morgan, Charles Banks. H. C. Stabler was appointed foreman.

The body was viewed by the jury and the inquest adjourned, to meet next Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock, at the city council chamber.

The members of the family who survive the late Mrs. Gorham, besides her husband, are Messrs. John, Patrick, Martin and Michael, and Misses Annoie and Mamie.

A ROYAL SALUTE OF 68 MINUTE GUNS WERE FIRED

By 24th Battery—57th Regiment and Both Bands Turned Out on Occassion of Late King's Funeral—Impressive Ceremonies by the Militia.

Acting on the militia orders affecting them in connection with the observance of the day of the late King Edward's funeral, the 24th Battery C.F.A. left the Armouries with four guns fully manned at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon for the exhibition grounds to fire the royal salute of 68 minute guns. The first round was fired at exactly 6.23 and the last one precisely at 7.30. Quite a large number of spectators were present for the interesting military ceremony which was carried out in a clear cut and precise way.

The 57th Regiment fell in at the Armouries and marched out to the Armouries' green and formed in line. When the first gun was fired at the exhibition grounds the regiment presented arms and the band played Chopin's Funeral March. The men then stood with their arms reversed while the band played "Abide With Me," "Nearer My God to Thee," and 'God Save the Prince of Wales." After an appreciable pause the regiment again presented arms and the band played "The Dead March in Saul," and the buglers sounded "The Last Post."

The crepe was then taken off the colors and drums and the Governor-General's proclamation with regard to the King's death and proclamation of King George were read. After the reading of the proclamation the headdress was removed and three cheers were given for King George V. The regiment then marched back to the Armouries and were dismissed. The 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons were represented by Lt.-Col. G. H. Syer, Major W. T. Hall, Capt. E. S. Clarry, Capt. S. T Medd and Lieut. R. Cleghorn.

The manoeuvres of the regiment were splendidly executed and it was a matter of general remark that the band played with fine expression and shading.

The King's proclamation was as follows:

George the Fifth, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the seas King Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.

To all to whom these presents shall come.—Greeting:

Charles Murphy, Acting Attorney-General Canada:—

Whereas by chapter one hundred and one of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, instituted "An Act respecting the Demise of the Crown, it is, among other things, in effect enacted, that upon the demise of the Crown, it shall not be necessary to renew any commission by virtue whereof any officer of Canada, or any functionary in Canada or any Judge of the Dominion of Provincial Courts in Canada, held his office or profession during the previous reign; but that a proclamation shall be issued by the Governor-General authorizing all persons in office as officers of Canada who held commissions under the late Sovereign, and all functionaries who exercised any profession by virtue of any such commissions and all Judges of the Dominion and Provincial Courts to continue in the due exercise of their respective duties, functions and professions, and that such proclamation shall suffice and that the incumbents shall, as soon thereafter as possible, take the usual and customary oath of allegiance before the proper officer or officers thereunto appointed.—

Now therefore, by and with the advice of our Privy Council for Canada, we do, this our Proclamation authorize all persons in office as officers of Canada and all functionaries in Canada and all Judges of the Dominion and Provincial Courts in Canada, who at the time of the demise of our late Royal Father of glorious memory, were duly and lawfully holding or were duly and lawfully possessed of or invested in any office, place or employment, civil or military, within our Dominion of Canada, or who held commissions under the late Sovereign, or all functionaries who exercised any profession by virtue of any such commissions, to severally continue in the due exercise of their respective duties, functions and professions, for which this our Proclamation shall be sufficiently warrant.

And we do ordain that all incumbents of such offices and functions and all persons holding commissions as aforesaid shall, as soon hereafter as possible, take the usual and customary oath of allegiance to us before the proper officer or officers hereunto appointed.

And we do hereby require and command all our loving subjects to be aiding, helping and assisting all such officers of Canada and other functionaries in the performance of their respective offices and places.

In testimony whereof, we have caused these our letters to be made patent, and the Great Seal of Canada, to be hereunto affixed. Witness our Right Trusty and Right Well-Beloved Cousin the Right Honorable Sir Albert Henry George Earl Grey, Viscount Howick, Baron Grey of Howick, in the County of Northumberland, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, and a Baronet Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, etc., etc., etc., Governor-General of Canada.

At our Government House in our City of Ottawa, this ninth day of May in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and ten and in the first year of our reign.

By Command,
CHARLES MURPHY,
Secretary of State.

COMPELLED TO ABANDON WORK

A Very Severe Case of St. Vitus Dance Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

St. Vitus dance is a common disease in children and is also found in highly strung men and women. The only cure lies in plenty of pure blood, because pure blood is the life food of the nerves. And Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine to make this life blood because they contain the elements that actually make new, rich, red blood. This statement has been proven over and over again and now from Port Maitland, N.S., comes another remarkable piece of evidence of the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills over disease. Mr. Lyndon E. Porter is one of the best known residents of that town. He suffered from a severe attack of St. Vitus dance, and and got no help from medicine until he began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He says:—"My case was unusually bad. I was compelled to abandon work. I found it impossible to sleep, and night after night would toss about in bed. I was receiving medical attention, but in spite of the careful treatment I gradually grew worse. My limbs jerked and twitched to such an extent that I could not cross the floor without falling or coming in contact with some piece of furniture. I could not raise a glass of water to my lips so badly did my arms and hands tremble and shake. I cannot imagine more severe suffering and inconvenience than one endures who has St. Vitus Dance. My father being a druggist knew of the many cures effected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and advised me to try them. I did so, and with the most happy results. In less than two months from the time I began the use of the pills I was a well man, and I have not since had the slightest symptom of the trouble."

All over the world, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are making just such cures as Mr. Porter's. They go right down to the cause of the disease in the blood. In this way they have proved in thousands of cases to cure anaemia, headache and backaches, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, nervousness, indigestion, decline and the special ailments of growing girls and women. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS

BEFORE TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:

"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

SUSPECTS ARRESTED AT STATION

In Connection With Death of Unknown Man at Atherley

Oscar Coon, Philip Simmons, Mark Simmons Harry Rolers and a man by the name of Siggers, were arrested at the G.T.R. station to-day by officers McGinty, Adams and Meagher and Firemen Parker and Dundas, on the arrival of the 11 40 train from Lindsay. They were taken into custody on suspicion in connection with the mysterious death of an unknown man whose lifeless body was found near Atherley. His head was battered and foul play is suspected. The men boarded the train this morning at Reaboro, near Lindsay.

CAMPING IN ARCTIC REGIONS.

Peary's Ingeniously Contrived Tent of Canvas and Its Various Fittings.

"A man's first night in a canvas tent in the Arctic is likely to be rather wakeful," says Commander Peary, in Hampshire's Magazine. "The ice makes mysterious noises, the dogs bark and fight outside the tent where they are tethered, and as three Eskimos and one white man usually occupy a small tent and the oil stove is left burning all night, the air, notwithstanding the cold, is not ever pure, and sometimes the Eskimos begin chanting to the spirits of their ancestors in the middle of the night. Sometimes, too, the new man's nerves are tried by hearing wolves howl in the distance.

"The tents are specially made. They are of lightweight canvas and the floor of the tent is sewed directly into it. The fly is sewed up, a circular opening in it just large enough to admit a man, and that opening fitted with a circular flap, which is closed by a drawstring making the tent absolutely snowproof. An ordinary tent when the snow is flying would be filled in no time.

"The tent is pyramidical with one pole in the centre, and the edges are usually held down by the sledge runner or by snowshoes used as tent pegs. The men sleep on the floor in their clothes, with a muskox skin or a couple of deerskins wrapped around them. I have not used sleeping bags since my Arctic trip of 1891-92.

"The kitchen box for our sledge journey is simply a wooden box containing two double burner oil stoves with four-inch bottoms of five-gallon coal oil tins fitted with covers. When packed they are turned bottom side up over each stove and the hinged cover of the wooden box is closed.

"On reaching camp, whether tent or snow igloo, the kitchen box is set down inside, the top of the box is turned up and keeps the heat of the stove from melting the wall of igloo or burning the tent; the hinged front of the box is turned down and forms a table. The two cooking pots are filled with pounded ice and put on the stove; when the ice melts one pot is used for tea and the other may be used to warm beans or to boil meat, if there is any.

"Each man has a quart cup of tea and a hunting knife, which serves many purposes. He does not carry a fork, and one teaspoon is considered quite enough for a party of four. Each man helps himself from the pot—sticks in his knife and fishes out a piece of meat.

"The theory of field work is that there shall be two meals a day, one in the morning and one at night. As the days grow short the meals are taken before light and after dark, leaving the period of light entirely for work. Sometimes it is necessary to travel twenty-four hours without stopping for food."

A Lucky Poetess.

As a girl Miss Jane Barlow, the Irish poetess, began to send her poems to periodicals, under the name of "Owen Belair." Some were accepted and many returned, and often she thought it was of no use and then again she felt impelled to go on. Miss Barlow related an amusing story of the beginning of her connection with The Cornhill. She submitted a short poem to Mr. Payne, the editor, and was mortified beyond measure when she receiver a postcard which she deciphered to mean, "I have no use for silly verses." Her father, however, found the communication to be "I hope to use your pretty verses," much to the relief of the young author. For ten years Miss Barlow contributed poems and sketches to The Cornhill and other periodicals before she ventured upon her first book "Bogland Stories," which, by her father's advice, she signed by her own name. Next came the "Irish Idylls," which established Jane Barlow's position as a delineator of Irish life.

that gave the opening for the procession to the lesser dignitaries—ordinary ambassadors, mayors and others of like importance.

The attitude of Ireland toward Edward was shown by the presence of the Lord Mayor of Dublin. That city sent no representative to Victoria's funeral.

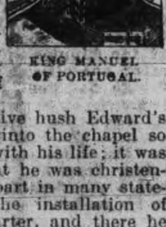
Through the Norman Gateway.

The route through the grounds of Windsor to St. George's Chapel lay through the Norman gateway.

It was a bitter winter day when the body of Queen Victoria was borne up the hill to the mediæval chapel of St. George's. Yesterday the castle gates at Windsor opened to receive the casket of the seventh Edward with the green of an English spring on the trees and grass within the massive walls. The gray towers and battlements over which the Union Jack was flying at half-mast never appeared more impressive.

In the streets below was a seething mass of people in black, with a lane kept open by two solid lines of soldiers for the cortege to pass through.

Inside the Chapel.



KING MANUEL OF PORTUGAL.

The clergy who were to conduct the service were in the chapel when the cortege arrived. They were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York and the Bishops of Winchester and Oxford, and the Dean of Windsor the three latter respectively the Prelate, Chancellor and Registrar of the Garter.

Amid an impressive hush Edward's coffin was carried into the chapel so closely connected with his life; it was at St. George's that he was christened, there he toog part in many stately ceremonies at the installation of Knights of the Garter, and there he wed the Queen, who wept over his bier yesterday.

WEDDING BELLS

BRAY—CROWE.

The marriage of Miss Lydia Eleanor Crowe, daughter of the late Jordan Crowe, Esq., Hall's Glen, Ont., and Mr. J. Flemming Bray, son of the late Arthur Bray of Bradford, Eng., took place at the church of St. John the Baptist, Toronto, at half-past seven Sunday evening. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. T. Baynes Reed, assisted by the Rev. Robert Gray, and was fully choral. The bridal party were met at the door by the white robed choristers, who preceded them up the aisle, singing the marrying hymn, "The Voice that Breathed O'er Eden." During the signing of the register Mr. Harry Elliott sang a solo, "Because God Made Thee Mine." The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. T. J. Crowe, her dress being of embroidered net over white taffeta, with the usual veil fastened by a wreath of lily of the valley, and orange blossoms. She also wore a pearl pendant, the gift of the groom. The bridesmaid was Miss Tighe, whose dress was of pale blue mull, and her bouquet of pink roses.

Mr. E. A. Bray, the groom's brother, supported him. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a pearl lace pin, and to the best man a gold mounted fountain pen.

The ushers were Mr. Norman McEachern and Mr. Tom Christie. A reception was held after the ceremony at the home of Mr. Tighe, Queen street east. Later in the evening the newly married couple left for Buffalo and Detroit before going to their new home in Saskatoon. The The bride's going away gown was of tan basket cloth with hat to match. The presents were both numerous and costly, among them being a a cheque from the firm whose office Miss Crowe had managed for the last six years.

Among the out of town guests were Mrs. Jordan Crowe and Mrs. Robert Hosken, of Peterborough.

A MIRACLE IN MANITOBA

CAPTAIN BANISTER STRICKEN WHILE IN CAMP

HAD TO BE CARRIED TO TRAIN. HELPLESS IN BED FOR SIX WEEKS

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" COMPLETELY CURED HIM AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Captain Banister's letter reads like a page from the History of Miracles. It is one of the strongest endorsements ever given to any medicine in the world.

Captain Nelson Banister of Oak Lake is known from one end of Manitoba to the other—in fact, throughout Western Canada. Naturally, the letter of such a prominent citizen and officer is bound to carry convincing weight with all thinking people.

OAK LAKE, MAN., June 15th, 1909.

"Fully appreciating the great benefits that I have derived from using your wonderful remedy, I feel it is my duty to write you a little history of my case and ask you to publish it, for the good of some others that may be today suffering from the complaint that I am happy to say, "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me of.

About two years ago, while in Camp at Brandon with "A" squadron, 12th, Manitoba Dragoons, I was stricken with Sciatica and Neuralgia of the muscles of the heart. I was so bad that I had to be carried to the train and sent home, and after being again carried from the train to my bed on arrival at Oak Lake, I was forced to stay there six weeks. Doctoring and nursing in time enabled me to get on my feet, but I could do no work, and was almost as helpless as when confined to bed. A sample of "Fruit-a-tives" came to our house about that time and I tried them. Believe me—that from the first dose I experienced great relief and continued taking them until I was as well and strong as ever. This satisfactory change and restoration to health, I attribute wholly to "Fruit-a-tives", and I never miss a chance to recommend them to my friends and neighbors.

Previous to taking "Fruit-a-tives", my heart was examined by doctors and found to be so weak that it was considered unsafe for me to take chloroform, or any anæsthetic, but since taking "Fruit-a-tives", the heart has become so strong that I was able to have a minor operation on one of my hands and took chloroform without any ill effects. Today the whole family uses "Fruit-a-tives", we purchase them from Mr. Graham, our local druggist, keep them in the house all the time, and just simply could not get along without them. They are the best medicine in the world."

NELSON BANISTER, (Capt. "A" Squadron, 12th Manitoba Dragoons.)

Truly, the days of the miracle have not passed way. When these small fruit tablets can do what physicians, with all their skill, cannot do, it does seem almost miraculous. Yet nothing is more logical and scientific than the medicinal action of "Fruit-a-tives".

Sciatica, Rheumatism and Neuralgia in any form are caused by poisoned blood.

It is the duty of the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin to rid the system of waste matter, or urea. If any of these organs are weak, the waste matter stays in the system and is converted into uric acid.

It is uric acid which poisons the blood and inflames the delicate nerves, membranes and muscles, causing what is known as Rheumatism, Sciatica or Neuralgia.

"Fruit-a-tives" promptly cures these troubles because "Fruit-a-tives" cures the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin. "Fruit-a-tives" makes these three great eliminating organs well and strong. And when the waste of the body is regularly disposed of, there can be no excess of uric acid.

"Fruit-a-tives", as Captain Banister says, "is the best medicine in the world." It is made of fruit juices and valuable nerve and heart tonics, and is pleasant to take.

PAVLUHA

A Tale from Bosnia

Retold by Louise Souvan

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

ONCE there was a mother who had a son by the name of Pavluha. One Sunday morning she said to him:—"My dear son, I am going to church; you stay at home and see that the soup which is on the stove doesn't run over." The mother went to church and Pavluha stayed at home. The moment the soup started to run over he ran to the church, posted himself at the main door and shouted as loud as he could, "Mother, dear, the soup is running over!"

His mother came out of the church at once, but she was much mortified by having her son make this public disturbance. Besides, it did no good, because when they reached home the soup was almost entirely gone, so much of it had boiled over.

So the mother said to Pavluha:—

"You are truly a silly fellow, you son of mine. Next time if anything of the kind happens come gently to me and whisper it into my ear."

The following Sunday the mother again prepared to go to church and left her son at home, saying to him:—

"Take care, my child, that nobody carries away the bacon, for 'Old Winter' is near and will clean it up nicely."

No sooner had the mother left for church than a beggar came knocking at the door and asking for something to eat.

Pavluha, thinking the man was "Old Winter" his mother had spoken of, immediately went up into the attic, took the whole stock of bacon from the rafters and gave it to the beggar, who, much surprised, most gladly received the rich pillage and took to his heels at once.

When the mother returned the boy ran out to meet her and cried at the top of his voice:—

"Mother, dear, Old Winter was here and took away all the bacon and lard there were."

His mother was naturally very angry with Pavluha when she found what had happened, and declared that the next time he did anything so silly she would punish him severely.

His Mother Came Out of the Church at Once, but She Was Much Mortified

For the third time when Sunday came the mother got ready for church, leaving her son in charge of the house. "And now, my son," she said, "do try to have your wits about you. While I am away go to the cellar and fill the bottles with wine, so that we will have some for dinner, but be sure you do not forget to screw up the tap, so that the wine won't run out."

The mother left and Pavluha went down into the cellar. He filled two bottles with wine, left the tap unscrewed and went upstairs. After half an hour he remembered that he had not screwed the tap. Hurriedly he ran into the cellar again, but the wine already deluged the whole place. At the door stood a sack with flour. Quickly he took the meal and threw it on the floor into the wine, making the whole floor look like a raw doughnut.

You may be sure that when the mother returned she was more angry than ever with Pavluha, and this time he got a very good spanking. It was a long time before the mother again ventured to go to church and leave her son at home to mind the house, but finally Easter came and she felt she must go, but before going she had a long, serious talk with Pavluha, warning him to be careful and promising that if he would learn to act more wisely instead of always making trouble for her she would give him his father's gold watch and chain, which was the family's greatest possession.

Hardly had she left the house before Pavluha discovered that it was on fire, and he ran hastily down the road to the church. He remembered what his mother had said when the soup boiled over about not shouting aloud, and so this time he followed her directions and, tiptoeing softly up the aisle to her pew, whispered in her ear, "Mother dear, the house is on fire."

"Mercy upon us, my son!" cried his mother, "this is the time you should shout out loud, so that everybody could hear, and not whisper in my ear!"

They went as quickly as they could to the house, but it was already destroyed when they got there, and so the mother had to go to live with a cousin, while Pavluha went out into the world to work.

Every week he came to see his mother and to bring her a present. Once he brought her a new scarf for her neck, but he carried it so awkwardly that his mother said, "Next time if you bring anything of the kind put it in your pocket, so the whole world will not see it."

The next time Pavluha came he brought his mother a bottle of wine, but, mindful of her last admonition to put everything in his pocket, he poured the wine into it.

Arrived at his mother's house he announced that he had brought some good wine.

"Where is it?" said his mother.

"Where?" said Pavluha. "Why, didn't you tell me to put things into my pocket? So I poured the wine in."

Naturally there was no wine left, nothing but a stain on Pavluha's coat, and his mother was very angry with him. "If you ever bring anything like that again you must put it into a bottle," she said.

The next time Pavluha came he brought a loaf of bread, and, remembering what his mother had said, he cut up the bread in little pieces and stuffed it into the bottle until the bread was all crumbs.

When his mother saw it she was in despair, but she said, "My son, when next you have anything of that kind put it into a bag."

Well, of course, the next thing he brought wasn't at all suited for a bag, for it was nothing less than a fine little calf. Nevertheless, Pavluha stuffed the gift into a bag and took it to his mother. The calf tore the bag almost to shreds and was almost suffocated besides, and his mother was quite discouraged with him. "Next time, if you get anything of the kind," she said, "bring it home on a string."

So Pavluha did, but what he brought was a pound of butter, and you may guess that it was not very much better off for being dragged through the dirt by the string that tied it up.

Arrived at his home with nothing but the string which had tied the butter—for the butter itself had all melted on its hard journey—Pavluha said to his mother:—"Mother, now may I have my father's gold watch and chain?"

His mother laughed until the tears streamed down her face. "You must wait until you are wiser before you have that," she said, "and next time when you bring anything like butter put it in a nice paper or napkin and then in a basket."

Pavluha didn't bring anything for a long time, and then it was grapes, which of course did very well in the basket, so that his mother was pleased with him.

"Now, my lad," said his mother, "you have proved that you are not so foolish after all, and so I will give you the gold watch and chain." She hung the chain over Pavluha's neck and put the watch in his pocket to his great delight. Strangely enough, the watch and chain not only pleased Pavluha, but they made him much more thoughtful and intelligent and he never again made any of the mistakes which angered his mother. Perhaps it was the dignity and importance of wearing a watch and chain which made him think before he acted, or perhaps he had merely grown older and less flighty. In any event, he turned out to be quite a boy, and his mother was perfectly pleased with him.

INTERESTING COLLECTIONS of BUTTERFLIES INSECTS and CURIOS MADE BY BOYS and GIRLS

MAKING a collection of objects found out of doors is one of the most interesting ways of entertaining one's self during the summer vacation. It is always much more fun to have an object in view when roaming about the country and exploring the woods and fields. Here are some accounts of collections which boys and girls have made which will possibly suggest to others what to collect and how to keep their specimens. Collections of insects and butterflies, wild flowers and fossils seem to be favorites, but there are also collections of minerals, arrow heads and odd curious which are popular. Those who are looking forward to starting a collection of insects will be interested in the following account of Alphonse T. Jacobson's collection:—

My Insect Collection.

BY ALPHONSE T. JACOBSEN.

MY collection includes insects, butterflies and beetles, chiefly beetles. These specimens I collected by taking trips to woods, ponds and open fields. The best of the above mentioned places are the fields, since there plenty of room can be found to swing the insect net. In ponds I have found many rare water beetles and larvae. Once when I was "dredging" for beetles in a pond I brought up, among other things, an insect which resembled a twig or small branch so exactly that I almost overlooked it. When I "dredge" I almost always bring up a few water lizards and a number of tadpoles, snails and "killies."

When I go insect hunting I always equip myself with the following:—One insect net, one killing jar, made of cyanide of potassium and plaster of paris; one collecting box for butterflies and several boxes and bottles.

The handle of the net should not be too long, for then it is difficult to swing the net rapidly back and forth. When I capture an insect I quickly twist the handle of the net, thus closing the mouth of the net and making it impossible for the insect to escape. After I swing the net to the ground I uncork my cyanide bottle and, inserting the bottle under the net, slowly raise the bottle until the mouth of it is directly under the captive insect, which is clinging to the net, and, giving the insect a tap with my finger, he falls into the bottle, which I immediately cork.

Moths and Butterflies.

BY CHARLES RUSSELL GREGOR.

DURING the months of July and August I caught most of my butterflies with a net in the garden. Among them were sixteen varieties of large butterflies.

About the same time I found the larvae of a number of moths and butterflies on the trees about us.

Some of the moths found were the Cecropia, Polyphemus, Bull's-eye, Promethea and several others whose names I do not know.

During September the larvae wove their cocoons. I brought the cocoons home in October and they all came out the last of May except two, and I had in all ten cocoons and chrysilids.

One day last May as I entered my room I spied a beautiful Cecropia moth clinging to the curtain. It had just broken its silken enclosure. I was especially delighted with this moth because I had raised it from its larva. It is the largest moth inhabiting the United States. This moth measures eight inches across and is of a rich dark brown color. The wings are edged with light brown and rose and cream markings. The body is rose color with cream colored stripes. A written description gives but a poor idea of this beautiful moth. I now have between seventy and eighty different specimens of moths and butterflies.

Good Advice to Collectors.

BY WALTER PARZER.

THOUGH my collection is by no means complete, I have gained a good deal of experience in collecting and learned something about the habits of insects, best way of preserving them, &c. A description of the outfit can be found in any standard work, but I will run over a list of the most necessary articles. The first thing always considered is the net. A very serviceable one can be made at home with the aid of a piece of mosquito netting, a piece of stiff wire and a light wood handle. It must be firmly made and light weight.

After an insect is caught it must be killed carefully so as not to be spoiled. The best method is by the use of the cyanide jar. This is made by placing a few lumps of cyanide of potassium in the bottom of a wide mouthed jar, covering it with sawdust and covering the whole with a layer of plaster of paris. After the plaster has dried an insect can be put into the jar, the stopper fastened and the insect will soon be killed by the fumes.

To preserve a specimen it must be pinned, stretched, if wing bearing, and dried. For pinning insect pins should be used, as ordinary pins are too short, too thick and liable to corrode. The pin should be thrust through the thorax of all insects except beetles, which should be pinned through the right wing cover, or elytron. As mentioned before, the wings of insects should be spread to better the looks of a collection and to help in classification. For this a "setting board" is necessary.

The pin of the insect to be spread is thrust into the cork until the body of the insect is in the groove and the wings are extended on the side. The front wings should be drawn forward until the posterior edges are perpendicular to the body, while the back wings should be placed symmetrical to these. In most butterflies the back wings should be placed so that the border on the anterior edge begins at the intersection of the wing edges. The insect should be allowed to remain in this position until perfectly dry.

When dried it is customary to place the insects in cabinets or exhibition cases. These should be bought, as they must be dust and insect proof, as far as possible. Right here let me say that nothing discourages a collector more than to have dermestes get into his collection. These museum pests manage to get into the tightest boxes and proceed to use your choice insects for a general hatching ground, the larvae eating the bodies of the specimens and completely spoiling them. Many preventives are used, such as cups of benzine placed in the cabinet, camphor or naphtha cones, &c., but none are entirely satisfactory. I once read of a preventive which I have used a great deal since. The dried insects are dipped in a solution of twenty-five grains of corrosive sublimate and two ounces spirits of wine and allowed to dry before being replaced in the cabinet. I cannot say whether this is a sure preventive, but I do not remember ever having a specimen attacked by dermestes after having been so treated.

My Western Curios.

BY OTTO MANECKE.

ONE morning we broke camp early and followed a small trail through the wilderness. Nothing to be seen but high mountains, sage brush, pine trees and cacti, with prairie dogs and occasional wolf and elk to give life to the picture. It was here while winding our way through the wilds that I detected among a cluster of small pines a peculiar scaffold, made out of poles, but broken down and partly decayed. On coming nearer I found it to be an old Indian grave. The dead Indian had been wrapped in calico, but had fallen down with the decayed wood. Some of the bones were there yet, also the belt that the dead warrior had worn, and, covered by some rubbish, we also found the skull lying on its side, in a fine state of preservation. The scalplock was there yet, and the paint be seen yet on the dried skin.

I took the belt and the head with me. A few days later, while near the border of the Yellowstone National Park, I found the skeletons of several elk and brought home some of the great antlers. After having camped in the park for a week we started out again, heading for the Teton Range. I found on a deserted spot the skull of a buffalo, which I also brought home. And while hunting through a lot of rocks I came across the remains of a prehistoric animal which my father though was a prediluvial bear, probably of the extinct species, Ursus spelaeus. Having no other instruments, I could only carry away some of the ossified teeth. I collected all the wild flowers of the Rocky Mountains, pressed them and preserved them in an album.

Collecting Wild Flowers.

BY AMELIA LAWRENCE.

TO gather wild flowers without injuring them I furnished several old magazines with tabs. I cut slips of paper the same size; these I pasted on the upper left hand corner of the page, so that they extended about one inch over the edge of the page. I used red crayon pencil to write on the tabs the name of the flower which was pressing between those pages on which the tabs were fastened. These old magazines came in very handy when I had a flower which was very fragile or that did not grow in abundance. When I found a plant which was fragile, such as the dog tooth violet or the spring beauty, I carefully picked it, and after arranging it in the position wanted I placed it in the magazine, and after marking the tab accordingly I closed the book and placed an elastic band around it so that the flowers would not be disturbed while I was carrying the magazine around with me.

With these little tabs as guides I was careful not to open the book near any marked tab, as I would probably disturb the specimen. Such flowers as the violet and cowslip are usually found in abundance, so I picked a medium sized bunch of each and tied them with string. These I placed in a basket with wet paper in the bottom so they would keep fresh until I got home. When I arrived home I picked out some of the best flowers and placed them in a heavy book to press. All flowers I had in the magazines I left there until all the sap was pressed out; then I placed them in a heavy book. When all flowers were almost dry, but not brittle and colorless, they were ready for waxing.

I waxed the flowers because it retained their color. I used refined paraffine to wax them. I never use hot parafine, only warmed just so it will pour easily. There are several different ways in which I waxed my specimens, as different shaped flowers call for different modes of waxing.

One of these ways was by dipping the specimen into the paraffine and then laying it on a board while I arranged the flower in position. The other way was by pouring the wax over the specimen and spreading it over evenly, then arranging the flower in position. These ways are most commonly used. The arranging of flowers when either method is used has to be done before the paraffine hardens.

I keep my specimens by mounting them on heavy white drawing paper. I fasten my specimens on the paper with little narrow strips of adhesive plaster. I paint these little strips the same color as the part of the flower it fastens. These little strips are then hardly noticeable. The specimens which I have mounted I keep fastened together in book form.

This work affords me much pleasure. I am for flowers as is John Burroughs for birds and animals.

My Wild Flower Collection.

BY FREDA DAVIDSON.

EVERY morning with my big pasteboard covered book, a pair of scissors and several sheets of paper I'd start out to find the pretty wild flowers in which our place abounds. As soon as I found a flower I'd lay it between two pieces of paper in the book. Later these papers are thrown away and the flower is held in place by small pieces of adhesive plaster which are pasted over the stem. As soon as I reach home I place the book under a big trunk. This presses the flowers.

Among the flowers I gathered in May were dogwood, white and blue violets, columbine, dandelion and orange field daisy.

A few of bright June flowers that found their way into my book are the wild June rose, buttercup, jack in the pulpit, daisy, blue grass and clover. A sure way of finding out whether any one likes butter is to hold a buttercup under his chin, and if the chin looks very yellow he is very fond of it. I always place on the same page with the flower the date when I picked it.

July brings the white and yellow water lily; the cowslip and tiger lily are now beginning to nod beside the fences.

The tiger lily is a big orange colored flower. Most every one who smells it goes off with a yellow nose, because the flower contains a great deal of pollen, which it seems to want to get rid of.

Mosses and Lichens.

BY LLOYD DE PINNA LEMON.

IN my tramps in the woods I soon collected quite a number of moses, lichens and fungi, and the question arose how to arrange them. [illegible] decided on getting three shallow cardboard boxes of the same size, only an inch in depth. On the bottom of one I pasted my specimens of lichens, leaving plenty of space around each one for names and notes. In the others I placed the fungi and mosses. The lids I pasted on one side like hinges, so they open without coming completely off, and I can keep all the boxes tied together. As my collection increases I can add boxes of the same size and also place extra mounted cards in the boxes.

I had a few lichens which were especialy pretty when mounted, and as I like to decorate my den with specimens of my fads and fancies, as mother calls them, I decided to mount a few suitable to hang on the wall. I bought a plain picture frame. Then I mounted my favorite lichens in a box about half an inch deep, and the length and width of my frame, and then fastened the glass and frame over the box. This looks very attractive and makes an interesting addition to my room.

COMET PROBLEMS.

The comet is now 15,500,000 miles distant and rapidly receding from the earth. Look for it in the western sky after sunset if atmospheric conditions are clear.

Comets are by far the most enigmatic of heavenly bodies. Their origin, their chemical composition, the phenomena which they present are all more or less astronomical riddles. To say that a comet is composed of a core or nucleus, a coma or envelope surrounding the nucleus, and a luminous tail, is merely to describe the physical appearance of a comet. Why is there an envelope or a tail, what is the comet composed of, why does it change from day to day and sometimes from hour to hour, are questions that can be answered only in a more or less perfunctory way.

By far the most important of cometary problems are presented by that frisking tail, which popularly at least, is supposed to distinguish comets from other heavenly bodies, and whose vagaries were told about yesterday.

It seems to be fairly agreed that the core of a comet is composed of granular matter, which when subjected to the intense heat of the sun, emits a tail. The tenuous matter composing the tail must therefore be permanently lost from the body from which it emanates; but no astronomer has ventured to imagine what becomes of it. Moreover the curious way in which a comet's tail always points away from the sun offers still another astronomical puzzle.

The pressure of light, as explained yesterday, has been invoked to explain that strange circumstance, and probably correctly. But the study of such strange bodies as Brooks' comet of 1893 Borrelly's comet of 1903, and above all Morehouse's comet of 1903, has revealed phenomena so startling that electrical forces must be presumed, forces to which we now attribute our magnetic storms and auroras. Whatever may be the power of light pressure it cannot altogether explain why tails are repeatedly formed and discarded to drift out bodily into space, until they finally melt away; why tails are sometimes twisted or corkscrew-shaped; why areas connected with the tail should become visible some distance from the head, where apparently no supply had reached them; and why the entire tail is sometimes thrown forward, contrary to all the laws of gravitation. This much at least the freaks of a comet's tail drive home. Some unknown influence is at work in the planetary spaces, as yet undreamed of in our astronomical philosophy. What that influence may be is one of the great problems for the future to solve.

The origin of comets likewise offers much food for astronomical thought. Sir William Herschel thought they were fragments of nebulae, the scattered debris of embryo worlds, a theory which has since been abandoned. The famous Italian astronomer Schiaparelli, showed that their native movement is parabolic, which must have been wholly imparted from without. In other words they start from a condition of comparative rest and are attracted by the sun. This does not explain what they are. It merely tells us that they wheel around the sun like moths around a candle. Professor Todd hazards the opinion that "probably the comets are but chips in the workshop of the skies, mere waste pieces of the stuff that stars are made of." That, however, seems too much like Herschel's abandoned view. It has been urged, too that some comets may have originated in vapors ejected by the sun, or by the larger planets of our system.

By analyzing the light of a comet its composition can be determined with some certainty. Carbon combined with hydrogen (hydrocarbons, to use a chemical phrase) constitutes the chief ingredient of most comets. There are also metallic elements, such as sodium, magnesium and iron, all of them detected in the great comet of 1882. Lastly there are nitrogen, cyanogen and perhaps oxygen. Whether or not the chemical composition of a comet is always the same has not as yet been fully determined. It may be, as there is good reason for believing, that a close approach of a comet to the sun is fraught with rapid and marked chemical transformations. The physical difference between different comets is little understood. It might be supposed, reasoning from terrestial analogies, that as a comet approaches the sun, its head would expand under the increased heat. Yet the opposite effect is observed. It grows smaller as it grows hotter. When it recedes from the sun, the head seems to expand as it cools. No satisfactory explanation of this anomaly has been given.

Whether or not comets are self-luminous was long a question. Although it can no longer be doubted that they shine with intrinsic light, it is now generally believed that some of their light is reflected from the sun. The point, however, is still in dispute.

Evidently the return of Halley's comet is something more than a historical event. It will afford an opportunity of comparing both the physical appearance and what was known of the chemical composition of comets in 1835, with the appearance and composition of 1910. If that comparison will shed any light upon the mysteries of comets, the year 1910 will go down in astronomical annals as a year of great discovery.

LET THE FLAGS FLY OVER THE SCHOOLS ON MAY 31

The Review has received the following letter from Hon. R. A. Pyne, Minister of Education:—

"There has been brought to the attention of the Government of Ontario the fact that Tuesday, May 31st, marks the inauguration of United South Africa, the new British dominion in that part of the world. As the national birthday of an important new state of the Empire is of interest to us all, I invite the various School Boards of the Province, urban and rural, to allow the flag to fly over the schools of Ontario on that day."

The Orangemen, through their official organ, 'The Sentinel,' of Toronto, are sending out petitions to all representatives of Orange lodges over Canada. A young man who boarded the G.T.R. While in the midst of his antics he pulled some money from his pocket, consisting of a five dollar and a two dollar bill and threw it recklessly out of the window, as if it were worthless. The young man gradually cooled down, and probably by this time is lamenting the loss of his valuable money.

KING IS SUNDAY SCHOOL MEMBER

His Majesty, Roosevelt, Bryan, Diaz and Taft Are Honored.

Washington, May 23.—King George of Great Britain, President Taft, Mrs. Taft, Theodore Roosevelt, President Diaz of Mexico and William Jennings Bryan were made life members of the World's Sunday School Association in the convention here on Saturday, amid scenes of great enthusiasm.

For each of those so honored, $1,000 had to be subscribed, and in the case of Mr. Roosevelt, the chairman of the convention by popular demand limited subscriptions to one dollar.

A delegates from Canada started the enthusiasm. "I nominate Wm. Howard Haft for a life membership, and Canada pledges one hundred dollars toward it," he shouted. A roar of approval went up. The remaining $900 was subscribed in a flash. Mrs. Taft's name was then proposed and her $1,000 promptly made up.

A delegate from South Carolina proposed King George. There was a race to subscribe and Toronto only managed to get in tenth place with its hundred dollars, so quick were the responses. Then a man in the centre aisle, "I nominate Theodore Roosevelt."

The effect was almost magical. Men hopped on chairs, shouting, women rose and frantically waved handkerchiefs. It looked like the Republican National Convention scene when Roosevelt was nominated for President.

The chairman withheld the nomination at that moment, but with difficulty. He confessed that he intended to hold the name of Roosevelt until the last to keep up enthusiasm in subscriptions.

In the meantime the name of Diaz was proposed and the necessary $1,000 was quickly subscribed. The chair then held subscriptions for Mr. Roosevelt to be in order and limited amounts to one dollar each. Men with hats and baskets went down the aisles and returned with the stack of banknotes before the hall had been half covered.

A youthful orator got the attention of the chair. "I want to put in a nomination a matchless man of the people," he cried. "One who has done much for their uplift and is continuing to do so. I want to nominate William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska."

The applause had not died down before a voice shouted: "Nebraska subscribes the first hundred. The rest was pledged in a jiffy. The nomination of persons of public renown continued until $65,000 had been pledged for mission work.

Just after the convention adjourned until Monday, the choir of 600 accompanied by probably 2,000 or more delegates, marched to the capital grounds. The choir ranged along on the steps and the plaza was nearly filled, while a praise service was held in the open air.

PROMISED WEALTH TO THEIR VICTIMS

Philadelphia, May 23.—At a hearing before a U. S. commissioner here on Saturday E. A. Starkloff and Geo. W. Post, accused of being green goods swindlers and confidence men, were held in $12,000 and $11,000 bail, respectively, for a hearing on June 1 on charges of using the mails to defraud.

Thirteen letters alleged to have been sent by the prisoners to prospective victims in England and Scotland were produced. They are alleged to have been mailed from this city and were addressed to persons who had been dead but a short time.

The letters held out promises of wealth through the discovery of gold mines in which the families of the persons addressed were interested.

BRAVE COP PUTS OUT THE BOMB

New York, May 23.—Policeman Edward Mahoney yesterday seized a bomb with a lighted fuse and dipped it into a puddle of water in the street. His act saved about 200 men from possible injury.

When Salvatore Maculaso, a barber, opened his shop in the first floor of a Bowery lodging-house he saw the bomb. He knew that Tony Geroli, owner of the shop, had been receiving Black Hand letters, and he stood petrified with fright.

Mahoney noticed the man and went to him. Maculaso could not speak, but pointed at the sputtering thing under the door. Mahoney ran for it. He tried to stamp out the fuse, but failed.

RAN AGROUND IN THICK FOG

Port Colborne, Ont., May 23.—The steamer Rosemount and barge Hamilton ran ashore at an early hour yesterday morning in the thick fog about nine miles west of here, at a point known as Kinnards Point. Four tugs are trying to release them, and part of their cargo is being jettisoned. They are coal laden from Cleveland and Ashtabula to Kingston, and are owned by the Montreal Transportation Co. of Montreal.

Paper Company Strike Settled.

New York, May 23.—All the striking employes of the International Paper Co. will return to work Monday morning under the terms of an agreement entered into Saturday between officers of the company and officers of the Pulpmakers and Papermakers' Union.

The men received an advance of six per cent. affective August 1, and have gained recognition of the union.

SALIENT POINTS IN THE GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION IN BRUSSELS

Following what seems to be the fashion in modern international exhibitions, the great exposition in Brussels, Belgium, was considerably short of being ready when it was formally opened last month. It was, however, further along than several others have been in recent years, and there was full warrant for the enthusiasm shewn by the throng of visitors when the young King of the Belgians officiated at the exposition's dedication. Since then a deal of work has been accomplished in buildings and grounds, and in the placing of exhibits, and the visitor to the Belgian metropolis now finds the big world's fair well worth attending. A visit to the exposition was a feature of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's entertainment in Brussels.

Opening of the Brussels exposition is regarded by the Belgians as really marking the passing of the old regime of the late King Leopold and the beginning of the new regime of his successor. The fair is approached through the Avenue Louise, and touches one side of the beautiful Bois de la Cambre.

KING MAKES GOOD START; ALREADY PROVEN HIS ABILITY

The Trying Days Since His Accession During Which He Has Had all the Detail of the Funeral to Attend to Have Shown Him a Man of Great Capacity.

London, May 23—London correspondents were at the time of the King's accession, able to quote a high authority for the statement that George V. was a man of qualities that would surprise the world, which had, to some extent, come to look upon him as a rather colorless person whose domestic virtues were his best recommendation.

These two past weeks have revealed him in an unexpectedly favorable light. In fact, he is declared on responsible authority to have evolved order out of the chaos which followed his father's sudden death. For a time something very like confusion prevailed. The public had an inkling of this fact from the many changes that were made in the arrangements from day to day—the three-fold postponement of the proclamation at the last minute, the extraordinary typographical errors that crept into its text, the uncertainty as to the date and route of the funeral, the delay in the issue of the order for public mourning, the absence of a fixed period in the first order, necessitating the issue of a second—all pointed to the strain imposed on the official world.

It was King George alone who decided that there should be a public lying in state for King Edward's body. In that he certainly gauged the public feeling better than the officials who had categorically stated at the outset that this ceremony was not to be thought of.

He directly supervised all the arrangements of the funeral and had submitted to him the many delicate questions of precedence which had puzzled the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk. He selected the music to be played and made modifications in the route first proposed, which are generally admitted to have been advantageous.

In the midst of these activities the business of state claimed a not inconsiderable portion of the King's time. The swearing in of the Ministers, for instance, involved in interviews of no perfunctory character. Then there was the mine disaster at Whitehaven, and both the King and Queen, amid their own grief and urgent preoccupations, found time for repeated enquiries about the entombed men, and were ready with both sympathy and practical help for the sufferers.

The reception of foreign monarchs entailed no little expenditure of time and energy on the part of the King, who also received the heads of the special foreign missions at Marlborough House. He is understood to have made a deep impression on Mr. Roosevelt.

Not the least among King George's anxieties must have been the anxiety that he felt for his mother, Queen Alexandra. King George has been in constant communication with his mother, regarding the details which he felt she had the best right, as the Queen Consort of Edward VII., to settle, and, in every possible particular, her wishes have prevailed.

Queen Alexandra's future role is a matter of deep interest. She is expected to go to Sandringham, which is now her personal property, but it is not expected that she will, in any sense, bury herself there. In fact, it is supposed that she will essay to play in London a role somewhat similar to that which the Dowager Queen Margarita played in Rome for some years after the death of King Humbert, and that, in the course of time, she will set up a court of her own.

King's Message.

London, May 23.—King George has begun his reign with an act of clemency, granting remission of short sentences and reduction of others throughout the kingdom, these including the army and navy. He has also issued a touching letter "To my people," expressing grateful appreciation of the affection and loving devotion the nation has shown in the face of "a sorrow so sudden and unlooked for that it might well have been overwhelming."

"But the sentiments it has invoked," continues the King, "have made me realize that it is a loss common to me and my people. They share it with me; I do not stand alone. With such thoughts I take courage and hopefully look to the future, strong in my faith in God, trusting my people and cherishing the laws and constitution of my beloved country."

King Will Keep Racing Stable.

New York, May 23.—It is announced that King George intends to maintain a royal racing stable at Newmarket and a breeding stud at Sandringham, and that he will patronize racing on the same extensive scale as his father.

Error on Coffin Plate.

London, May 23.—A curious error was made in the inscription on King Edward's coffin. The last line of it read, "Regnique Sui IX," that is, "and in the ninth year of his reign."

Edward's reign began on Jan. 23, 1901, and the ninth year was completed on Jan. 21, 1910. Consequently he died in the tenth year of his reign, not the ninth, as the inscription on the coffin has it.

DIDN'T KNOW SHE WAS MARRIED

Boston, May 23.—Judge Pierce of the Supreme Court granted an annulment of the marriage of Florence D. Howland, adopted daughter of J. F. Howland of Commonwealth avenue, to Arthur W. Foster of Boston and New York, on the ground that at the time of her marriage on Jan. 2 she was under the influence of drugs and intoxicants.

A justice of the peace performed the ceremony at his house on Shawmut avenue. He and several witnesses testified that Miss Howland acted strangely and that when she was told she had been married, she cried out, "No, no, no!" She asserted that much of the time her mind was a blank, and when Foster told her several mornings later that they were married she did not believe it.

BLAMES OFFICIALS FOR HER DEATH

Detroit, Mich., May 23.—"When you take my body back home, stop long enough in Port Huron to tell the immigration officials there that the body in the box is that of the poor old woman they kept for hours in that cold shed and that she caught cold and died as a result of it." Mrs. Mary Ann Vincent, 70 years old, uttered this reproach as she lay dying Saturday in the hotel of her grandson, John Vincent at Flint, Mich. Mrs. Vincent, a resident of Paris, Ont., started from that town last Wednesday to come to Flint. It is alleged that she was detained by the immigration officials in Port Huron from early Wednesday morning till that evening. The officials deny her story.

RECORD TRIP BY LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS

Niagara Falls, Ont., May 23.—Over 2,000 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who have been holding their national meeting in Detroit, were in this city Saturday on a sightseeing trip. They came as guests of the Michigan Central Railroad Co., which brought them on two trains of 12 cars each, treating them to one of the most remarkable rides in the history of railroading. The first train, consisting of 12 vestibuled cars, carrying 1,134 delegates, made the run from Windsor to Falls View, 224 miles, in 217 minutes. The train made no stops in the entire distance, slowed down but twice, once while running through St. Thomas and again while crossing the drawbridge at Welland. This run was made by the second train in 224 minutes, a mile a minute for the entire distance.

LITTLE WILSON SCOTT STOLEN BY TWO MEN AND A WOMAN

Four-Year-Old Sun of Mrs. Margaret Scott is Carried Off and His Father is Suspected—Alarm is Not Given Until an Hour Later.

Windsor, May 23.—This city was the scene of a bold kidnapping Saturday afternoon. A party, of two men and one woman, whose identity is, as yet, uncertain, drove up Dougall avenut in a big, black touring car, and in plain sight of at least half a scor of people, picked up and carried away with them Wilson Scott, the four-year-old son of Mrs. Margaret Scott, of 21 Elliott street. The little fellow made no outcry whatever, and was evidently too much astonished to offer any objection when the woman descended from the car and, taking him up in her arms, walked quickly back. A man, who had been lying under a rug at the bottom of the car, rose quickly at her approach, and, taking the boy from her, put him down inside the tonneau. The automobile immediately started at full speed, and, passing out of Dougall avenue in a cloud of dust, was quickly lost to view.

The whole affair occurred so quickly that no time was given for an alarm, and it was not until after the kidnappers had been gone for nearly an hour that the police headquarters were notified. Police Sergant Jackson was detailed to the case, and took up the chase in a second auto. The train of the black car was picked up just at the city limits, and from there until Essex was reached the police car broke all speed records, covering the eighteen miles in less than half an hour. Here the trail was lost again, and until Blenheim was reached, twenty-five miles further on. the pursuers were on a blind lead.

At Blenheim the car was reported to be nearly two miles ahead, and running at a fifty-mile rate, making no stops anywhere. It was nearly 10 o'clock before Jackson's auto arrived at Ridgetown, 70 miles from Windsor, and when it was ascertained that the kidnappers had passed through four hours before it was decided that further pursuit was useless. Meantime, Chief of Police Wills here had notified every city and town through which the party was likely to pass, and given a full description of the abductors. Up to last evening no trace of them has been discovered, and it is believed they may have abandoned their car and taken a railway train. The description of one of the men is given as five foot nine, smooth face, light curly hair, dark clothes, about 170 pounds. The woman is not more than 20, with sallow complexion, brown straw hat, black ribbons.

GERMAN EYES NOW ON PERSIA

Berlin, May 23.—Unless all indications fail Europe will very shortly be face to face with another international political situation of the same grave character as the Moroccan crisis of 1905-6. The apple of discord is Persia and the stormy petrel is Germany.

It became known last week that the Kaiser's ambassador at London, Count Wolff-Metternich sur Gracht, had been instructed to register a most vigorous protest to the British Foreign Office against the Anglo-Russian attempt to monopolize the economic and financial opportunities of Persia. Count Pourtales, the German ambassador at St. Petersburg, has been directed to make similar representations to the Russian Government.

German diplomatic strategists figure that the domestic political crisis in England, as well as the situation consequent upon the death of King Edward, makes it impossible for Great Britain on this occasion to assert herself as forcibly or resolutely as she was prepared to do during the Balkan crisis.

ACCIDENT TO BLANCHE WALSH

Pittsburg, May 23.—Blanche Walsh, who is appearing in "The Test" at the Nixon Theatre here, probably will be disfigured for life as the result of an accident at the Colonial Hotel on Thursday night. Miss Walsh bumped her head violently against a door, breaking the skin on her face.

She smeared her face with grease paint, and almost immediately the entire left side became black and began to swell. She went through her part Saturday night, but fainted twice during the performance.

Inventor Dead.

Rochester, N.Y., May 23.—Captain G. W. Ruggles, who invented the Ruggles' rotary snowplow, and made notable improvements in the methods of constructing canoes, died at Charlotteville, near this city, last night.

Great Conductor Ill.

New York, May 23.—Private messages received here state that Hans Richter, one of the greatest of Wagnerian conductors, is seriously ill in London.

OPERATION PERFORMED ON A TRAIN

New York, May 23.—On an improvised operating table stretched over the tops of seats of a car on a Long Island Railroad train, James Corwood of Bellemore, Long Island, lay senseless Saturday while a surgeon amputated one of his legs. While the operation was being performed the train was making a fast rnu to Jamaica.

Corwood was run down by the train at Bellemore, and was put on board to be taken to a hospital at Jamaica. A telegram was sent ahead to Rockville Centre, in response to which a physician boarded the train at that point. He saw that an immediate operation was needed, and while the car lurched and pitched with the motion of the speeding train, he went ahead coolly with his task. He had completed his operation before the train reached Jamaica.

At the hospital it was said that Corwood had a chance of recovery. But for the prompt treatment on the train the chances would have been virtually nil. The physician who performed the operation refused to give his name.

Ex-Ald. Joseph Board was found dying in Dundurn Park, Hamilton, with symptoms resembling strychnine poisoning.

The dead body of a man named Fowlds or Fowler was found on the railway track near Atherley, and an inquest is in progress.

A Hungarian geologist, who has made an examination of the surroundings, asserts that there are great cities lying at the bottom of the Caribbean Sea.

An inquest is being held at St. Thomas into the death of Richard Rock, who was reported killed by a fall from a bridge. There is a suspicion of murder in the case.

EXPECT TROOPS TO SURRENDER

Bluefields, Nicaragua, May 23.—"Have enemy completely surrounded and cut off from ammunition and provisions. Expect surrender any time."

This was the message that came to General Juan Estrada, leader of the insurgent forces, from General Luis Mena Saturday. The Estrada forces, under Mena, according to the plan which had been decided upon, executed their first move Saturday evening at Rama. General Mena allowed Gen. Chavarria of the Madriz forces to close upon Rama, when he moved a small body of his forces in a feint to attack Chavarria's position. At the same time Gen. Moncado, at the head of an insurgent detachment, made a forced march from Muelle de Buyes, forty miles west of Rama, and attacked Chavarria's ammunition and provision train.

UNCLE SAM WILL MEDIATE

Washington, D.C., May 23.—The Government of Peru has indicated to the State Department its informal acceptance of the proposition submitted jointly by the Governments of the United States, Brazil and Argentina, looking to an amicable settlement of the boundary differences between that country and Ecuador.

The Ecuadorian Government, however, has made no response as yet, but the State Department officials entertain no doubt whatever that within the next few days full endorsement of the proposition will be forthcoming.

DEATH LIST NOW ELEVEN

Ottawa, May 23.—Two of the injured in the Hull explosion of a fortnight ago succumbed yesterday. Geo. Coleman, aged 19, of Wrightville, Que., who was struck on the knee by a flying stone, seemed to be recovering, but blood poisoning developed and he was removed from the hospital to his home to die. Arthur Garneau, aged 2[illegible] of Hull, had his spine injured, but his recovery from the first seemed hopeless. The death list is now 11.

An Old Proverb That Came True.

London, May 23.—An old English proverb reads:

If our lord falls on our lady's lap
England shall have a great mishap.

This means that if Good Friday falls on Lady Day, the Feast of Our Lady, England will meet with some misfortune. This year Good Friday did fall on Lady Day, March 25. The old proverb has come only too true.

A CATERPILLAR PLAGUE

There is grave danger of a caterpillar plague in Peterborough county. Many of the trees and bushes in Peterborough and vicinity are full of caterpillar nests. Now is the time to destroy them. A few weeks later it will be too late to prevent great damage being done. Every citizen of Peterborough who has trees or bushes in his grounds and every farmer in the county should at once make a vigilant search for the pest and destroy every caterpillar nest. A little trouble taken now may save the county and the city many thousands of dollars. Caterpillars feed on leaves, fruit and vegetables, and are very destructive.

LEADER MACKAY'S MISTAKE

We publish to-day an article from the Ottawa Journal describing the unfortunate position of the town of Fort Frances, Ont., as a result of an agreement with an American company made by A. MacKay, at present leader of the Liberals in the Ontario Legislature, when he was Minister of Crown Lands in the Ross Government. Whether Mr. MacKay blundered into the arrangement through lack of knowledge and business sense, or deliberately and knowingly followed the usual Liberal custom of playing into the hands of American monopolists is uncertain. In any case the agreement was very discreditable to him, and unfortunately it makes it difficult for the Whitney Government to do justice to the town of Fort Frances without breaking the agreement made by Mr. MacKay with the American company in the name and on behalf of the Government of Ontario.

AFRAID OF NEGOTIATIONS

Now Montreal's great commercial organizations proclaim hostility to even discussion of possible better trade relations. Which seems to us a pity. Why object to a friendly talk with our neighbor?—Ottawa Journal.

Why? Because experience shows that if the Laurier Government open negotiations with the United States they are likely to give something for nothing. The Liberal leaders have two ideas in their minds which make any sort of conference dangerous. The first is that the United States' market is of such importance to Canada that it would be worth while to sacrifice a great many Canadian industries if, as a result of doing so, we could get the door of the Unites States market half-way open. The second is that in any negotiations with the United States we must yield something in order to maintain friendly relations. Montreal business men have good reason to object to any trade negotiations whatever with the United States. Let the Government at Ottawa make a tariff to suit the needs of the Canadian people and never mind what the Americans think or say about it. The Americans have never tried to please Canadians in making their tariff. They have always solely considered their own interests, and they will have greater respect for the Canadian people if we show them that we do not intend to depend upon the United States for any class of goods that we can make ourselves.

THE ST. LAWRENCE WATER POWER

It is evident that the American capitalists who were prevented by the Conservative Opposition from getting control of the St. Lawrence water power during the last session of Parliament still expect to get what they want from the Canadian Government.

There is an act known as the "general dam act," now being considered by the United States Senate Committee on Commerce. There is a clause in this bill which provides that franchises for dams shall be limited to a period of fifty years. A delegation of capitalists interested in the St. Lawrence water power project appeared before the committee on May 19 and represented that unless this act was amended they would be unable to obtain a desired grant from Canada, and their operations, under a perpetual charter, granted by the State of New York, would have to cease. They asked the committee to make an exception in case of franchises involving international water powers. The Senate committee is now considering the advisability of making the required amendment.

From an American point of view, perhaps a good deal may be said in favor of a perpetual franchise in this case if it will enable these American capitalists to make an agreement with the Canadian Government whereby the great St. Lawrence water power can be utilized to build up great industries in the United States.

But whether this company gets a perpetual franchise in the United States or not the Canadian Parliament should never agree to allow these capitalists to get control of the Canadian half of this great waterway. Any works required, either for power purposes or for navigation should be undertaken by the Government.

ONTARIO'S MANY MURDERS

A Hamilton paper explains the numerous murders in Ontario recently by saying that the stress of modern life is the cause. It compares the rush and excitement of modern city life in Canada with the quiet of the farm and the village in the days of old. But the fact is that a large proportion of the recent murders in Ontario have occurred on farms or in small country towns and villages where the modern excitement described by the Hamilton paper does not exist.

Whatever the cause may be, the Province is getting a bad name. Some of the crimes committed have been by newly-arrived immigrants of the lowest class. In some cases the murderers are descendants of low class immigrants of a generation ago. The foundation stock of the Canadian people was of good, pure, honest blood. That is largely the reason why the country was formerly so free from crime. We are now beginning to reap the effect of unrestricted immigration of the dregs of old world population. The Government cannot be too strict about enforcing regulations against the immigration of criminals and the children of criminals. Clean, healthy, honest people should be welcome to the country, no matter how poor they are, but the diseased and criminal classes should be kept out.

FRUITLESS WALK FOR LINDSAY POLICEMEN

The Lindsay Warder says:—An unknown man about 70 years of age with nothing on his person to identify him, was found dead one mile east of Atherley Junction on Saturday morning at five o'clock, by five men who, it is said, are tramps. There was nothing to show that the man had met with foul play. The body was removed to Orillia, where it now lies, the five men notifying the operator at Atherley of his death. The old man had no money and it is thought by the railway officials that he was a tramp and had been murdered by the five men who found him and they at once notified the authorities to arrest the five men.

The five men who were supposed to have found the body arrived in Lindsay this morning and remained for some time at Santiago, east of the town. Trainmaster Irwin notified Chief Vincent to arrest the men. Chief Vincent secured the services of Inspector Thornbury and Geo. Foster, but when they arrived at Santiago the men had gone east.

Chief Vincent and his two assistants returned at noon, having walked as far east as Reaboro. There they were told that the tramps had gone east some time before they arrived. Chief Vincent then notified the train crew on the eleven o'clock train, which had just arrived at Peterborough, to stop and arrest the men if they saw them. A mile east of Reaboro they caught up to the tramps, stopped the train and arrested them and took them to Peterborough and placed them in the jail.

RECTOR'S GIRL GOT RECKLESS

On Friday morning a small stir was caused in the dining room of the Hotel Randolph, when Miss Dorothy Orville, leading lady in "The Girl From Rector's" Co., threw a jug of cream in the face of Harry Paul, another member of the company.

The two had been quarrelling during the night, and when they sat at the breakfast table the climax came when the leading lady did the milk spilling. The clerk in the hotel had threatened to eject Paul. The company are at present in Ottawa, putting on their performance.—Kingston Standard.

MISTOOK CLOUD FOR THE COMET

Rev. Dr March received a message from Yerkes Observatory this morning stating that the comet had been seen from the Observatory with a 40 inch telescope in the western sky last Friday, but that it was by no means a bright object.

Dr Marsh states that several people rang him up and remarked on the brightness of the comet. The doctor says that he himself saw the heavenly wanderer, but it is by no means brilliant. Those who witnessed the bright patch of cloud they thought was the comet were mistaken, as the streamer was simply an auroral display.

NOW SOLD IN CANADA

In Less Than Three Year's Parisian Sage, The Splendid Hair Tonic is Sold all Over Canada

There is a reason for the phenomenal sale of Parisian Sage in Canada during the past three years.

And the reason is plain to all. Parisian Sage does just what it is advertised to do.

Ask Wm. Madill about it. He will tell you that he rigidly guarantees it to cure dandruff, stop falling hair or itching scalp in two weeks, or money back.

There is no reason whatever why any man or woman should fail to take advantage of the above generous offer.

But one thing that has made Parisian Sage is its peculiar power to turn the harsh, unattractive hair that many women possesses into luxuriant and radiant hair in a short time. Women of refinement the country over are using it and it never disappoints.

Sold everywhere, and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill, for 50 cents a large bottle.

Railroad officials concede that all commuters' rates in New York territory will be increased.

His Courtship

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

He placed a chair for her, the only one in the room, and sat down himself on the foot of the bed.

He felt rather at a loss as to how he should deal with her. It was hard to have to disappoint the bright expectation of that pretty young face.

"Would it mean anything to you, Eunice," he began, surprised at himself to note how his voice instinctively softened when he spoke to her as one would naturally modify one's tones in speaking to a timid, sensitive child, "to be told you were born of very good blood?"

"Why should it not?"

"But in your isolation from the world can you possibly have learned the significance of such a fact?"

"It means, doesn't it, that my parents were people of gentle and noble minds?"

"Well," he smiled, "we do not always attach just that meaning to it. Some very degenerate families are proud of their good blood."

"Meaning merely their inherited rank? Yes, I know," she nodded. "But—

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
A man's a man for a' that.

"I should like to know that there is no taint of dishonor in my blood."

"You have the comforting knowledge. Your father was a New York lawyer of high standing and stainless reputation."

Her face glowed at his words.

"I have a pride in it," she answered him.

"You may well have. Now," he went on, "as to the current story about this room and its connection with you, I will tell you what it is."

He told her then nearly all that he knew, withholding only her prospects of great wealth and the source of his knowledge of her. If she knew of the existence of the "confession" he had found she would have a right to see it. He did not wish her to see it until he had ascertained what the probability was that her aunt would recognize her claims.

Eunice heard him with breathless attention. But the break in the continuity of his story bewildered her. "But how, then, did you come to learn what you say is unknown to all others—that this man and woman who brought me here were not my parents and that I am the daughter of a New York lawyer, from whom they stole me away from my home?"

"I can't tell you that tonight, Eunice, how I came by my knowledge. It is better that I do not—just yet. Trust me and have patience."

She looked at him, the brightness of her face unclouded by his denial, but she did not reply.

"You do trust me?"

"Why should I not?" she asked, with naive surprise.

"In fact," he responded, "I don't know just why you should. You don't know anything about me."

"I know everything about you," sprang from her, "and nothing."

"Now," he protested, "that sounds as subtle as though it came from Georgiana. What does it mean?"

"With my heart I know you. With my head I don't understand you at all."

"You pay me the highest compliment if your unsullied heart teaches you an instinctive trust of me. With your head you don't understand me?" he questioned her curiously.

"I don't understand why, if you love Miss Ellery, you should go out of your way to avoid her, even disguising yourself and feigning uncouthness."

Her simplicity afforded him the liveliest entertainment.

"So that has been bothering you, has it? Well, you see, I came here to be quiet, and Miss Ellery isn't, just to say, a restful person."

She looked unenlightened. "But you love people who are not restful?"

"I don't always love to be with them."

"Am I restful?"

She asked it with her look and tone of wistfulness which he was learning to watch for in talking to her.

"If I told you you were, what inference would you draw? You are such an alarmingly logical little person one has to be wary or be trapped into all sorts of admissions one wouldn't dream of making."

"Is it a commendation to be told you are 'restful?' I would suppose that people who count for something in our lives do not rest us. They stir us."

She spoke with evident feeling. Surely, surely, she was not thinking of Abe! He would not believe it.

"And we like to be stirred, don't we?" he acquiesced. "That's what we live for—to experience moments or hours of thrilling sensations."

"Does Miss Ellery make you experience those?"

"Those?"

"Moments or hours of thrilling sensations?"

His shoulders shook with soundless laughter. But he pulled himself together. "I have reason to believe she would if she could."

He read in her open countenance that he spoke in enigmas. But he did not offer to explain. He vaguely wondered why she seemed to want to talk of Miss Ellery with her own exciting story so freshly put to her.

He watched her without speaking, as, looking away from him, she toyed thoughtfully with her apron strings. Presently she drew a long breath, lifted her hand to push a strand of hair from her forehead and again rested her eyes upon his face.

"I don't even know my own name!" she said. "Even that I must learn from you. What is it?"

"I understand you have always been called Eunice Morningstar?"

"Yes."

"Will you have patience with me? I don't want to tell you even that just yet."

"Will it be long before you tell me?"

"I will tell you everything just as soon as I possibly can. I know it must be maddening to you to be put off like this, but it is out of consideration for you (for no other reason) that I want to postpone telling you some things."

"I will wait."

"Thank you—for your trust in me."

"So many things puzzle me, though."

"Necessarily!"

"I can't see why Mr. and Mrs. Morningstar have thought it necessary to keep the story of this room from me. How could it have harmed them to let me know?"

"They have kept it from you because there was one phase of it which, from their standpoint, it was very necessary that you should not know. It was for fear that you should hear this from the neighbors that they have always kept you isolated. Listen to me, Eunice! When that woman died the sum of $4,000 was found pinned to your dress, it was of course manifestly to pay those who should take care of you. The Morningstars kept this fact from you, making believe you owed them a great debt for their charity toward you."

Eunice gazed at him in amazement, an intensified excitement in her eyes.

"I am not, then, under the least obligation to them?" she said breathlessly. "It is this, then, which Abe has meant by his many insinuations that if I knew a certain thing he knew I would defy his parents. I never dreamed of anything like this. Then I am free—free and not a slave!"

"So then," he abruptly asked, unable to repress the question that sprang to his lips, "you will defy them and marry Abe? It has been your supposed obligation to them that has held you back from doing what they disapproved?"

She looked at him, an expression in her eyes that was inexplicable to him. She did not answer him. Suddenly her lashes drooped, and to his consternation he saw two great tears roll over her face. Her relation with Abe was actually a matter of deep feeling. It was, to be sure, not more impossible than everything else about her. There might be plenty of excuse for her being in love with Abe in view of her lifelong environment, but he felt an intolerance, almost a disgust, with it that rather dampened his enthusiasm in championing her cause. She didn't seem worth while if she were capable of that. At the same time her distress gave him an impulse to go to her, child that she was, take out his handkerchief and wipe away her tears. Being kind to her was a luxurious pleasure, she was so grateful for kindness. But he felt the need of restraining himself. He abruptly asked her a question.

"Why should I mind it?"

"Why do you bear it so meekly when Mrs. Morningstar browbeats and insults you before other people too? Why do you allow her to?"

She had sunk back in her chair limply. The warmth and color had all gone from her. She looked up at him, but the fire had died out of her eyes.

"Why should I mind it? It is to me as a hen's cackle."

Her words gave Kinross a shock of astonishment. He felt a thrill of pride in her, mingled with a humorous sense of her remoteness from all ordinary standards. So it was not poverty of spirit that made her so forbearing, but a largeness of mind that made the woman's noisy upbraidings of no least moment to her.

"You are happy, indeed, to be able to rise above it instead of letting it make you suffer misery and rage."

She did not answer. The subject was evidently without interest to her.

"But let us not speak of her," he said, anxious to restore the radiance that had so suddenly and mysteriously left her. "I have a notion that I want to examine you—may I?—as to your knowledge of these books," glancing toward the bookcase, "with a view to getting you employment if it prove necessary."

"If it prove necessary? You mean," she asked, her voice subdued, her eyes again downcast, "if I don't marry Abe?"

"Well, yes," he lied.

Her lip quivered, but she caught it under her teeth and after an instant answered him quietly.

"I am ready to be examined."

Evidently he wounded her by his references to Abe. He did not understand it. However, he would avoid that subject, too, hereafter.

He told her then what he had not mentioned before to any of the family—that he held the chair of psychology in the college of the nearby city, and he explained to her that by virtue of his profession he could the better "examine" her.

When he spoke of himself she listened with an interest that brought back to her face some of the brightness which had momentarily left it.

The examination which followed proved to be the first in his experience in which he found enjoyment. It was not quite the conventional examination. It soon degenerated into a form, at least, of a talk about books, though Kinross' mental attitude the while continued to be that of a schoolmaster examining a pupil. He had never before found any pupil quite so interesting. Her quaint talk revealed to him how much more real to her were the dream creatures of her books than were the people of her actual world.

"It seems so strange, so unreal, to me that I should be speaking out like this of my secret thoughts of things," she said, a light of wonder in her eyes when he had led her on to talk of the tragic mating of Lydgate with Rosamond in "Middlemarch;" of the irony of fate in the gifted doctor's so narrowly missing his true mate, the high minded Dorothea; of the horror it must have been to the mother heart of Mrs. Copperfield to die and leave David to the mercy of that dreadful stepfather; of the deep significance of that cry wrung from Guido in the hour of his extremity, in which when all other sources of help are closed to him he calls upon Pompilia for mercy, confessing in that cry what only his fear of the gallows could extort from him—his faith that when all others failed him she whom he had traduced before all Rome would surely come to his aid; of the penalty which life exacts for indecision of purpose or failure to respond to the vital call of nature through cowardise or other weakness, as in "The Statue and the Bust." He was astonished to find how keenly she felt and saw much which he would have deemed impossible to one of such limited experiences. Untrammeled by the world's conventions in forming her opinions or in taking impressions of things, there were a freedom and a breadth in her way of looking at life (the life of her world, peopled by characters out of books) and a candor in her speech that were refreshing, to say the least. Her own delight in speaking for the first time with one who could understand her "secret life," as she called it, was evident in her beaming countenance.

There was an excitement to him, too, in their communion. For the first time in his experience he was talking to a woman with a spontaneity, a naturalness, that seemed to open up the floodgates of his soul.

He had never before met any woman who seemed to him to combine such evident ardor of temperament with such finesse. Surely here was a unique individuality, he thought, with a thrill of happy anticipation, the long hunger of his unsatisfied manhood leaping to meet the vague yearning for life which he read in her strangely expressive eyes, with their passionate fire.

He was warned at length by the sputtering of the wick in his lamp how the hours had flown.

"It is goodby as well as good night," he said as he rose and held out his hand to her. "I am going away tomorrow."

The sudden blankness of her face almost alarmed him. She turned white, and she seemed unable to speak.

"But I shall be back within a week," he hastened to reassure her. "And I shall be able to tell you everything then, I hope. Did you think I meant I was going to break my promise to you?"

"Going away?" she repeated dully, ignoring his question. "You are going away?"

"Believe me," he begged her, "that I shall keep my promise to you. You shall know all that I know within a week."

"I do believe it. It is not that. It is—that you are going away."

He was puzzled. "It will be dull for you, you mean, after the excitement of our talks in this room."

She drew a long breath, and her eyes fell from their intent gaze into his.

"I mean—since you came here the world has seemed full of light. When you go no doubt it will return to its original color."

"What color is that?" he asked, smiling.

"A pale drab."

He did not for an instant give a sentimental interpretation to her words.

"Perhaps it will be well for your eyes to have a week's rest from the lurid light of my presence, for I hope to bring back news to you that will dazzle you sure enough unless I am greatly disappointed."

"News that will dazzle me? You mean that you are going to try to secure me a teacher's position?" she asked, with humble gratefulness.

"You would call that dazzling news, Eunice, if I came back with a position for you at teaching school? Well, well, everything depends upon one's point of view, of course. There are some young women to whom that would appear a 'pale drab.' I shouldn't wish it to my meanest enemy."

"Then that isn't what you meant?"

"You will be disappointed if I say no?"

"I am in such suspense about my future. I am quite determined to leave here and it would be a relief to me to have something definite in view."

"You may feel entirely at peace about that, Eunice. I promise you I'll take care of it for you."

"You are sure you can find me a place and that I am not imposing on your kindness to ask it of you?"

"If I take a day off and roll up my sleeves to it I may be able to accomplish it—don't give it a moment's anxiety!"

The contrast between the prosaic lot of a teacher to which she looked as a good almost too great to be hoped for and the brilliant fate he knew to be possibly hers struck him dramatically.

All the while he had been talking to her tonight he had been trying to catch sight of that index to her identity given in the "confession"—the two little moles under her left ear. He had not been able to see them, and the fear began to trouble him that they were not there to be seen. He now decided that he could not go on his errand to her aunt without this proof to add to all his other evidence.

He put his question with a directness that startled her.

"Pardon my inquisitiveness, but do you have two small moles on your neck under your left ear?"

His inquiry seemed to her irrelevant to the point of madness.

"What has that to do with it?"

"To do with what?"

"With anything. I mean what do you want to know for?"

"To be able to identify you as the daughter of your father. Please tell me."

"Yes, I have."

"May I see them?"

She turned her head and he saw the small dark spots on her white neck.

"Thank you. If you had the least idea what those two spots may mean to you, little girl!—now, if I don't go away at once I shall be tempted to tell you the whole thing. It will be an infinitely better story, I confidently believe, if I keep it until my return."

He clasped her hand, which rested cold in his own. Then he left her for a few hours' sleep before his departure in the early morning.

CHAPTER XIX.

MR. AND MRS. MORNINGSTAR held counsel together and came to some astute conclusions.

"If that there Doc didn't have somepin up his sleeve to down us with he wouldn't have the dare to speak up to us so positive," Mr. Morningstar gloomily reasoned. "To be sure, I wouldn't give in to him and make over all that there money to the girl if I didn't have afraid he'd squeeze me fur more'n that yet—like what he sayed he'd do."

"Abram Morningstar, you ain't going to up and throw $3,000 at that girl!" his wife exclaimed incredulously.

"Will you leave me know, then, how I'm gettin' out of it?" he demanded.

They were together in the kitchen just after Kinross' departure on his week's absence. Mr. Morningstar was still too ill from his cold to leave the settee, and his wife was in the act of putting a mustard plaster on him when he opened up the discussion of what lay so heavily on their hearts.

"He must have took a shine to Eunice," Mrs. Morningstar lamented, "to be takin' up fur her like what he's doin'. I don't know what's got into the men, such dumm taste as they all show. There's Ollie—she's twicet as fat and has nicer cloes and near twicet the schoolin' as what Eunice's got. The girl's just that tricky she makes eyes at the men behind our backs, pop, that's wot!"

"I've been thinkin' it out how we could spite him back," Mr. Morningstar said, lowering his voice and indicating with a twirl of his thumb the departed boarder. "If we do have to give Eunice them $3,000 we kin keep it in the family and get ahead of that darned towner by marryin' her to Abe right aways. Ain't? You see, what that city sharper's after is to git them $3,000 fur hisself. It ain't often a girl—even a towner—has that much to bring to her mister. Abe couldn't git no girl round here with that much. If we do have to give her the money we couldn't do better by Abe than to leave him marry her."

"Well, mebbe," Mrs. Morningstar answered, considering the matter as she buttoned her husband's shirt over the plaster. "But it would rile me to have to marry our Abe to a girl we brang up on charity."

"That ain't neither here nor there," Mr. Morningstar sneered irritably at this sentiment. "What we want is to settle these here finances without no more loss than we can't help."

"There's this to say," Mrs. Morningstar added—"if she marries Abe mebbe that underhanded Hen Mucklehenny will be comin' back to our Ollie when he sees he can't have Eunice."

INFLUENCE OF SCRIPTURES ON OUR NATIONAL LIFE

Struggle for English Liberty and Religious Freedom Indissolubly Bound Together—Eloquent and Appealing Sermon to Orange and Sons of England Lodges at St. James' Church.

The Orangement of the city and the local society of the Sons of England, numbering altogether one hundred and sixty, attended divine worship in St. James' Methodist church last night, when an impressive and timely sermon was preached by the pastor, the Rev. J. G. Brown, from Psalm 16, 6: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage."

In a few introductory words the pastor extended a welcome to the visiting brethren. The constitution of the Sons of England Benefit Society set forth among the aims of the organization, "The bringing together of Englishmen and their male descendants for their mutual benefit and support and maintenance of the British Connection." It farther requires that its members be of the Protestant faith. With common interests of loyalty to the Sovereign and unity of religious faith, it seemed very fitting that on the occasion of their attending divine worship they should be accompanied by the brethren of the Loyal Orange Lodge. Some elements of our natural heritage were briefly reviewed. Canada may be assumed to be a nation. We are in possession of the chief attributes of natinohood and are moved by the ambitions and hopes of natural life. Though the latest of the nations, we are by no means the least. In a broad dominion "extending from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" With a dominion that may be said to extend from sea and sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth, possessing resources and hidden treasures of wealth, wealth of farm, wealth of forest, wealth of sea and lake and river, wealth of income, treasures of wealth of material sort that surpass the power of man to confute. Not only what we have as yet discovered, but the almost unlimited possibilities of development in prairie lands, forest wealth and mineral store speak of great things soon to be, vast resources and hidden treasures of wealth in the almost unlimited possibilities for development, in the characteristics of the people vigor and health of mind and body, thrift, industry, perseverence in all these, we had received a goodly heritage. Canada, too, was a land of homes, comfortable and secure, and in every Canadian breast nature had breathed a consciousness of freedom and a true love of it. Our school systems, second to none in the world, testified to the desire to promote intelligence and to give every child the privilege of equipping himself dor life's work.

And we are proud of our place in the great empiore. We are part of a nation of free men, who never can be enslaved, with a history of glorions achievements and with noblest traditions. Our free institutions and responsible government had largely been tansplanted here from the mother country. This connection we prize and it is to be faithfully maintained, and its obligations not to be shirked.

Religious toleration, freedom to worship God, and the English translation of the Scriptures, are also great elements of our national inheritance. The late beloved Queen Victoria had declared the secret of England's greatness was the Bible. The preacher dwelt with some emphasis on the influence of the Scriptures as a factor in national life and their place in the Protestant faith. These we assert in the words of the article of religion "contain all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read theirin nor may be proved thereby is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an article of faith or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation. There is no other authority of equal rank, neither tradition of the church or the spiritual illumination of the individual believer. The authority of these latter is only that of the original deposit and it must in turn be tested by the original teaching of Christ and his Apostles.

And the Scriptures offer to us Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, the only mediator between the offended Creator and the sinful creature and man's salvation lies in his faith in this Redeemer. Anything that compromises this simple and absolute truth, anything that proposes to supplement Christ on the one side or faith on the other is treason to the Gospel.

The heritage that is ours was not gained, but by struggle and at great price. The lives of others had purchased it for us and we must hold it sacred. The struggles for our English liberty and for our religious freedom were indissolubly bound together. They had been carried on side by side.

What reason have we to believe that they are not bound to-gether to-day? The inviolability of the Protestant succession must be maintained if our liberties are to be secure.

In conclusion the brethren were urged to cultivate the spirit of true loyalty which ever recognizes the moral end for which the state exists. No man can be a patriot and be indifferent to the nation's welfare and the well-being of his fellow citizens. The cultivation of good citizenship was a worthy endeavor and a great obligation rested in the individual member or the order both in his private life and private conduct.

Unity was necessary in their work of mutual helpfullness and the order was congratulated upon its beneficient work.

Above all let us have faith in God. The Hebrew was taught to read the history of his people as the record of God's work and leading. Our heritage is from God and He will maintain it.

"Careless seems the Great Avenger;
History's pages but record,
One death-grapple in the darkness
'twixt all systems and the Word,
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the future and behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above His own."

During the service Mrs. Greenslade rendered very pleasingly "O Happy Day" and also took the solo parts in the anthems, "Now the Day is Over." The male quartette composed of Messrs Lee, Goodwin, Hey and Cole, rendered very ably the selection, "The Lord is My Shepherd."

YOUNG GORHAM PERMITTED TO VISIT HIS HOME YESTERDAY

James Gorham, accompanied by P. C's. Meagher and McGinty, was permitted to visit his home in Ashburnham on Sunday afternoon. As the young man stood and looked down upon the face of his dead mother he did not utter a word, but appeared to be deeply affected. He was allowed to remain at the house from half-past four till five o'clock before being taken back to jail.

STRANGE PHENOMENUM DRAWS ATTENTION TO THE MOON

On Saturday night one of the most extraordinary of natural phenomena ever witnessed by human eye was distinctly visible in Peterborough. This wonderful sight was seen by many citizens.

At exactly 8.42 p.m., around the clearly defined almost full moon was a slight haze. Exactly at 8.43 1-2 this white haze suddenly became illuminated with the exact colors of the rainbow. Starting from the circumference of the moon, in equal breadths were clearly seen, red orange, yellow, blue, green, violet and indigo. At 8.44 outside the colored circle appeared an absolutely white and clearly defined circle. At 8.57 the white outside circle disappeared suddenly and gradually, the colored disk faded away. The goddess of night, until 9.01 shone in all her splendor, surrounded by a vaguely outlined white haze. At 9.02, again the colored disk appeared enclosed in the outside white ring but not quite as intensively as before.

As these surrounding circles again faded away, just to the lower west side of the moon appeared a distinctly marked white cloud, or which, within, say 35 seconds, spread below the moon to the east. As quickly at thought this sub-lunar corona disappeared.

Rev. Dr. Marsh in conversation with the Review, stated that the scientific reason of the colorings was the approach of the low pressure of the atmosphere which is noticeable now.

INEXPERIENCED CANOISTS WERE DUCKED AT THE LOCKS

Three foolhardy canoeists had an experience in the water down by the locks Saturday afternoon about four o'clock that they will not soon forget and will probably be a lesson to them in the future. It appears that they had paddled down the channel and had taken their canoe down over the rollers at the locks and were preparing to continue on their journey, when Mr. Robert Jackson, who assists Mr. Wm. Collins, advised them not to proceed with three in the canoe, but they decided to go on. It is a well known fact that a steady hand is necessary to guide a canoe through the swift and treacherous current at this point and until the end of the long pier is reached, but these three young men appeared willing to take a chance. They didn't make good, however, for when a short distance from the pier, the canoe upset and the occupants were thrown into the water. Two of the three made for the pier and reached safety and the other stayed with the canoe. The Monarch and Mr. George Osborne's yacht were in the locks at the time and the men on the gates acted promptly and opened the south gate to enable the yacht to go to the rescue. The man in the water was taken from the water and to the shore. This is the first accident in the vicinity of the locks for this season, and it is only due to the promptness of the lockmen and Mr. Osborne that a drowning fatality is not recorded.

RUPTURE

Mr. A. Claverie
IS NOW AT
ORIENTAL HOTEL
UNTIL WEDNESDAY
From 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., and from 6 to 9 p.m.
GO AND SEE HIM.

I draw again the attention of those of my readers who are suffering from Rupture, that they are able now to secure a radical relief to their disease.

Mr. A. Claverie at the request of numerous persons, is come back to Peterborough. He is until Wednesday, at the Oriental Hotel, where all ruptured may go to consult him free.

The Apparatus and the Method of Mr. A. Claverie are too well known to day in Canada to praise any further their high qualities. I will simply state again that the main reasons which have made the Apparatus of Mr. A. Claverie absolutely incomparable, are the following:—

They maintain any kind of rupture, even the oldest, and this perfectly.

They never get out of place, no matter the exertion made.

They are extremely comfortable, and easy to wear, even by the most delicate persons.

They can easily be worn during the night.

They are light and absolutely invisible under the clothing.

THEY ARE DESIGNED UPON SCIENTIFIC AND MEDICAL LINES TO SECURE A DEFINITE CURE.

One may thus understand why this Apparatus has created a real REVOLUTION in the treatment of rupure and why they are accepted with SUCH ENTHUSIASM by the best doctors and the patients themselves.

There is not a ruptured in Peterborough who would lose this chance of securing safety and health.

INSTRUMENTS USED FOR THE STUDY OF HALLEY'S COMET.

COMET PROBLEMS.

The comet is now 19,500,000 miles distant from the earth. Look for it in the western sky after sunset if atmospheric conditions are clear.

The greatest telescope in the world is the forty-inch refractor of the Yerkes Observatory. It might be supposed that an astronomer who glues his eye to the end of that gigantic instrument would be rewarded with a sight that no pen can adequately describe. Strange as it may seem, the man who beholds Halley's comet with the naked eye at the end of May sees a spectacle far more theatrical than the astronomer at the eye-piece end of the Yerkes telescope. To the naked eye the comet is seen in its entirety, with its dazzling core and its delicately-arched, spreading tail. In the telescope the comet is seen highly magnified, but only in part, and that highly magnified portion, to the unpractised eye, seems disappointingly lacking in picturesque detail.

Although this huge instrument and others almost as large will be employed during the present return of Halley's comet, it will be the task of the telescopic camera to record those phenomena which the eye, even when armed with a mighty instrument, is unable to perceive. At the Yerkes Observatory, where Prof. Barnard, perhaps the most skilful astronomical photographer in the world, is stationed, the telescope which will be used for this photographic perception of ocularly indistinguishable details, will be not the enormous forty-inch instrument described, but what is known as the Bruce telescope of only ten inches aperture. The forty-inch telescope has a length of sixty-two feet, which is much too great for effective photographic work. What is needed is a happier relation of lens diameter to focal length. Hence the Bruce telescope, which has a focal length of fifty inches, is employed for obtaining those wonderful photographs for which Yerkes Observatory is famous.

The light of a comet is so feeble that snap shot pictures are out of the question. Exposures of many minutes are necessary. Hence the telescopic camera is accurately driven by clockwork or by electric motors to keep time with the comet as it moves. The photographic plate, therefore, records an apparently stationary image. The stars back of the comet usually appear on the plate as streaks of light, because the telescopic camera is so moved.

Our knowledge of the extremely rapid transformation of the tails of comets dates from the photographs of Swift's comet of 1892. To the eye that body was insignificant. On the photographic plate it showed the most extraordinary and rapid transformations. If Halley's comet is at all changeable, its many moods will be as faithfully photographed as the expression of a human being in a moving picture camera.

Besides the photographic camera, an instrument called a spectroscope will be employed, an instrument which analyzes the composition of a distant star by the character of the light which it sheds. It is the direct antithesis of the telescope; for the telescope is a light-gatherer, and the spectroscope is a light-sifter. This separation of light into the colors or hues of which it is composed (its spectrum, as physicists call it) is accomplished either by prisms of glass or by finely ruled reflecting surfaces. It was discovered rather late in the last century that each of these colors or groups of colors, of which light is composed, is produced by glowing chemical elements. A grain of common table salt (sodium-chloride) heated to incandescence in the blue flame of a Bunsen burner, exhibits a spectrum in which a yellow tint is the predominant feature. That yellow tint is characteristic of the element sodium; it always appears in the same place when seen in the spectroscope. The same yellow gleam appears in some comets exactly in the same position. What better evidence can there be that the metal sodium is contained in those comets? Thus the spectroscope has enabled the astronomer to determine not only what known metals and gases are glowing in the sun and other heavenly bodies, but even what unknown elements are contained in them. And thus it becomes a matter of no great difficulty to analyze a comet chemically with the utmost nicety, although separated from us by a chasm that can be measured only by millions of miles.

The character of the comet's light will also be studied by polariscopes, not for the purpose of ascertaining the comet's chemical composition, but for the purpose of ascertaining whether any of its light is due to the reflected rays of the sun. Instruments will also be employed to measure the intensity of a comet's light, just as we measure the candle power of a gas flame.

THE GREAT MISTAKE WHICH LEADER MACKAY MADE

Fort Frances May Suffer Severe Loss as Result of Bad Agreement Made by Present Leader of Ontario Liberals When He Was a Member of the Ross Government

The Ottawa Journal says—The little Ontario town of Fort Frances is in grave danger of being very seriously hurt, if not ruined. A prospect exists that its legitimate share of the power developed at the falls of the Rainy River may be exported to the Minnesota side of the river.

E. W. Backus, of Backus & Brooks, of Minnesota, large holders of pulp lands in Northern Minnesota, is the individual who is trying to create this situation inimical to the interests of Fort Frances. He acquired the prepondering ownership of the lands on the Minnesota side of the river, out of which grew the town of International Falls, and afterwards obtained control of the riparian rights on the United States side. Subsequently he entered into negotiations with the then Ross Government of Ontario, to acquire similar rights on the Canadian side, and develop as an international work the full power of the river. Eventually an agreement was entered into between the Ontario Government and the Minnesota and Ontario Power Company, of which Mr. Backus is the moving spirit, whereby the company secured riparian rights on the Canadian side. It was agreed that power would be developed on both sides of the river in equal proportion and that the Canadian half of the power should be retained for use in Canada, but leaving it free to be used in the United States if not immediately required in Canada, and returnable when required.

To-day the position is that the company has broken the agreement. The falls are capable of producing 60,000 horse power, 15,000 of which has been developed for use on the American side, and 6,000 only on the Canadian side. Mr. Backus wants to export this 6,000 horse power to the American side also.

Where the danger lies is in the possibility that the Dominion Government may give the company export rights under the Electrical Exportation Act, and that the Provincial Government may not take action in regard to the company not having lived up to the terms of its agreement. There appears to be some doubt whether the situation is one for federal or provincial action, the Rainy River being an international and navigable stream, and the company having been incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine. Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Minister of Justice, to whom the question has been referred, has some doubt as to this point, but he has addressed a letter to Hon. Wm. Templeman, Minister of Inland Revenue, in which he states in the most unequivocal language that the company has not lived up to the terms of its agreement. According to the agreement the company is liable to forfeiture of its titles on non-fulfillment of its obligations.

This is the lever which Fort Frances has depended upon to force the company to act fairly, and the case would be as clear as daylight were it not for the fact that in 1905 A. G. MacKay, when Ontario Minister of Crown Lands in the Ross Government, and without being seized of all the facts of the case, apparently without acquainting himself with the fact that there was an agreement in existence, entered into a new agreement with the company. The old agreement stipulated that half of the total power developed must be reserved for use on the Canadian side. The new agreement says that 4,000 horse power must be retained and reserved on the Canadian side, and further power will be given to users on the Canadian side on application, if not in use on the United States side.

It is claimed by Fort Frances that this agreement was entered into without the knowledge or sanction of the municipality, and therefore is inoperative. In any case there is no mention in the 1905 agreement of the cancelling of the 1904 agreement to which the municipality was a party. Another point is that in both agreements there is a clause which ordains forfeiture of titles if the conditions are not carried out. It is claimed that in justice to the people of Fort Frances the second agreement made by Hon. Mr. MacKay, when he was Minister of the Provincial Crown Lands should be repudiated by the Ontario Government.

The contention of the municipality is that there should be no export of any part of this power as asked for by Mr. Backus, but if the Dominion Government does not coincide in that view, no export should be allowed until the municipality has been put in possession by the company of information as to the amount of power available for independent users on the Canadian side. The Board of Railway Commissioners are also asked to give a rehearing to the town by reopening the case.

Mr. Aylesworth, interpreting the agreement, takes the ground that it provides that there should be concurrent development of power on both sides of the river, and that compliance with the agreement should be insisted upon "no matter how inconvenient such compliance may prove to the company." He also points out that the company has interfered with the lock of the canal constructed by the Dominion Government. It has been used as a waste weir or tail race. The attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals has been drawn to this.

Another incident in the story is that Backus has refused to supply hydraulic power, with which a pulp plant must be run to pay. A pulp mill cannot economically be operated with electric power. The object of Backus is to defeat the manufacture of ground wood pulp in Fort Frances, thus killing the town, and benefiting International Falls.

PRISONERS RELEASED

Five Men Arrested at G. T. R Station Saturday Allowed Their Freedom

The five men who came off the 11.45 G.T.R. train on Saturday morning in charge of a C.P.R. detective, were released by the order of the Crown Attorney in the jurisdiction where the crime was committed. Insufficient evidence was the direct cause of their release. The five men, before being brought here under arrest, offered to remain at Atherley in order to prove their innocense. The men have left the city for their homes.

A MOON GAZER'S PREDICTIONS

A local astrologer says that the ring of colors around the moon may presage any one of three things:

1. Failure of reciprocity negotiations with the United States.
2. Failure of Northwest crops.
3. Eclipse of Sam Hughes at Ottawa.

He sandwiches a calamity between the other two. We would suggest that he substitute for it a beneficent fall of rain.

T.A.S. AND P.A.C. WERE WINNERS IN OPENING CITY LEAGUE GAMES

Interesting Exhibitions at Riverside Park—Rose Twirling for West Ends Allowed His Opponents Only Two Hits But Errors Lost Game in the Fifth—Jimmy Pillings' Hitting a Feature of the Second Contest.

The same old sun was shining, the same old crowd was there. The same old clubs were fighting and tried to win for fair. The same old gates were open, the same old gags were sprung; "Who wants to know!" and "Whose your friend!" and "Let the high ones go". The same old "cop" was busy, and used the same old cane; he made the same old motions and was called the same old name. The kidlets found the knot holes as in the days of yore, and the youngster with the water-pail earned his ticket past the door. The umps were called the same pet names, as they made the same mistakes; "You're out on first," "You're safe at home," the players heard their fates. The same old birds along the rails yelled "mutt" and "robber" too, and told how they would make the play, and what they'd say and do. But the games went on the same old way, and the same old score cards say; The West Ends lost and the Straths blew up in the same old-fashioned way; jumped about, but just who'd do the calling there was a little doubt. But after some tall beefing an umps was called by name, and he agreed if things went wrong to shoulder all the blame. A batter next was wanted and Jimmy was the man, he grabbed his little bat just right, and stepped up to the pan. The twirler's name was Duffus—he looked a likely gent—and to the man behind the bat he sent one badly bent. The catcher had been there before, knew how to take his turn, and everyone knew it was Alderman Bradburn. The twirler shot them over, and the batter showed his class; the sphere went soaring grandly and also burned the grass. "Play ball!" the umpire called aloud, the recruits, down they sat, the West Ends went out on the field, the T.A.S. to bat. They couldn't go the grade just then, and took the count for three. The fair fans in the stand stood up and cried now watch the "bee." Bill Gibson was the first man up, he took one in the crate, and Sixth Innings.

Flaherty was out, Laing to Heaslip. Callaghan fanned. Quinlan was safe on Laing's error but Giroux ended by missing three.

Brydie out, Quinlan to Flaherty. Laing fanned. Dickie drew four and stole second, but was out stealing third.

Seventh Innings.

McFadden was safe on Rose's fumble and stole second. O'Brien flew out to Laing. J. Corkery got first on a fielder's choice, McFadden going to third as Brydie dropped the throw. Cahill went out to Dickie and McFadden scored on Dobson's misplay. V. Corkery skied to Guerin. One run.

Guerin was safe on Giroux's fumble. Minorgan flew out to O'Brien. Heaslip grounded out, Cahill to Flaherty. Rose hit the air.

Eighth Innings.

Flaherty grounded out, Minorgan to Heaslip. Callaghan popped out to Minorgan. Quinlan safe on Laing's fumble, but was out on throw from Dobson trying to steal.

Gibson struck out. Dobson singled through the box, stole second and scored on Brydie's hit to right. Laing flew out to Corkery. Dickie hit to right and Brydie was caught at the plate by a perfect throw from V. Corkery. One run.

Ninth Innings.

Giroux fanned. McFadden doubled to left. O'Brien flew out to Gibson and J. Corkery was out, Rose to Heaslip.

Guerin fanned. Minorgan out, Cahill to Flaherty. Heaslip ended the game by grounding out, Giroux to Flaherty.

It was Not Altogether Like This.

Riverside Park,
Saturday, May 21, 1910.

Dear Lizzie,—Just a few liners to put you in right on the doings here to-day. You will no doubt be surprised to hear that the dope I sent you in my last note went all to the bad, and that after all your friend, L. D., and his team were stricken suddenly and were taken away in the ambulance, but I am hopeful that they will all recover. You know that rather short and stout young lad, whom you so much admired at the fall fair last year, (I think they called him "Prunes,) well, it was he and that bunch who were with him who handed your friend something in the line of a bunch of knockout pills about three o'clock. Gee it was awful to see the way it affected them. Of course you want to be sure and blame it on all of them, as they all had a hand in it. There was a big crowd around at the time, and quite a few of them made fun out of the poor little fellows.

You will also be surprised to hear that that bunch who were up at your burg in the winter were also taken ill, and you may not expect them up your way for some time. Of course you won't make any mistake on the bunch I mean. You remember that big, dark looking guy who asked your sister where the police station was and she directed him to the asylum. He was one of them, and the others were some of that gang who were making eyes at N. B. That long, slim lad who was doing so much talking and his friend who was always saying "Hard luck, I should have got there," are not expected to recover. It was about five o'clock when they took ill, but as the ambulance broke down with the other load, they had to stay here; and you should have heard the way they were jollied. I did hear something about a calathumpian procession or something like that, which was to take place about 1.30 over town, but I guess some of those who were to take part didn't show up. I will write you again next Saturday, and perhaps may be able to tell you more about it then. Goodbye.

Yours for the moonlight,
W.A.R.

The small boy and his mother, his sister and his pa, closed up the house on Saturday, and gave a hip-a-rah. The big noise was at Riverside, and there they joined the crowd, which numbered round four hundred, and was noisy, glad and loud. "What happened to the big parade?" a well-known youth cried out. "A dog has bitten Huller and the auto has the gout," so cried a knocker who had jumped the fence at one o'clock. He didn't have the coin to pay and had stood in the dock! But things got moving o'er the line, and soon the tossers came, the auto brought the big guns, but everything seemed tame. The maidens took the grandstand, their friends planked down the tin, and followed them as steadies do, wearing a happy grin. The ball and bat were thrown out, the players

Dobson flew and Brydie too, and Willie crossed the plate.

The game went on until the fifth, when young "Fat" hit for two. McFadden helped and Slim took one, and things were turning blue. The husky Jack was walked to first, each base was cared for now. Bill got a life, and Fat was out, and Lank was called to bow. He scored the first, and Cork came next, when Brydie threw his worst. Another run came o'er the plate when Dobbie let one pass. Though that was all, the game was won, alas! alas! alas!

All through the fray Gus Rose was great, he had the juice and curves. He gave but two and passed one through. 'Twas trying on his nerves. His team-mates helped, but not enough. The swats came not on time, and once or twice you could have bought the whole team, for a dime.

The T.A.S. were out to win, and win they did, by two, and when they lose the team that wins will know its gone a foul. With Quinlan on the rubber and Yeb at work on first, the team was strong and played the game and showed no signs of "burst." The lad at left can pull them down, the lad behind can freeze the low and wide ones as they come, and is steady in the squeeze.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

First Innings.

V. Corkery struck out. Flaherty fouled out to Dobson. Callaghan out, Minorgan to Heaslip.

Gibson was hit, stole second. Dobson flew out to V. Corkery and Gibson went to third. Brydie flew out to Flaherty and Gibson scored on a passed ball. Laing fanned. One run.

Second Innings.

Quinlan and Giroux fanned. McFadden was hit, stole second, O'Brien struck out.

Dickie opened with a single to centre and stole second. Guerin singled to left, Dickie taking third. Quinlan fanned next three batters in order.

Third Innings.

J. Corkery was out, Rose to Heaslip. Cahill fanned and V. Corkery was out to Guerin.

Gibson flew out to J. Corkery. Dobson out, Quinlan to Flaherty. Brydie hit safely to right and Laing missed three.

Fourth Innings.

Flaherty and Callaghan out, Minorgan to Heaslip. Quinlan took three Dickie grounded out, Quinlan to Flaherty. Guerin bunted, but was thrown out, McFadden to Flaherty. Minorgan was passed and stole second, Heaslip struck out.

Fifth Innings.

Giroux opened with a two-bagger. McFadden sacrificed him to third. O'Brien took one and J. Corkery was passed. With the bases full, Cahill got a life on a fielder's choice and Giroux was thrown out at the plate, Heaslip to Dobson. O'Brien scored on a passed ball. Rose threw to catch Corkery off third and the runner went for the plate and scored when Brydie threw wild. Cahill scored on a passed ball. V. Corkery struck out. Three runs.

Rose flew out to J. Corkery. Gibson and Dobson both fanned.

The fingers on the old town clock had moved to six and four, when Straths and Park Street took the field. The crowd had yelled for more. Len Dobson took an awful chance, when he gave his consent, to call the balls and strikes, and outs, and stand firm like cement. The P.A.C. went to the bags. The Straths put on a smile, and talked about the way they would send Thompson's shoots a mile. Then Dooley hit, but died at first, the mogul viewed the comet. Three strikes were called and Mabel bawled. Put on your old grey bonnet, Bill Shaw, the runt, beat out a bunt and stole the middle bag. Pete grounded out the pitcher route, despite a smile from Mag. The P.A.C's came in to bat, Jim Pilling walked and stole. The "Hick" struck out the Kingston youth, but "Mac" found the first hole. The "Chumps" had dashed along to third, the "doc" heaved hard and wide. The runner watched the ball pass by and then flew like a bird. So went the game, the Straths' third came. The mogul hit "Hick" in. The score was tied, and Lizzie cried; I guess we're in the swim. The fourth came round, the Straths were bound to work another score. The P.A.C. unlocked the gates. The Straths attached three more. The southend boys got busy too, and filled the bases 3. And Jimmie knocked an awful clout. It made a scoring bee. This tied the game, the Straths pressed on, and took another rally, but in the sixth, the swatter, "Chumps" lead to a three run tally. This put the poor Straths down and out. 'Twas tough, but just the same; the blow-up team will try again, and help to boost the game.

NOTES.

—A big crowd witnessed the games and all appeared to be well satisfied.

Bill Shaw and Len Dobson handled the games satisfactorily. There were some kicks, but there was never a game played without some disputes between officials and players.

Mr. J. T. C. Laing's score board filled a long felt want, and the scorer handled the job in an O.K. manner.

Gus Rose certainly pitched great ball and deserved to win. Better luck next time.

That catch of Jack Corkery's was a clap winner. It was a difficult chance.

Quinlan, while he allowed six safeties, kept them scattered and tightened up in the pinches.

It was a bitter pill for the Strathconas to swallow, but such is the game.

The Metheral outfit can stand a whole lot of strengthening. Good players are available and the wholes should be filled up.

The dark horse team, while they made errors, made good with the bat, with the bases full, and that wins games every time.

A large number of youngsters passed the gate owing to the generosity of several "full grown fans."

Mrs. Alfred Gillison was nearly pulled overboard by a shark while fishing at Atlantic City.

THE JUNIOR MOTOR BOAT REGATTA

And How Frank Williams Finally Settled the Rivalry Between the Arrow and the Ki-Yi

BY ARTHUR MORGAN LANGWORTHY

Suddenly a Strong Shove from Behind Catapulted Him—Splash!—Head First Into the Waters of the Pond

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

"'M' 'Frank Williams, M. C.,' now, so don't forget!" announced Frank importantly one morning early in June after reading over a letter just received.

"Here's a letter from Joe Fisher in this city saying that I've been elected master of ceremonies to conduct the first annual regatta of the Junior Motor Boat Club!"

"That is an honor. I didn't even know you were a member!" cried his father, pretending to be greatly astonished at this selection of a "non-resident." But Mr. Williams was not really much surprised, considering Frank's city record. Those who have followed his career for the last year will remember his many adventures and campaigns in which he guided his city cousin, Joe Fisher, and his "gang" to victory, mostly against their great juvenile enemy, Ben Jordan.

Unfortunately a big chance presented itself for Ben Jordan to make trouble. The Junior Motor Boat Club was a grammar school organization, made up of boys from the manual training department, and this fact alone enabled Ben to become a member, as he went to the same public school as Joe Fisher and his friends. The members had worked for several months at their school carpenter benches building the model motor boats and the regatta was to be the supreme test of superiority.

A mother of one of the contestants offered a silver cup as the grand speed prize. This was to be raced for over a measured course of 60 feet in the "yacht pond," a small lagoon reserved especially for juvenile water craft in the city park.

Regatta day could not have been more perfect, nor could you find a prettier scene than the glittering oval of the yacht pond in its green setting of park foliage.

The sixty foot course lay from bank to bank of the oval near one end where it narrowed to that width. As a cement walk extended all around this extremity of the oval, two red flags twenty feet apart marked the finish. Each racer must strike the finishing bank at some point between these two flags or it was no race, so considerable depended on properly adjusted steering gear.

At two o'clock sharp Frank blew his whistle for the opening race. Joe Fisher's Arrow sped to the front and easily carried off the honors in Class A; an electric boat, the Dart, won Class B; the Fried Egg, another electric vessel, won Class C, and in Class D Ben Jordan's Ki-Yi, which sported a fine toy alcohol engine, carried off the honors.

Frank now lined up the four winners in their respective classes to make the final dash that would determine the winner of the cup.

As Joe Fisher's 22-inch Arrow was the smallest, Frank gave it a three second handicap over Ben Jordan's 40-inch Ki-Yi, that being the difference in time between the two boats as measured by their two previous races. The other boats got two and one-half and six second handicaps. Frank's handicapping was received with a lot of grumbling by Ben and his crowd and Ben made some ugly remarks, but Frank kept his temper, and finally Ben sulkily obeyed the ruling.

Frank as referee held a split second stop watch, so he knew the exact time to start the four racers. The cap pistol was a "ten shooter," and when the first "Bang!" rang out the Fried Egg took the water; the second report started Joe's Arrow; then came the Dart, and two and one-half seconds after that the Ki-Yi was to start. But Ben tried to take unfair advantage, and started his motor before the signal. As this was a distinct violation of the rules the start was spoiled. Frank declared it "no race."

Ben fumed and argued, but the other three boats were brought back and the start made over again. The second start was perfect, and the boys who had entered the four racers all ran around the end of the oval at top speed to be in at the finish.

Probably what immediately followed would never have occurred if the Ki-Yi had behaved properly, but it was Ben's own fault, for his rudder had doubtless been correctly adjusted in the beginning when he tried to be unfair at the first start. Anyway, just as his boat was making up some of her handicap she swerved and then turned completely about in a graceful curve and started back to where she came from.

By this time the four boys had run around to the finish. On sped the three other motor boats, the Arrow gradually widening the distance as she dashed for the bank straight between the two flags. She kept up her splendid clip until she had almost reached the end of the course. Joe leaned down in eager triumph to grasp her as soon as she touched the bank, when suddenly a strong shove from behind catapulted him—splash!—head first into the waters of the yacht pond.

"Stop him! Ben Jordan did it! Don't let him get away!" shrieked the startled and angry spectators who had witnessed the final culmination of Ben's temper, for he, blind with anger, had lost complete control of himself and pushed the rival that he hated and feared into the pond right on top of the nearest motor boat.

Joe, having leaned down, was in just the right position to spreadeagle all over his onrushing craft, which, not being built for passengers, promptly went to the bottom before she finished. Some of Joe's friends tried to grab Ben, but his crowd succeeded in blocking their efforts to get at him and he escaped during the excitement.

But that didn't prevent Frank from making a capture. As starting referee he remained where he was, while Mr. Henderson, the instructor in manual training, held another stop watch timed exactly with Frank's to catch the finish. The Ki-Yi, having ruined her owner's chances and caused the awful tragedy of the finish, now glided back almost to where Frank stood.

Ben's outrage made Frank mad "clear through." So when the Ki Yi obligingly steamed up to his feet he grabbed her and with several friends warded off part of Ben's crowd who tried to take the boat away. In the meantime Joe had been fished out, and after a consultation in which Frank took no part he was declared the winner—on a foul!

Frank at first had determined to surrender the Ki-Yi on Ben's demand, but when Ben began to make charges of unfairness Frank considered the matter very carefully and at last evolved an idea by which he thought he could answer Ben's charges in a most convincing manner. So that was why he refused to give up the Ki-Yi at once when Ben angrily demanded his boat.

"You'll know when I'm ready to," answered Frank significantly.

But he didn't know what Frank had been doing in the meantime, neither did he know how closely was he watched by some of Frank's friends, or perhaps he might not have been such an easy victim to Frank's deep laid plot. One afternoon Ben went out for a walk, and the first thing he was aware of he walked right into a ring of Frank's confederates, who lay in ambush for him around a corner. And then Ben got another surprise. He was hustled down to the river (the Prairie River flowed through the city) and then out on a deserted wharf, where Frank received him with mock ceremony.

"Allow me to introduce to you the latest thing in motor boats!" he cried to the astounded Ben, who was bundled over the side of a trim little craft moored to the wharf end.

Frank started the engine and the little motor boat "chugged" down stream, towing another boatload of Frank's friends, and headed for a shallow bathing beach much frequented by the boys of both crowds. An expression of great satisfaction overspread Frank's countenance as he noted a number of Ben's cronies swimming about, and he remarked:—

"Here's where you're going to get that 'square deal' you've been howling for, and your friends can be witnesses. Joe, bring out the Ki-Yi!"

Joe disappeared in the tiny cabin and returned carrying the Ki-Yi and the Arrow. He motioned the other boys to let go of Ben while he pointed to a kit of tools on the deck.

"Now, Ben, here's everything you need to put the Ki-Yi in fine shape, for we're going to have this race all over again. Joe says he can beat you without any handicap at all—so he doesn't ask for one. If you can beat him we will set you ashore, and give you full credit."

Finally Ben said he was ready and the motor boat now took a broadside-on position at one end of the course, so that the two racers could be properly launched. Ben and Joe leaned over the side and waited for Frank's signal.

"Bang!" barked the same cap pistol; away shot the two rival craft. They "ate up" the first quarter side by side, though the Ki-Yi was nearly twice as long as the Arrow. At the half (thirty feet) the Ki-Yi took a slight lead, which she increased to more than two feet at the three-quarter (forty-five feet), while Ben and his gang on shore yelled their delight.

Could the Arrow pull up? She couldn't! But now it wasn't a question of her increased speed. That last spurt was all that was in the Ki-Yi, and she slowly fell back to the Arrow, whose electric engine began to show its advantage over the Ki-Yi's steam power. It worked evenly, every propeller revolution giving its steady forward thrust. The Ki-Yi engine depended on the alcohol heater, and as it was badly protected from the wind the breeze fanned it so that its flame didn't properly lick the boiler bottom—just a small thing, but that lost the Ki-Yi her steadiness, and the two boats passed the finish line so closely together that the occupants of the Zip II. could not tell which one led.

There was a strained silence, and even Ben's shore friends quieted down until Carl Jones, who held the stop watch in the rowboat tender stationed at the finish, could announce his decision:—

"Arrow wins by four inches in thirteen and one-fifth seconds!"

No sooner had he spoken than Ben's followers noticed a great commotion take place on the deck of the Zip II. Everything happened so quickly that all they could see were a pair of waving arms and legs suddenly shoot over the side and Ben Jordan strike the water with a tremendous splash. It wasn't of any depth, and when Ben's dripping head and shoulders finally emerged and he stood sputtering in the water up to his armpits Frank pointed to the Ki-Yi, now fast nearing shore (for Carl hadn't stopped her), and cried:—

"Ben, I'm afraid you lose by four feet—deep! Now wade in and join the Ki-Yi with my compliments."

Arab children in the desert
Call their home a gay striped tent—
Such a funny kind of dwelling.
See how oddly it is bent!

Crooked tent poles hold it upward.
Out of camel's hair it's made,
And the little Arab children
Play beneath it in the shade.

On the caravan will go,
With the tent rolled round the tent poles,
On a camel's back, you know.

Early Morning in the Zoological Gardens.

DID you ever visit a zoological garden when the animals were just getting up for the day? Probably you have not done so, because it is usually not possible to enter the zoo grounds at that time. Only the keepers are expected to be present then, and so the outside public misses a very amusing spectacle.

Of course, the animals have no regular getting up time as have people. They rise whenever they want to, usually at the first crack of dawn, and are wide awake and longing for breakfast long before the keepers go on their rounds. The advantage that the animals have over human beings is that it is perfectly possible for the animals to go to sleep at any time of the day when they feel inclined; so, naturally, they do not mind getting up early. Still, although there is no regular getting up time for the zoo animals, there is a regular time for their cages to be swept out and cleaned and their beds to be made. Their own toilets are made at the same time, and then, all clean and fresh and ready to receive visitors, they are at liberty to eat their breakfast and go to sleep again as soon as they desire.

Early morning in the elephants' house is a rather damp occasion, for the big beasts have the hose turned on them every morning before opening hour, and with one grand swirl and flourish of water their rooms are cleaned and their own toilettes made in short order. The big fellows always take part in the cleaning themselves, and the keeper often has quite a good deal of trouble to keep them from snatching his broom away the moment he puts it down. After the elephant's bedroom has been swept out the hose is turned on and everything thoroughly cleaned out; then fresh hay is put in for breakfast and then comes the bedmaking. The bed is made of a lot of fresh hay every day and while the elephant may take a nibble at his newly made bed, most elephants won't condescend to eat any but the freshest bedding. Over night bedding won't do at all for an elephant's breakfast.

While it is amusing to see the elephant getting up and having his room cleaned it is even funnier to see the early morning doings at the bear's den, especially if the dens are supplied with pools of water, as many of them are. It is most amusing to see the big, shaggy, brown fellows wake up, roll over and then rise and plunge into the pool for their morning bath. They come out of the pool shaking the water off them in the most ridiculous fashion, and then some of them actually go through movements like calisthenics. A big Russian bear in the Zoological Park, New York city, stands on his hind feet to do his calisthenics and flaps his arms back and forth exactly like a person does in dumbbell exercise. The bear is merely going through the movements to shake off the water, but every one calls his antics his gymnastic exercises.

The bear dens are washed down every morning, and the bears enjoy it hugely. Generally the keeper takes along a cracker or two as an ante-breakfast treat, but it isn't necessary, as all the bears seem to love their morning baths and the washing out of their cages quite as well as would the tidiest of human beings.

A Couple of Kid-napers Caught in the Act.

May Day in Old London.

In London the chimney sweeps and the milkmaids used to make festival on the first of May. The milkmaids made a round of their customers, and from each one they received a small sum of money for the purchase of May finery.

The chimney sweeps, wearing gay costumes, wreaths and garlands and carrying green boughs, paraded the streets, followed by huge crowds. It was because of this that May Day in London came to be called "Sweeps' Day." A well to do London lady, Mrs. Elizabeth Montague, used to give a feast to the chimney sweeps every year on May Day at her house in Portman square. There was a dinner of roast beef and plum pudding, and each of the guests was presented with a shilling. Afterward the sweeps had a dance.

COBOURG'S CRACK BALL TEAM HERE TO-MORROW

The holiday attraction here to-morrow will be the ball game at Riverside Park when the fast Cobourg team plays the T.A.S. nine. Cobourg has always been noted for its fine ball team and the fans cannot forget the great contests between Cobourg and Peterborough in the days of the old Midland League. These games were always noted for being close and stubbornly contested and to-morrow's game will be no exception. The T.A.S. team by their win of Saturday over the fast West End team proved that they are in good shape and can go the route and no doubt a bumper crowd will be on hand to see them in action again. This game is the only holiday attraction here and those who will be on hand can be assured of seeing a good afternoon's sport. The game is called for 3 o'clock, with Dan McCabe as umpire and Quinlan and McFadden as the T.A.S. battery.

AMATEUR TROPHY COMPETITION LIKELY TO BE DISCONTINUED

An apparently well-based story states that the musical and dramatic competitions, held annually during the regime of Earl Grey as Governor-General, will be discontinued at his departure and are not likely to be revived. The survival of this valuable institution, however, will likely rest in the hands of his Excellency's successor.

Should the future competitions be cancelled, it will disarrange the plans of several amateur dramatic and musical societies throughout Ontario, as instanced by Peterborough, where all the local amateur bodies have concentrated their efforts on one organization to try for the 1911 trophy. The future of the annual trials is, however, uncertain and may turn out more favorably than is rumored.—Toronto News.

Prince Born to Victoria Ena.

Madrid, May 23.—Queen Victoria was delivered of an infant, still-born at four o'clock Saturday morning. The sex was male. The unhappy outcome is attributed to a premature accouchment, which, however, was otherwise natural. The body will be buried without ceremony in the Royal pantheon of the Escurial monastery.

When told of her loss the mother wept bitterly. King Alfonso is still in London, where he attended the funeral of the Queen's uncle, the late King Edward.

"No Turning Back."

London, May 23.—Redmondites and O'Brienites both held meetings at Cork yesterday, and as a result many cracked pates had to be repaired at the local hospitals. Redmond said that the King's death had postponed the constitutional crisis, but not indefinitely. The Liberal Government and the British democracy had burnt their boats. To turn back now was impossible. Snowden Blackburn said that an election this year was improbable.

Sad News For Wife.

Port Huron, Mich., May 22.—It will be bad news that Mrs. George Thompson, who is now on her way to Sarnia from England, will receive when she leaves the steamer in New York. Her husband died last night as the result of a scalding he received early yesterday morning when the passenger engine, of which he was fireman, collided with a switch engine in the Grand Trunk yards in Sarnia and was partially wrecked. Engineer James Close was also burned by the escaping steam and is in a critical condition.

A Sporting Romance.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable sporting love-stories is that contained in the late Mr. J. M. K. Eliott's sporting reminiscences regarding the Grafton country.

Speaking of harriers, he thus tells the little romance, which has a happy ending all round: In old days there was another pack near Bedford, the owner of which had an only daughter who was passionately fond of going out with the harriers. There was a young magnate in Bedford who also had a great taste for currant jelly, and he found out the meets and attended very regularly. The lady of the house saw what the loadstone was, and, not approving of any encouragement being made in a certain quarter, the squire had no peace until the hounds were sent away.

When the day fixed for the departure of the pack came the poor squire took leave of them, and sent them by road to London to be sold. They had not been long gone before the squire was informed that his daughter had eloped with the young magnate. He at once summoned a messenger and started him to overtake the hounds and bring them back. "They are sure to want them when they come home!" he said. He was a good father.—Gentlewoman.

A Queer Cocoanut.

A showman's clever dodge was discovered recently at a fair held at Birkenhead, Eng., as a result of which he was arrested and heavily fined for obtaining money by false pretences. The story told by the detectives was that they saw a young man pay a penny for a "shy" at a cocoanut temptingly placed on a ledge four yards from where he stood. Although he hit the nut with a sounding force, he failed to dislodge it. The officers then entered the stall with the intention of examining it. One of them went to pick up the nut, and was jostled by the stallkeeper, while her assistant skillfully changed the "nut" for a genuine one. However, the officers obtained the right article, which turned out to be a cannon ball weighing twelve pounds, over which cocoanut fibre had been cleverly glued, giving it the appearance of a genuine cocoanut.

Names Omitted

To the Editor of the Review.

Dear Sir,—In my letter in the Peterborough Review in reference to Miss Hallihan's concert, by inadvertence the names of His Worship Mayor Morrow and L. M. Hayes, K.C., were omitted from the list of honorary committee. I would be obliged if you would make a note correcting this.

Yours very truly,

Secretary.

NEVER PUT OFF TILL TO-MORROW

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—As the Review and the Examiner published precisely the same report of Mr. Denham's interview with Mayor (To-) Morrow and the Board of Works, I presume the report is correct. Allow me to quote it;—

"At this juncture, Mr. Denham, superintendent of the local Quaker Oats factory, dropped in, and was invited by the chairman to tell the committee.

Mr. Denham,—"I have done that so often that you ought to know it off by heart." He then went on to say that all his company wanted was permission to cross the government reserve. "We have been asking this of you for five weeks now and I think it rather strange if the city does not allow a concern like the Quaker Oats Company to put in a siding to facilitate the erection of new buildings. We could force this concession by appealing to the Railway Commission, but such a course would delay our building operations four or five weeks. It is absolutely necessary for us to have a siding running along the west side for bringing in crushed stone. I think you might have shown a little more consideration for the Quaker Oats Company than to handicap them by dealing with the C. P. R. over our heads."

The "safeguarding" of the city's interests is one thing, but when the end comes, as in the case of the C.G.E., and the waterworks dam, what was called safeguarding, gets to look very like delay through incapacity. I have no desire to impugn the motives or good faith of anybody, but the city's dealings with the C. G. E. and the Quaker Oats have been so dangerous and needless that people are asking on all sides if it would not be better to do away with the mayor and council and have a commission of experts as the Examiner advocates, for managing the city's property and policy. If in the future we find the city's prospects for cheap power also just so much nothing at all there will be considerable grumbling. The city council under the present fine young mayor is not doing much for the people of Peterborough, and if the electric lighting of the city has to go to a private corporation again there will be much hardship to the working classes.

Yours, etc.,
RATEPAYER.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TRAINS IN COLLISION

Maritime Express From Moncton Runs Into St. John Suburban Train—Brakeman Killed and Several People Hurt, But Not Seriously Injured.

St. John, N.B., May 25.—Brakeman John Casey of Moncton, was killed, some people sustained minor injuries and much damage to rolling stock was done on the Intercolonial Railway yesterday in a collision at Nauwigewauk, about fifteen miles from here. It is a wonder more were not killed. The trains colliding were the Maritime Express from Moncton for St. John and a suburban train from this city.

The Maritime left Moncton 25 minutes' late, with Conductor Caffey in charge, and Ed. Storey, engineer. At Hampton Storey received orders to cross the suburban at Nauwigewauk, about five miles below. There the suburban, too, had orders. It is said there was nothing in the orders as to which train was to take the siding and which keep the main line, but trainmen quote a new order issued only two days ago giving eastbound trains the right of way. In this case the suburban was eastbound. However, the suburban stopped at Nauwigewauk and the express came around a curve at about thirty miles an hour. Storey seeing the train ahead, applied brakes and stuck to his post. He came through unscathed. Fireman Cuthbertson, who jumped, also escaped. The express crashed into the suburban, badly damaging both locomotives and one car of the suburban.

Next to the engine on the express was a baggage car, next to it a second-class coach. The baggage car telescoped the second-class, wrecking it, and there it was that Brakeman Casey died. He was on the second-class platform and was crushed as the cars telescoped. He lived but a minute or two. No one else was seriously hurt, though the passengers were shaken up. Some ten passengers were in the telescoped second-class car, but escaped through windows, though some were cut. The remarkable thing was that four tramps riding on the back of the engine escaped unhurt.

A wrecking crew is at work clearing the track, but meanwhile trains can pass by means of a switch.

Casey was a married man with a family. His home is in Moncton.

An inquest will be held.

EIGHTEEN LIVES LOST IN LAKE HURON COLLISION

The James B. Wood Runs Into the Frank H. Goodyear Cutting the Great Steel Ship in Two—It Sank Immediately in Forty-Five Fathoms of Water.

Port Huron, Mich., May 25.—The steamer James B. Wood, of the Gilchrist fleet, collided with the Frank H. Goodyear in Lake Huron Monday night and nineteen lives are reported lost. The James B. Wood is at this port with a hole six feet wide in her bow.

The collision occurred 35 miles north of Point aux Barques at 5.30 Monday morning, in a heavy fog, the boats meeting head-on. The Goodyear sank in 47 fathoms of water. She carried a crew of twenty-three.

The missing are:—August Zaetsch, Algonac, Mich., mate; Archie Fuller, Algonac, second mate; John Papp, Cleveland, wheelsman; Jacob Plergis, South Chicago, wheelsman; Wm. Pitt, Midland, Ont., watchman; W. Schlueter, Milwaukee, Wis., watchman; Louis Kramer, Kenosha, deckhand; Iver Carter, Kenosha, deckhand; Fred Herman, Cheboygan, deckhand; Frank Jankovite, Chicago, deckhand; John Gibson, Wayne, Mich., engineer; Wm. E. Grant, Carsonville, second engineer; Wm. Rowert, Carsonville, oiler; Howard Shook, Ausable, Mich., oiler; Vanderslaw Klubozewski, South Chicago, fireman; Ernest Streek, Kenosha, Wis.; Mrs. F. E. Bassett, Algonac; John Bassett, aged three years.

The Goodyear's captain and steward, the steward's mother and a wheelman were saved and brought to Port Huron on the Wood. The steamer Sir William Seimens of Cleveland, and consort, upbound to the Soo, were near the scene of the wreck, and are believed to have rescued some of the crew of the Goodyear, but when she passed Detour yesterday morning she did not report any survivors on board.

Everyone on board was supplied with a life-preserver and everyone was made to man and launch the small boats. But the water poured into the hold so fast that the heavy hatches were forced from their frames by the pressure from underneath and shot into the air in every direction, and the falling hatches spread injury and death among the terrified crew and passengers of the sinking vessel.

With his infant child in his arms Steward Bassett had almost reached safety in one of the lifeboats, when one of the hatches snatched his baby from his arms. The little one fell into the lake and was drowned, despite the frantic efforts of its father to rescue it.

When the Goodyear settled beneath the surface of the water it was evident that she was practically broken in two, the action of the water having completed the destruction begun by the blow received in the collision.

Following the accident, Capt. Gibson, of the Wood, ordered the lifeboats to work and gave the crew instructions to make every possible effort to save any of the sailors of the sinking steamer. Within a short time the yawl boat was brought alongside the Wood, and five people, Captain Hemenger, Steward Frank Bassett, Mrs. Wm. Bassett, Frank Mollick and George Grant, were taken aboard, all in an exhausted condition.

Both the Wood and the Goodyear are big steel vessels, the Wood 314 feet long and the Goodyear 436 feet. The Goodyear was owned by The Buffalo and Susquehanna Transportation Co. of Buffalo, but was operated by Mitchell & Co. of Cleveland. She is fully insured.

DYNAMITE EXPLODED

Port Arthur, May 25.—Bonfield and Harvey's dynamite storehouse at Northeast Bay, Sturgeon Lake, blew up last Tuesday. Five hundred cases of dynamite were destroyed. It was caused by a prairie fire. No one was directly hurt by the explosion, but the windows in the camp, half a mile away, were broken and the cook in the camp was knocked over by the shock of the explosion. The loss is placed at $6,000.

The report of Prospector Keen's death was confirmed by Dominion Constable J. S. McIntyre, who is in the city from Northeast Bay, Sturgeon Lake. The body was found last Thursday after having been in Lake Savant ten days.

Comet Shed a Meteorite.

Philadelphia, May 25.—Capt. Anderson of the Norwegian steamer Friea, which arrived here from Port Antonio, reports that on the night of May 18, when abreast of C[illegible]ba, he witnessed the fall of a large meteorite from the direction of Halley's Comet, which was plainly visible at the time.

ALEXANDRA'S GRATITUDE

London, May 25.—Queen Mother Alexandra received Lord Strathcona, High Commissioner of Canada, at Buckingham Palace yesterday. She asked him to convey to the people of Canada an expression of her gratitude for their love and sympathy at the time of her bereavement.

The Queen Mother also received Theodore Roosevelt yesterday. The two had a long chat, during which Her Majesty took occasion to personally tell the former President how much she appreciated the sympathy exhibited for her in the United States.

INTENDED FOR KING ALFONSO

Madrid, May 25.—Following a night of search and enquiry, the police believe that the bomb exploded Monday night was intended for King Alfonso.

The explosive was hurled at the monument erected to the victims of the attempt against His Majesty on his wedding day, May 19, 1906, but the authorities think that the original intention of the anarchist was to strike down the King upon his arrival at the railway station on his return from London.

As a result of this conviction the plans for King Alfonso's return have been changed, and it is now arranged for him to enter the city by automobile.

The bomb-thrower, who was wounded by his own weapon, proves to have been a South American.

Like Manuel Morales, who was believed to have headed the conspiracy against the King four years ago, the South American, committed suicide when he found that his capture by the police was imminent.

FIGHTING AT BLUEFIELDS

Bluefields, Nicaragua, May 25.—Gen. Lara, commanding a force of Government troops, yesterday, fiercely attacked the provisional Government's position at the rear of Bluefields. The Government steamer Venus landed 500 troops 26 miles north of Bluefields Bluff, in conjunction with Gen. Lara's force back of Bluefields.

The Government troops began their attack on the position where the provisionals had entrenched themselves Monday night, but they were repulsed, and returned to the woods. An artillery fire was kept up all night until dawn yesterday morning, when the attack was resumed.

PROF. FROST ON THE COMET

Chicago, May 25.—Forty degrees of new-born tail for the comet and a doubling of its luminosity, owing to flaming hydro-carbon gas, were recorded by the astronomers at Williams' Bay Observatory Monday night, after the spectrographic negatives had been developed. Prof. E. B. Frost, director of the observatory, announced the result of the computations.

"Four of us, after independent calculations, agree that the new tail of the comet is 40 degrees long," he said. "The tail was visible long after the head had set. The darkening of the sky by the eclipse of the moon helped greatly in the observations. Observations by the hand spectroscope showed carbon in the head of the comet. These were confirmed by the developments of the negatives made with the 12-inch telescope. The internal activity of the comet is in full blast. It is making gas at a terrific rate."

Prof. Frost said he did not expect to see the old tail in the east this morning. "The old tail must disappear," he added, "when detached from its source, it can only condense or fade away as the end of an active tail always does."

BOMB THROWN FROM TRAIN

New York, May 25.—The explosion of a bomb thrown from a train on the subway system as the train was passing through the surface yards of the road on the edge of the Harlem ship canal yesterday, hurled a watchman from his feet and injured him severely, broke the hawsers of a wrecking tug in the canal and sent her adrift and created a panic among the tenants of a big apartment house nearby.

Construction work by a Pennsylvania steel concern is progressing in the subway yards, and about seventy-five men are working there on the "open shop" system.

SOUTH AFRICAN HEROES ARE HONORED IN TORONTO

Monument Unveiled in University Avenue on the 24th of May by General Sir John French, Who Tells How Canadians Saved the Day on One Occasion.

Toronto, May 25.—Before a crowd of ten thousand people, which lined University avenue from side to side and stretched from the southerly limit of Queen street to the parade ground in front of the armories, Gen. Sir John French unveiled the monument erected by the South African Memorial Association to the "honor and memory of the Canadians who died in defence of the Empire in the South African war, 1899 to 1902."

It was a fitting consummation to the distinction which the Canadian contingents won for themselves and for their country that the unveiling should be by the hand of one of the Empire's greatest and most gracious soldiers, who, from his own observations on the field of battle, could testify to the valor of the men whose memory he was thus called upon to honor.

Gen. French referred to an attack upon one Boer outpost in which his brigade was being closely pressed by the enemy.

"I was obliged," he said, "to send back to Col. Lessard, who was in charge of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, to come to my support. An immediate response was forthcoming, and from what I saw with my own eyes I can say that the victory which crowned our efforts that day was directly due to the work of Canadian troops."

GENERAL SIR JOHN FRENCH.

The bronze figures unveiled yesterday comprise a group around the foot of the column, representing two Canadian riflemen flanking a figure of a woman, representing Canada, who is sending them off to war. The figure representing the glorification of peace, to be placed on the top of the column, has not yet arrived, but the delay in the casting which is responsible for this has given the committee an opportunity, in view of the granting of a constitution to the union about to be consummated in South Africa, to have the original design of the figure changed from one symbolic of victory to the other. This, it is expected, will be in place some time before autumn.

The South African Veterans' Association were lined up to the west of the monument, and after the unveiling had taken place, they decorated the base with a large number of floral wreaths.

Lieut.-Governor Gibson was master of ceremonies. He regretted the absence of Earl Grey, whose public engagements had been cancelled owing to the death of the King.

"This memorial," he said, "will forever commemorate the valor of those contingents that went from Canada to do duty in South Africa at a time when it was supposed that the situation was critical for Great Britain. It is a testimonial to the patriotism and loyalty of those who went out on that occasion." He had no doubt that when the inauguration of that legislative union of the various British colonies in South Africa was taking place, Canada would be found raising her flag, sending messages of felicitation and generally joining with them in the celebration that one more important era in the history of the Empire had been brought about.

Sydney H. Jones, secretary of the association, read cablegrams of felicitation from the mayors of Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony; Port Elizabeth and Pietermaritzburg, Natal, and Cape Town, Cape Colony.

Gen. French greatly emphasized four points, namely, greater efficiency in discipline, a better knowledge of and greater expertness in rifle shooting, the importance of night operations, and the necessity for soldiers being able to handle shovels and picks, in an address to the officers of the Queen's Own, the Royal Grenadiers and the 48th Highlanders, delivered after the regimental inspection yesterday afternoon in Riverdale Park. All the officers gathered around Gen. French in a place on the field, out of ear-shot of spectators and the rank and file, and he gave them a heart-to-heart talk.

Gen. French also impressed on his hearers that he came, not to criticize, but to help. Shortly before he left England, King Edward had sent for him and told him he was on a special mission. He came to bear a message of best wishes from the home forces to the Canadian army. The furtherance of the interest of the Canadian militia was the object of his trip. He was here to assist Gen. Lake in his work.

Port Arthur, May 25.—Capt. Walpole Roland, one of the best known mining engineers in this district, whose home was in Port Arthur, is reported lost in the woods near Wabigoon, where he went to inspect a mining property, leaving here a week ago Saturday.

He was at the relief of Lucknow as a captain in company with Lieut., afterwards Lord Roberts, and was also with "Chinese" Gordon at the taking of the Taku forts in the Chinese war, and in the trenches at Sebastopol in the Crimean war.

Wm. Windsor, a young Englishman in Detroit took his life while despondent.

ASSASSINS MADE SURE OF CARLOS

Lisbon, May 25.—The Government is awaiting the completion of the investigation of the statements made by an anarchist named Ramires before taking action against those named as the conspirators in the assassination of King Carlos and Crown Prince Luiz in 1908. Ramires escaped to Brazil, following the assassinations, but was recently arrested and brought back here. Subsequently he made a confession and gave to the police the names of 1,148 persons, including several prominent in politics, who had shared in the conspiracy.

According to Ramires those selected for the killing were divided into four groups and placed at as many points along the route of the royal carriage in order that if any one group failed the others would be prepared to execute the death designs.

BULLETS FLY IN THIS STRIKE

Scranton, Pa., May 25.—A riot broke out among striking miners at No. 14 colliery of the Pennsylvania Coal Co., near Pitston yesterday, following an attempt of a posse of state police, headed by Sergt. Hennig, to disperse a crowd of Italians, who threatened others when a work train reached the colliery.

Sheriff Rodda of Luzerne County hurried to the colliery on the outbreak of the trouble and was shot at, but escaped the bullets, though a thrown coupling pin gave him a scalp wound.

One foreigner, Peter Sura, was so badly clubbed by state policemen that he may die in the Pitston Hospital, where Sheriff Rodda hurried with him in an automobile, and also had his wound dressed.

CANADA NOT LIKE NIGERIA.

The Hamilton Spectator referring to the good work done in Africa by Sir Edouard Percy Girouard, a Canadian who is now acting as high commissioner and commander-in-chief of the protectorate of Northern Nigeria, says:

"If there is one thing more than another that appeals strongly to the people of such semi-organized states as that part of Nigeria, it is intelligent and sympathetic interest on the part of the man set over them by the protecting power. And it stands to reason that the man who is from a colony, having been reared amid conditions closely approaching to those of the people over whom he is called to rule, will be most likely to appreciate sympathetically and intelligently the problems constantly confronting that people in their march of progress."

If this had appeared in an English newspaper ten or fifteen years ago it would not have been surprising, but there are few English newspaper men now who know so little about Canada, as to compare it with a small African crown colony most of whose inhabitants are black. For a Canadian newspaper to say that the conditions in Canada closely approach those of Nigeria is absurd.

The climate is not at all like that of Canada, the physical characteristics of the country are not the same; the masses of the people are of a different race, altogether inferior to Canadians, and the system of government is altogether different. It would be difficult to find one point of resemblance between Canada and Nigeria.

Sir Edouard Percy Girouard's fitness for his position is due to ability to adapt himself to new conditions.

THE MASTERY OF THE AIR

The greatest achievement of the twentieth century is likely to be man's mastery of the air. In all the ages that have passed since man first began to live on the face of the earth he has envied the birds, which, although heavier than the air, could fly through it with ease. Man could mount into the sky in a baloon lighter than the air, but he had no control over it, could not steer it, and was absolutely at the mercy of air currents. But wonders have been accomplished since the beginning of the twentieth century, and there is now little doubt that man will be almost as much at home in the air as on the sea before this century has run its course. So far has the science of aviation progressed that achievements in the air which would have astonished the world a few years ago, are now discussed by the newspapers with a few brief paragraphs as everyday occurrences.

One thing especially worthy of note is the comparative cheapness of flying machines. Glen H. Curtiss, the famous aviator, says that it is possible to manufacture a good aeroplane so cheaply that it can be sold for $2,500 after allowing the manufacturer a fair profit. This is cheaper than the automobile, and if airships can be placed on the market at that price it will not be long before many of them are seen in Canada, but men and women in general have not yet enough confidence in the safety of aviation to make it as popular as automobiling.

Glen Curtiss predicts that the aeroplane will drive out the dreadnought, because four thousand of them can be constructed for the same amount of money that would build one dreadnought, and in much less time. He thinks that a small fleet of airships carrying bombs could quickly destroy the costly battleship.

However, in any war that may come it is not probable that one side will fight with airships alone and the other side with battleships alone. There will be airships to meet airships. If two hundred airships can be built and equipped for $500,000 it will add little to the cost of a dreadnought to have a fleet of airships attending it to drive away any attacking sky fleet.

If the coming of the airship should put an end to the construction of costly battleships one advantage would be that as the small airships could be built very quickly there would not be the same necessity for huge expenditures in time of peace in order to be prepared for war. Already the German Government is offering to subsidize private citizens who own airships for pleasure purposes on condition that they shall be placed at the service of the Government in war time. When the use of airships becomes general a comparatively small annual expenditure of money would assure to the Government a large volunteer air navy. Under such a volunteer system the Government would not have to ask Parliament to vote immense sums annually for the maintenance of a navy in time of peace.

However, just as in course of time small sailing vessels gave place to small steamships and the steamships constantly increased in size and cost, so it may be expected that the airships will grow bigger and bigger and cost more as time goes on. But we may hope that long before the airship reaches the dimensions of a dreadnought the nations of the earth will have devised some way of putting an end to war.

THE AXE IN THE PARK

Every now and then there is some new revelation regarding the way in which the Ross Government tied up the resources of the Province of Ontario to private individuals or corporations.

The Review referred the other day to the way in which Mr. MacKay, the present leader of the Ontario Liberals, while a member of the Ross Government, surrendered the power rights of Fort Frances for the benefit of an American town on the opposite side of the river. Now comes the announcement that the beautiful and famous Algonquin Park, which was supposed to be the unencumbered property of the people of Ontario, is to fall a prey to the lumberman's axe because of an agreement made by the Ross Government with the Munns Company, of Orillia, by which this company is licensed to cut timber in the park. Hon. Mr. Cochrane, Minister of Lands and Mines, has been negotiating with the Munns Company in hope of buying out their rights if this could be arranged on reasonable terms, but they demand that the Government pay them $690,000 in cash or give them 90,000,000 feet of fine timber elsewhere, valued according to the prices the Government is now receiving for timber at $900,000.

The Whitney Government think that the people of the province would not approve of the payment of this immense sum to Munns & Company, and so the timber cutting will be allowed to proceed. Fortunately the devastating axe will not lay waste the whole of this beautiful park. Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands and Mines, says in reference to it:—

"No one regrets it more than I. It seems a terrible shame to devastate any portion of the park in the manner reported. But the right was given by statute, and the department is powerless. We have sought to prevent it without success."

EX-EMPRESS' MEMOIRS

WHY EUGENIE HAS NEVER PUBLISHED HER BOOK.

Although She Has Been Offered Fabulous Prices by the Biggest Firms In the World She Has Steadily Refused to Let Her Memories of Great Men of the Nineteenth Century See the Light of Day.

M. Jules Claretie has made public some of the facts about the spurious edition of the ex-Empress Eugenie's "Memoirs" which is said to be now ready for the market. The present writer can add further information, received direct by him from a friend and confidante of the ex-empress.

Some four years ago this great lady did consider seriously the possibility of giving to the world some, at least, of the priceless letters and documents in her possession—letters which, it is said, would make it necessary for historians of the Franco-German war, and the reign of Napoleon III. to re-write their work to a considerable extent.

A publisher who was among the first to hear the news, said to the writer at the time:

"I consider this book, if it can be had, to be the most valuable work that is available to the world to-day, in the way of memoirs."

Offers to her majesty poured in from all sides, and I understand that she finally had in sight $100,000 for the magazine rights and as cash guarantee for the book rights, the money to be paid on the nail on delivery of the MS. to a French publisher who was conducting the negotiations on behalf of a syndicate made up of one leading publisher in each of the principal countries, this sum to be augmented by heavy royalties on the book.

There was much traveling of publishers to and fro between London, Berlin, Paris and New York, and the arrangements were so far completed that contracts were drawn up between everybody concerned—all except with the "grande dame" principally interested.

She, on looking over the documents for which the publishers were so hungry, decided, so I am told, that their publication might throw too much light directly and indirectly on the causes of the Franco-German war which plunged France into misery, debt, and humiliation, and cost her Alsace and Lorraine, and likewise her majesty's husband and his throne in 1871.

There were details, too, that did not show the amiable Napoleon III. in the best light, and so at last his widow set her imperial foot down on the idea of publishing any of her memoirs or her letters.

It was a trying time for the ex-empress after that decision. Personal friends, induced, some of them, by promises of goodly commissions, kept on approaching her with all sorts of arguments to prove that it was her duty to the world to open those precious safes at Farnborough, England, where she lives. Her personal secretary, M. Pietri, was kept busy answering letters and keeping off impoverished marquises with publishers' commissions in their pockets.

According to her own statement, not one line of the forthcoming "Memoirs" has she written, or read, or authorized, and it was undoubtedly at her personal request that M. Claretie has made the announcement that the "Memoirs" are bogus. They have been offered all over Europe, and came near being sold to at least one American publisher. Now that the facts have come out, probably they will be suppressed, although it is said that a huge French edition has already been printed.

Of course, the financial side of the offers made to the ex-Empress Eugenie did not appeal to her, for she is extremely rich—probably one of the richest women in Europe. Perhaps her own inclinations were not altogether in the way, either, for her final decision was reached only a short time ago, after a visit from her nephew and heir, Victor Napoleon, who, doubtless, would be Napoleon IV., emperor of France, at this moment, if the republic had not been declared.

He will inherit her millions. He has never given up hope of getting back to the throne of France, as soon as he can be reinforced with the wealth of his imperial kinswoman, and naturally he would not like to have the old scandals and discussions revived—as revived they would be if the ex-empress should tell a tithe of what she knows, however carefully that tithe might be edited.

The ex-empress has added to her house at Farnborough an immense annex of corrugated iron, in which many mementoes are stored, including two of the magnificent state coaches, lined with white silk, which were once used by her. Among other treasures is the beautiful little perambulator, a gift to the ex-empress soon after the birth of the Prince Imperial, from Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort. Pictures of the Bonaparte family abound, the most interesting, perhaps, of all being one of the great Napoleon as a youth, and another of the ex-empress herself, surrounded by the ladies of the court.

At Farnborough, Eugenie has been even as charitable as her great means will allow. In the gayest of her days she had thought for the poor. When she fled from the Tuileries, and rude hands were laid on her wardrobe, fifty parasols were found in one drawer, her furs were valued at $150,000, and the whole of her wardrobe at $1,000,000. Yet she has been lavish where charities were concerned.

She holds the highest record in sponsorship; for she is godmother to 3,600 children. When her only child, the late Prince Imperial, was born, Napoleon III. announced that he and his wife would stand sponsors to all children born in France on the same day; and, despite changed circumstances, the ex-empress still keeps an exact list of her godchildren, and has set aside a legacy for each one now living.

Wingham District Methodists praised the Ontario Government's enforcement of the liquor laws.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"Yes, we'd be spitin' him too." Mr. Morningstar fairly smacked his lips with satisfaction. "The hand of Providence would be in it, and it would all work out for his honor and glory. Yes, I tell you the Lord sees a many a thing head of hisself that way!"

"You're spitin' every one but the one I'd like to spite," snapped Mrs. Morningstar, "and that's that deceitful girl, with her sneakin' ways and her playin' her tricks behind a body's back after all we done fur her a'ready!"

"Seems we haven't darst to talk about that no more—what we done fur her. Seems she done everything fur us," Mr. Morningstar sarcastically added. "Now, look a-here, mom; we'll fix it up between Abe and Eunice before the Doc gits back. See? I'll go ahead and tell Abe he has the dare to pass his promise to Eunice, and you kin tell her she dare have Abe now without workin' no more tricks to git him."

It was a bitter thing to Mrs. Morningstar, this task allotted to her, but it was to become more bitter still before she was through with it.

It appeared for a moment that it was going to be made easy. Abe, entirely unsuspicious of what was brewing, came to his mother that very evening after his day's work was over with a passionate protest against her opposition to his marrying Eunice and a plea that she "leave" him have the girl.

"To be sure, Eunice she knows you're agin it, so she purtends she don't want me. You go tell her you're in fur it—our gettin' promised together—and certainly then she'll be only too glad to git me."

This was Abe's point of view.

"Glad to git you! Well, I guess mebbe!" Mrs. Morningstar retorted. "It's a wonder you wouldn't look higher, Abe Morningstar."

"I have wonderful tired, mom, of hearin' of this 'lookin' higher.' I got my age—I'm a man—and it's my own affairs if I look high or low for my wife. Eunice she suits me all right. Even if she won't have no aussteuer and ain't got nothin' comin' to her, she's anyhow not one to spend at the close or to run, and she's so handy at the work I'd never have to hire fur her. So if I am lookin' low, I ain't doin' so bad, takin' it all in all. If you and pop would only stop kickin' I'd soon git her to pass her promise. And I tell you right here, mom, I'm goin' to marry her, anyhow—whether yous like it or whether yous don't. So yous might as well stop your kickin.' To be sure it would make me less work persuadin' Eunice if yous would stop kickin'. She's awful stubborn headed about it."

Mrs. Morningstar sniffed contemptuously.

"Och, but men is dumm things! Her stubborn-headed about takin' you!—when she's been makin' eyes at you and trying to git you ever since you was in long pants a'ready and she was in long frocks!"

"I ain't took notice she was tryin' to git me," Abe answered sullenly. "I can't never git her to be even sociable with me. And before she'd go buggy ridin' or to a circus with me! Cert'nly that was because she had afraid of yous."

"Well, Abe, seein' this here's the way you feel and you bein' my own son that way, I'll put to aside my regrets and leave her have you. I'll tell her tomorrow."

Abe was astonished at his easy success with his mother. He had anticipated a complete routing.

"Will you make it all right with pop?" he eagerly and gratefully inquired.

With subtle diplomacy she answered that she would.

It was not until the next evening that she brought herself to broach the subject with Eunice.

When the evening chores were finished and the girl was about to take her lamp to go up to bed, she stopped her and made her sit down with her in the kitchen.

"I got to speak somepin to you," she began in a tone of sullen reluctance, her whole person bristling with the antagonism she felt against her enforced concession. "Me and pop's been talkin' it over, and we conceited we'd tell you that you'd worked pretty good and steady fur us and now that you're got your age and ain't got no more claim on us we wouldn't like to see you throwed out on the world neither, seein' how we brang you up like our own.

"Had you anything else to say to me?"

So we just conceited that rather'n let you unpurtected on the world we'd keep on bein' parents to you, though, to be sure, we thought to look higher fur our Abe, him bein' our only son."

Eunice, sitting opposite her at the kitchen table, was looking at her rather vaguely. But at this reference to Abe her eyes lost their absent gaze, and she met her foster mother's eyes with a fixity which the latter found almost disconcerting.

She made no reply, but waited in silence for Mrs. Morningstar's ramblings to come to a focus.

"To be sure, our Abe could do a lot better. But then, seein' you've got him so's he thinks he wants you, why, us we're not puttin' no hindrance in your way. You kin have him."

She looked for some joy or gratitude from Eunice, but the girl continued to regard her fixedly and without replying.

"We mean it," she said testily. "You're got the dare to marry him, seein' you want him so bad. To be sure, I guess it's hard fur you to take it in that we're leavin' you have your way!"

Still the girl had nothing to say.

"Well?" cried Mrs. Morningstar impatiently. "What are you got to say fur yourself? Can't you even speak saddy (thank you) to a body?"

"I wonder what you expect me to say"—the girl's soft voice at last answered the woman's rough tones—"to thank you for offering me your son?"

"That's little enough to expect anyhow," Mrs. Morningstar retorted.

Eunice rose slowly and stood resting her hand on the table. "Had you anything else to say to me?"

"You needn't go right aways. Set awhile," she commanded. "There's some things we'd better talk out now we're at it."

"What things?" Eunice asked hesitatingly, not sitting down.

"Och, I'd like to know how soon you and Abe thinks yous would like to stand up to say 'Yes' (get married), and when you'll want to be buyin' your aussteuer, and when yous want to go to housekeepin'—things like them."

"We need not discuss those things. I will not marry Abe."

Mrs. Morningstar stared at her uncomprehendingly. Eunice waited.

"What d'you say?"

"I will not marry Abe."

"Och," the woman said impatiently, "what's the use foolin' time away with purtendin' and talkin' so dumm?"

"I am feigning nothing. I would not dream of marrying Abe."

"Is it that you want to be coaxed or whatever?" Mrs. Morningstar demanded, an angry red in her cheeks. "There I am fur stoppin' when it would come to coaxin'. I ain't coaxin' you any."

"It would be useless, certainly."

"What do you mean?" asked the woman, fairly bewildered at such unexpected and incredible behavior.

"Why should you think I want to marry Abe?" the girl suddenly asked. "I have long wondered why you thought I must necessarily wish to"—she hesitated an instant, while Mrs. Morningstar could only stare at her in blank amazement—"because," continued Eunice, "there is no fate which I would think more tragic than being married to your son."

"You ain't talkin' sincere!" the woman cried. "I'd like to know how you think you could do better or half as good?"

"I think I could not do worse."

"Couldn't do worse'n marry our Abe! You!"

The girl was patiently silent. Something convincing in her bearing made Mrs. Morningstar begin to suspect that she actually meant what she said, and even greater than her indignation at this unbelievable slight to her son was her sudden dread of having that $3,000 go out of the family.

"It's her thinkin' that there money's comin' to her makes her so sassy and high minded about Abe," she thought, "or mebbe Hen Mucklehenny got a chanct to see her unbeknownst to me, and she thinks she'd be doin' better to take him."

"So this here's your gratefulness fur all we done fur you a'ready!" she upbraided the girl.

A look of weariness came into Eunice's eyes. She took up her lamp and turned away from the table.

"Who do you want to marry, then?" Mrs. Morningstar stopped her with the question.

"That is not a matter that it is necessary to discuss."

"Don't give me none of your back talk! And what do you do with usin' high language as if you was educated yet?"

Eunice did not answer.

"Is it Hen Mucklehenny you're after?"

"He is not quite so objectionable as Abe, but I'm not after him."

Inasmuch as Hen was considered by the Morningstars quite good enough for Ollie, this rejection of him by Eunice was an offense almost as great as her refusal of Abe.

"I'll tell you what!" Mrs. Morningstar harshly exclaimed. "You're after that there Doc Kinross; that's what! Him and you fixed it up between yous somehow, though fur the life of me I don't see when, fur you certainly ain't never out of my sight long enough to make up to no man. A body'd have to keep you locked up in a closet yet to keep the men away from you or contrariwise to keep you from makin' eyes at the men and temptin' 'em! It's the $3,000 you think's comin' to you has made you all of a sudden so stuck up about our Abe! And now you think with all that money you kin marry a towner yet!"

A hot color burned in Eunice's cheek, but she looked at Mrs. Morningstar steadfastly.

"Three thousand dollars coming to me? What do you mean?"

"You want to purtend you don't know yet!" the woman said sarcastically, though her eyes wavered from the girl's face doubtfully. Was it possible she did not know?

"Will you explain to me what you mean?" Eunice repeated.

"It ain't neither here nor there! I didn't mean nothin'. Is Doc Kinross sweet on you?"

The girl's lips quivered, and her eyes suddenly glistened with tears.

"Do you want to know what he thinks of me?" she asked, her voice vibrating with suppressed bitterness. "He thinks so poorly of me as to believe me capable of marrying Abe!"

Her hopeless tone implied that he could think no worse. Mrs. Morningstar was dumfounded. Such a view of Abe was incomprehensible. And that it should be held by this girl whom she scorned, seemed past belief.

And yet, deep down in her heart she knew that Eunice spoke sincerely; that passing strange as it seemed, she actually did not want to marry Abe; that if that $3,000 was to remain in the family, she must stoop to coax! She coax this pauper girl, her serf, to marry her Abe! It was a bitter humiliation.

She began at first diplomatically. She said that of course they wouldn't "leave" their adopted daughter go penniless to her husband and that if she did marry their son they would give her a nice purse full of money—up in the hundreds.

But Eunice did not rise to the bait. Then the woman humbled herself to plead with her and to speak of Abe's love for her. But this, too, failed.

"Let us talk of it no more," Eunice gently begged, feeling utterly exhausted after a half hour of the futile discussion. "It is of no avail to talk."

Mrs. Morningstar tried then to lash herself into a rage and upbraid her obstinacy, but she found herself strangely tongue tied. This was a new and unfamiliar Eunice, this girl who calmly refused to obey her, who used as "high language" as if she were "book learnt" and who didn't think Abe "good enough fur her." In place of the contempt with which she had always treated her she found herself inspired almost with a sense of awe before her and certainly with a novel feeling of respect.

When at last Eunice left her for the night Mrs. Morningstar, having entirely failed in her commission, wondered as she took her lamp to go upstairs what "pop" would say of her failure and whether the girl's amazing refusal would leave him as dumfounded as it had left her.

CHAPTER XX.

KINROSS' telegram to Newport brought an immediate reply. Miss Wolcott was at her summer home and would be there until late in the autumn.

He had time on his journey to reflect upon the episodes of the past few days with comparative coolness of judgment and to see some things with more clearness than on a first view; also the various developments of the summer appeared in somewhat different perspective now that he looked at them from a little distance.

"I went to that farm to find seclusion, quiet, a monotony that would leave me free to study, and what I fell into—plots and counterplots, with country courtships, disguises, a stolen infant, haunted chambers, murders, suicides, ghosts and a discovered heiress! Who'd 'a' thought it? I couldn't have found half so much excitement at Newport. Why, it's been a strain!"

He had been told before leaving the farm that his fellow boarders were to go back to town before his return. When he had paid his board Mrs. Morningstar, under the effect of his extra fees for her conniving in his disguise, had thawed so far as to volunteer the promise that she would account to the young ladies for his departure by saying that the farmhand had been discharged because of the inconvenient and uneconomical frequency of his headaches. He wondered whether in his absence any accidental hints would be dropped as to his pretended character. He could not think without a growing uneasiness of the fast approaching reopening of the college, when he would have to meet Miss Ellery and Miss Parks as Dr. Kinross of the faculty.

It was when he was nearing the end of his journey that some indistinct apprehensions which had been vaguely troubling him began to assume definite shape and the realization to dawn on him that perhaps he had been rash in coming away and leaving Eunice in ignorance, even for a week, of her possible good fortune. Goodness knows what she might do in this week of his absence. Abe was evidently very desperately in love with her, and the Morningstars, in their dire chagrin at being obliged to pay over to her that $3,000, might drive her to the point of marrying Abe in self defense, as it were. Of course it was only her utter ignorance of life that made her tolerate Abe, though even that did not seem to excuse such bad taste. Fancy Miss Wolcott receiving Abe Morningstar as her nephew-in-law! The picture made him laugh aloud.

The wearing doubt as to whether Miss Wolcott could be brought to acknowledge Eunice as her niece and recognize her claims was never absent from his mind for an instant. At times he felt that he was going on a fool's errand. If, at the time the Daniels wrote to her, she had not even tried to see the child to prove or disprove their story, how could he hope that now, after all these years, she would concede what was so much against her own interests?

"If only I were a diplomat instead of 'a blunt, plain man' I might lead up to my story so prettily and persuasively that before she knew it she'd be burning to illustrate artistically the beauty of self sacrifice in her own person. But I know I'll make a muddle of it. 'Your money or your life!' That's more my style, more's the pity!"

He consoled himself with the reflection that if Eunice did not come into the money it would probably be far better for her, and it was only by reason of his sense of justice that he was trying to place her in command of the great wealth that belonged to her. He himself was remarkably free from the money madness of the age. He had always had more than enough for his needs, but not enough to spoil him, and had therefore gone through life, thus far, escaping the mania for accumulating wealth.

"Her money may quite spoil the attractiveness she now has in her simplicity, her perfect naturalness, when one is alone with her. Just the antipodes of Georgiana! There couldn't be a more extreme contrast of character. Georgiana is a personified pose. If she ever did a spontaneous thing in my presence, ever made an unstudied remark, I think I'd fall in love with her on the spot!"

It was at 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoon that he presented himself at the home of Miss Wolcott. He sent in his card and waited on the piazza, which was furnished like a sitting room and shaded by screens from the hot summer sun. His suspense as to the outcome of the impending interview made him too uneasy to sit still, and he paced the long porch in his nervousness, wondering for the hundredth time how he could most convincingly relate his story and trying to school himself against too great bluntness in the delicate matter he had to handle. He rather took it out of the porch furniture before Miss Wolcott made her appearance, for in striding about he pushed things ruthlessly out of his way, nearly upsetting a spindle legged table holding a slender vase of roses and making a stool noisily collide with another table covered with books and magazines.

A sudden swish of skirts in the doorway made him turn about at the end of the porch and come back quickly to meet the uncomfortably stout little woman who walked forward to greet him.

Though Miss Wolcott was gowned in the thinnest of white material she looked overheated. Her complexion was distressingly florid, her movements were ungraceful and her voice had an unpleasant sharpness. Kinross felt his already faint hopes fail him entirely as he realized the general hardness of her aspect. He pinned his case upon what he believed he recognized in her countenance, in spite of its coldness—an uprightness of character that perhaps justified, somewhat, her pride of blood.

"It is good to see you again, Dr. Kinross," she began as they sat down together. "It is always a pleasure to me to meet old friends. Did you know," she continued volubly, "I had a call from your brother one day last winter, when he had run on to Washington from New York—it was on one of my at home days and of course he met a lot of his old friends—and he remarked as he was leaving how pleasant it had been to meet them. I told him he would never meet any but old acquaintances at my house. In our circle we don't meet the new people, fortunately."

This was a good beginning, certainly.

"But what a tragic deprivation to the new people!" he remarked, with a perfunctory smile intended to take the edge off his sarcasm.

"I am aware," she said stiffly, "that you do not share my strong feelings about such things."

"No," he said, "I'd associate with the devil if I found him interesting."

"Such bohemian views are unworthy of your blood," she said with grave reproachfulness. "I hope you don't go so far as to be willing to marry out of your rank?"

"No, I draw the line there. I'm not willing to marry out of my rank—nor yet in it. I'm quite unwilling to marry at all."

"You haven't been an easy prey," she admitted. "How have you managed to escape falling in love all these years?"

"But love hasn't anything to do with rank—if you'll pardon my platitudes."

"No one, man or woman, need permit himself to fall in love outside of his own station in life," she said dogmatically, "or if he is so weak let him conquer himself."

Kinross smiled and was silent. He would not argue.

Miss Wolcott abruptly changed the subject.

"Well, Peter, what is this 'important business matter' which gives me the pleasure of a call from you? Your telegram has made me very curious. I didn't know how to wait until you got here."

"But you must really wait a few moments longer. I must not be precipitate. That's the one thing I've been telling myself all the way here—not to be precipitate, but to break it to you gently, to lead up to it diplomatically, rhetorically, if possible. Unfortunately my style was ever a la cookbook—direct and to the point."

TO INLAND AUSTRALIA FOR YOUR HEALTH

ROUND TRIP ONLY $1.00

If you are a catarrh, asthema or hay fever sufferer, what would you say is the above offer was made you?

How would you like to go to the mountainous forest of pine and eucalyptus, where catarrh and asthma do not exist? Where people do not have to hawk every morning, to spit out the lump of disgusting mucous? Where the healing, antiseptic balsams purify the air and kill all germs?

You can't go to this ideal spot, of course. You haven't time, and possibly not money. But you can, for $1, bring the healing balsamic air from these forests right to your home: you can kill the germs of catarrh at home, without losing a minute's time.

Ask Wm. Madill about Hyomei, the Australian dry air cure. Get an outfit, which includes inhaler, for $1, breathe the same air that you would find in Australia, and if it does not heal the raw membrane and cure your catarrh, snuffles, cough, cold or asthma, you can have your money back.

To Start a Tight Screw.

Lots of folks have tried to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw: Heat a poker red hot and then hold it against the screw head for a little while; wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be removed quite easily with the same screwdriver that just previously would not perform the work. The explanation is quite simple. The red hot poker heats the screw, and the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

FIRST MEETING IN CENTRAL SMITH

Co-operative Fresh Air Circles Will be Organized Throughout the County

A movement is on foot in and around Peterborough County for the betterment of the quality and quantity of poultry products. A special feature of the movement is the organization of coperative fresh egg circles. Farmers and poultry raisers in general (as the outcome of this organization) will pay strict attention to the gathering and marketing of their eggs and in doing so they will receive better prices. The consumer will in no way be over-taxed as a result. He will pay simply for what he gets and better still, get what he pays for.

Several meetings are being arranged for in different sections of Peterborough County. The first will be called at Central Smith, town hall on Thursday evening next. Meetings will also be held at Pine Grove, Zion, Stewart's and Monaghan on dates to be announced later.

Farmers and their wives, sons and daughters and all interested in poultry, would do well to attend. Good meetings are promised.

William Smallcombe, of St. John's, Nfld., was killed by a team near Crystal City, Man.

ON THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 27th

A public meeting will be held in THE COUNCIL CHAMBER, at which Mr. F. E. Coulter will explain the proposed bill to amend the assessment act. Cyrus B. Newton, of California, humorist and entertainer, will tell the results of a similar movement in New Zealand, and will bring a smile or two with "Aunt Stuttsnickers Ideas on Reform." Admission Free. Eight o'clock.

THE REBEKAH EXCURSION WAS GREAT SUCCESS

The second annual excursion of Golden Link Rebekah Lodge, I.O.O.F., was held to Stoney Lake yesterday. Though the weather threatened to be unfavorable at first, the bright sunshine which soon came out dispelled the clouds and put every person on board in good humor. Over two hundred availed themselves of the opportunity of taking in the trip and a very enjoyable time was spent by all. After having dinner at Mt. Julian all the most popular parts of Stoney Lake were visited. Owing to the fact that no long stops were possible at any point, and that few children were present, no games or races of any kind were indulged in. A refreshment booth on board the boat was exceedingly well patronized and quite a tidy sum was realized. The fact that the profits exceeded last year by over $25 is very encouraging to the committee in charge.

The orchestra on board, consisting of a violin, piano and bass violin, furnished all that could be desired in the musical line, and added greatly to the pleasure of the trip. Too much credit cannot be given to the active, energetic committee in charge, for their efforts in making the affair such a success.

The members of the committee were Mesdames Watts, Meredith, Hartley and Gibbs, and Messrs. F. Reasor, Geo. Maitland and Bert Watts.

You are invited to the Mission Band sale of homemade cakes and candies in St. John's school to-night, from 8 to 10 o'clock. Good programme, light refreshments. Admission by silver collection

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH OATH MIGHT BE CHANGED

All Christian Churches Should Re-state Their Attitude Toward Each Other—Discourse on Proposed Modification of Coronation Oath

In dealing with the King's declaration oath Sunday night in St. Andrew's church, the pastor, Rev. J. G. Potter, based his sermon on Acts I, 9: "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel."

Israel had always made the huge blunder in imagining that God wanted them to be world rulers instead of His servants for the blessing and enrichment of the world. It led to misconception of their true function, and filled them as a nation with pride and arrogance, which, in face of the acknowledged glory of Solomon's kingdom, soon brought disaster, ruin and exile to the people. At different stages in their history this was emphatically evident. When the prophets spoke of a Messiah and deliverer they at once concluded that a time would come when their heel would be on the neck of their oppressors. In the teaching of the Apostles Christ emphasized their personal obligation to the state and said: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

To the mother of James and John in answer to her inquiry regarding the official positions they might occupy in His Kingdom, He said: "It is not mine to give," and again refers to the important truth, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight."

When Christ went up to Jerusalem to lay down His life to the temporal rulers, St. Peter rebuked Him; but He said, "Get thee behind me Satan, for thou savourest not the things that be of God."

When the sword was drawn in His defence at the hour of betrayal, He vigorously said: "Put up thy sword into his sheath."

On the eve of His ascension to the right hand of God He announced to them their great mission in the world and promised the Divine Spirit to guide and inspire them. It was at this time that they again manifested their very narrow conception of 'Power' and 'Kingdom.' Their national power was a vanishing thing. God's power was eternal as the hills. Their kingdom had always been a narrow, frail thing liable to be broken into atoms. Christ's kingdom had its foundations in eternal love, and His realm would be in the hearts of men.

The great work of the Christian church in all its branches was to make known God's great love to mankind, for "God so loved the world that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It was always a very difficult matter to understand how the simplicity of the gospel message, and the simplicity of the Master's mission became mixed up with all the eternal spectacular conditions of the early centuries. But it is certain that the farther the church drifted from that simplicity of the first Christians, the more it became involved in arrogance, pride and oppression. This was true in later years of all the churches, Scottish, English and Roman, and gave rise to a great deal of unwarranted intolerance and enmity on the part of professed Christian leaders.

It is only of recent years that even Presbyterian and Methodist ministers have given up accentuating each other's differences, and it was a fact of history that all the churches down through the years had allowed their differences, few in number, to become the special objects to anathematize father than to make the very many similarities in doctrine and worship a strong ground for Christian fraternal relations and union in working out the will of God.

Mr. Potter very properly and forcefully referred to the strong popular demand for union in political life and how astutely Sir Wilfrid Laurier and R. L. Borden arrange matter so that they may harmonize both Catholic and Protestant voters. In commercial life it was the growing demand that merchants or their clerks, or their merchandise should not be classed Protestant and Catholic. In matters civil there was a growing desire that there should be no distinction between good public men, but it was sad to think that religion was the only bone of contention. The speaker declared that the time was now on when reading and thinking men would see this great evil and would simply throw overboard any connection with any organized form of ecclesiasticism.

The interference on the part of the church in State affairs had led to an unhappy condition in Scotland, as well as in England, and both Church of Scotland and Church of England had suffered by it. The people of the Roman Catholic faith enjoyed greater liberties under the British flag than any, and there was no possible reason why all churches should not have equal claim to acknowledge submission and loyalty to our rightful sovereign.

Mr. Potter then read the different forms of oath taken (1) By the King of Great Britain (2) By the Bishops of Quebec; (3) The modified form used by English-speaking bishops; (4) The oath taken by Princess Ena in her renunciation of her Protestant faith; (5) Reference to the naturalization oaths of all countries, which all led him to conclude:

1. The need of a re-statement of all declarations and oaths of all parties concerned within the same empire. There was so much ground for harmony and "the unity of the faith."

2 Nothing could be amended or righted by simply passing resolutions of resentment or demand. If the desire is real and genuine on the part of the leaders of the Church of Rome to be put on an equal footing with other Christians, then let Sir Charles Fitzpatrick—so far as Canada is concerned—be ready to state that fact and to give assurances that so far as the Church of Rome is concerned she will stand for all that has made British rule beneficient everywhere. This ought to apply to any church, Pro- representatives of the Vatican from the Parliaments and legislative halls of a free people, and from the courts of a constitutional monarch. This ought to apply to any church, Protestant and Catholic.

3. There cannot be any doubt that in order that our new King might enjoy the fullest measure of loyalty from all his people the greatest care should be exercised that there is nothing allowed that may be construed in direct antagonism to any section of his subjects. In other words he should be placed in the position of one who can look upon all with regal favour, while at the same time he deserves and ought to readily receive documentary assurances of the constant and loyal support of all his people.

4. There must be the withdrawal of all "damning" clauses from confessions of faith of all the churches within the empire. The Church of Christ ought to be ashamed to have them anyway. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay," saith the Lord.

5. It ought to be the object of all the churches to work together for the good of the people and make our ecclesiastical bodies more the servants of Christ.

A GOOD RICH, FARMING LAND IN THE GREAT CLAY BELT

Mr. H. B. Cowan Tells What Newspaper Men Think of the New District Open for Settlement in Northern Ontario

Mr. H. B. Cowan, of "Farm and Dairy" was one of the party of newspaper men who went on the Canadian Press Association trip to Northern Ontario He has kindly given the Review the following account of his trip;

The vast inheritance in minerals and in the clay lands of New Ontario cannot begin to be appreciated by the residents of old Ontario who have not had the privilege of visiting and seeing something of the districts for for themselves. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week, some 140 members of the Canadian Press Association travelled by special train over the Grand Trunk and Temaskaming and Northern Ontario Railroads to the National Transcontinental railroad, and then some 35 miles west along the Transcontinental to the Mattagami river, being the first party to ever travel this far on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Although newspaper men are accustomed to unusual experiences, the whole party returned from the north, full of enthusiasm over the great possibilities of the section and determined, as president McKay stated at a public reception tendered the party at North Bay, on Saturday evening, by the citizens of the town, to do everything in their power from now on to advertise the possibilities of New Ontario. From now on, the cry will be, not "go west," but "go north, young man."

The first impression as one travels north is disappointing. Once the Muskoka district is entered the character of the country is rocky and unpromising in the extreme, until Cobalt is reached. Rivers and lakes abound, however, adding much to the scenery. Cobalt was a surprise to everyone. No one who had not been there, had any idea of its extent. The newspaper men were divided into different parties, and taken to inspect different mines. The editorial representative of Farm and Dairy went with a party of about 12, to visit the Temiskaming mine. This lies some six miles from the center of the town of Cobalt. The whole six miles was through a mining region, mines abounding on all sides. The country is so uneven in character, it would be difficult to find a field level enough to have a good game of ball on. Trees have been almost entirely removed, making the country look barren.

The hillsides in all directions are dotted with shacks, smelters, power houses and other buildings used in the work of the mines. Great pipes run over the surface of the soil in every direction, there being many miles of them. These conduct the power that is used in the development of the mines. Trenches are dug up and down the hills in all directions, showing where prospectors have been searching for veins of mineral. At the Temiskaming mine the party was shown the immense plant and taken 400 feet down into the mine. Everything about this mine indicated that it is being well managed, and that it had good prospects. A vein was shown at the 400-foot level, from which silver of good quality was being extracted.

MINING INVESTMENTS

Excellent evidence of how a few people make great fortunes while scores of people lose their money in the mining business, was furnished during the visit in Cobalt. One mine, the Temiskaming and Hudson Bay Co., has paid profits in one year, of as high as 6000 per cent. One farmer near New Liskeard, who invested $800 in this mine, drew $4,000 profit within a few months. Shortly afterwards he drew $206,000 in profits. His stock is now valued at $350,000. Against this, however, is the fact that out of about 125 mining companies that have been organized in the Cobalt district, only 24 are shipping ore, of which only 12 are paying profits. Of the 12, several are only paying small profits. Not more than three or four are paying very large profits, and only the one mentioned is paying enormous profits. In the mine that is paying the large profits there are only a few shareholders. While it is unquestionably true that the Cobalt district is the greatest silver mining camp in the world, still people will find it well to be careful when they invest money in it.

The population of Cobalt is about 7,000. Haileybury is five miles away on the bank of Lake Temiskaming. Steam and electric cars connect Haileybury with Cobalt, houses dotting almost the entire route. The population of Haileybury is between 5,000 and 6,000. When it is remembered that five or six years ago Cobalt was practically unknown, while Haileybury was not much more than a small trading post, some idea of the growth of the section may be gained.

GOOD FARMING LAND.

New Liskeard is five miles from Haileybury, and also on the shore of Lake Temiskaming. It is at New Liskeard that the good farming land commences. It is in the centre of a good farming district, and the section around is fairly well settled, although good land can be purchased at reasonable prices.

The members of the Press Association left New Liskeard about 12 o'clock at night, and travelling steadily all night, did not reach Cochrane, which is the terminus of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, and the junction point of the Transcontinental Railway, until between 7 and 8 o'clock the next morning. The whole district, as was noted on the return journey, is of excellent clay land. Although in some cases there are swamps which will require draining.

At Cochrane, a year and a half ago, there was not a child in the place. When the journalists arrived it was found that the school had been adjourned, so that the school children could be marched in a body to the train. Farm and Dairy counted 38 boys and 38 girls in the procession. A brighter, happier and better dressed lot of youngsters could hardly be seen anywhere. When Mr. McKay, the president of the association, asked them a series of questions about Canada and the British Empire they answered him so quickly and accurately as to prove they were well grounded and well educated. They filled the hearts of all who heard them with pride.

Already at Cochrane there are one or two banks, two or three religious denominations are represented, a hotel is being erected by an ex-sheriff of Renfrew county, which will have some 68 rooms, and buildings are springing up in all directions.

GOOD SOIL AND LEVEL COUNTRY.

At this point, the members of the party had a good opportunity to inspect and ask questions about the nature of the soil. Every indication was, that the soil was equally as goof in character, as can be found in the best sections of old Ontario. Cochrane was said to be about 140 miles from Hudson Bay, as the crows fly. While travelling along the Transcontinental to the Mattagami river, some 35 miles, the country was perfectly level in character, not a hill of any importance being seen. It is well wooded, mostly with spruce and young pine trees, while stones were so scarce as to indicate that their lack may be felt later, when the country is developed in the building of roads, etc.

A WELL-WATERED COUNTRY.

The whole country is well watered, lakes and rivers existing at close enough proximity to ensure good drainage and plenty of water for the settlers. In this respect, the district is infinitely superior to the prairie land of the west.

On the return trip, stops were made at Mattheson, Monteith, where the experimental farm is located, and at Englehart. At Monteith the experimental farm comprises some 640 acres on 103 of which the trees have been cut, and of which 16 have been stumped and are under cultivation. Two acres, that a month ago had been unstumped, were found to be under crop. Nine employees are at work on the farm, which is under the control of Mr. J. Whitton, formerly of Ingersoll. Mr. Whitton reached the farm early in April, and does not like to pronounce on the character of the soil, until he has taken a crop off it. So far, however, he is favorably impressed with it. He drew attention to a field of fall wheat, that was in excellent condition and growing well. He stated that this wheat had come through experiences, which would have killed a similar crop in old Ontario. Clover, which had been frozen once or twice, apparently had not been injured and was doing well.

Throughout the trip, the weather was warm and pleasant. Part of the time President Creelman, of the Guelph Agricultural College, who formed one of the party, representing the Minister of Agriculture, found it more comfortable to shed his coat, and that the government engineers estimate that there are some 14,000,000 others follow his example. When it is remembered that Cochrane is 480 miles north of Toronto or about the same distance that the city of Quebec is east of Toronto and that government engineers estimate that there are some 14,000,000 acres of clay land in new Ontario, and that only about 12,000,000 acres of land are being farmed in older Ontario some conception of the vastness of the region may be gained.

While to some, the fact that the country is timbered, may be a drawback, it is not a serious one. The timber is not large in size, much of it having been burned over and consequently the land can be cleared rapidly and at little expense. The numerous towns and cities ensure good markets for farm produce. The land can be obtained from the government by settlers for 50 cts. an acre. This land is within reasonable distance of railroads and towns. In the west, settlers now have to go 30 and 40 miles from the railroads to get good land. What a difference!

A SERIOUS ILLNESS RELIEVED BY PE-RU-NA.

MRS. WILLIAM HENDERSON, Craik, N. W. T., Can., writes:

"I was troubled with very serious internal weakness, which exhausted me so that I feared I would lose my mind.

"I suffered agony with my back, the pain extending down my left leg. The pain was so severe that I would have welcomed death as a relief.

"Peruna cured me of this trouble,—no wonder I recommend it so highly.

"It will soon be two years since I found relief from the pain and not a sign of it has returned.

"I am glad that there is a way in which I can speak of this, as many a sufferer may read my testimonial, and not only read, but believe."

Had Given Up All Hope.

Mlle. Albina Chauvin, No. 50 Rue Agnes, St. Henri, Montreal, Canada, writes:

"I consider Peruna better than any other remedy, as it cured me when nothing else could.

"I suffered for years and years with heart trouble, headaches and weakness. I never expected to find anything to cure me.

"I tried Peruna and am entirely cured."

RUPTURE

Mr. A. Claverie
IS NOW AT ORIENTAL HOTEL
UNTIL WEDNESDAY
From 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., and from 6 to 9 p m.
GO AND SEE HIM.

I draw again the attention of those of my readers who are suffering from Rupture, that they are able now to secure a radical relief to their disease.

Mr. A. Claverie at the request of numerous persons, is come back to Peterborough. He is until Wednesday, at the Oriental Hotel, where all ruptured may go to consult him free.

The Apparatus and the Method of Mr. A. Claverie are too well known to day in Canada to praise any further their high qualities. I will simply state again that the main reasons which have made the Apparatus of Mr. A. Claverie absolutely incomparable, are the following:—

They maintain any kind of rupture, even the oldest, and this perfectly.

They never get out of place, no matter the exertion made.

They are extremely comfortable, and easy to wear, even by the most delicate persons.

They can easily be worn during the night.

They are light and absolutely invisible under the clothing.

THEY ARE DESIGNED UPON SCIENTIFIC AND MEDICAL LINES TO SECURE A DEFINITE CURE.

One may thus understand why this Apparatus has created a real REVOLUTION in the treatment of rupure and why they are accepted with SUCH ENTHUSIASM by the best doctors and the patients themselves.

There is not a ruptured in Peterborough who would lose this chance of securing safety and health.

HOW COMETS TRAVEL

To-day the comet is 25,000,000 m miles distant from the earth. Look for it in the western sky after the sun has set, if atmospheric conditions are clear.

A comet is the most haphazard, the most capricious, the most puzzling of celestial bodies. Even before Halley's comet flared into visibility to the naked eye, another comet, known as comet A., 1910, was discovered at Johannesburg, South Africa, in January and was as bright as the planet Venus in day light. Comet A came quite unexpectedly. It is not at all improbable that another comet brighter than comet A, brighter than Halley's comet, may suddenly sweep around the sun before the end of the year 1910. Probably more than one-half of all the comets, which might be termed telescopically visible, are visisle, are never discovered at all, because they are drowned in the dazzling glare of the sun. It has happened on two occasions that comets have been discovered during total eclipses, which otherwise would never have been seen at all.

Whence do these strange visitors come from? Whither do they go? No one can tell. We can simply study their orbits and determine, after much mathematical labor, whether they are old visitors that gleamed in the sky ages ago, or whether they are simply vagabonds that come once and then disappear forever.

It follows as one of the corollaries of Newton's law of gravitation, which Halley did so much to popularize, that comets move in eclipses, parobalos, or hyperbolas, all of them curves obtained by cutting a cone in different ways. If the ellipses are not too great, we may hope to see the comets which travel along them, again and again. If on the other hand, the ellipses are so great that they may be regarded as parobalos, which are open curves, we may all never again see the comets which pursue them. same holds true for comets travelling along hyperbolic curves.

The character of the comet's orbit depends entirely upon its velocity. If that velocity is considerably in excess of 26 miles a second, the orbit is either a parabola or a hyperbola, with the result that comet is merely a temporary visitor. If the velocity is less than 26 miles a second, the comet may be regarded as a member of our solar system, travelling in an ellipse, which brings it to visibility at more or less regular periods.

On the whole the speed of most comets exceeds that of the earth, which is about 18 1-2 miles per second, and therefore 1,000 times faster than the 20th Century Limited when steaming at its greatest speed.

Since Halley's time the orbits of nearly five hundred comets have been plotted with more or less accuracy, and of these about 70 described ellipses, 300 parabolas and 13 hyperbolas. The 70 comets which revolve about the sun in closed ellipses, return to the same point after periods that vary from three years to many hundred years. On an average two or three periodical comets appear every year, and three or four which are unexpected and will never be seen again. By its orbits alone can we identify a comet; for it always follows its own beaten track. The nucleus, the coma and the tail of every comet are subject to such wide fluctuation that it is hopeless to depend on them for recognition.

Sometimes a comet may be wrenched from its orbit by some powerful planet, derailed as it were, and made to revolve around the planet like a satellite. Such comets are spoken of as "captures." Jupiter has a family of no less than thirty comets, which it has plucked from their course. Saturn, Uranus and Neptune have also engaged in this species of robbery. Comet families are not found revolving around the earth, Mars, Venus and Mercury, because the gravitative power of the sun is much greater than theirs. Moreover, when a comet enters the inner portion of the solar system its velocity is such that the gravitation of attraction of the inner planets is not powerful enough to cause any appreciable deflection.

Although a comet's motion may be very swift as it nears the sun, there are times when it seems fairly to crawl. Halley's comet, for example, journeys beyond the orbit of Neptune, which is about 3,000 million miles away. It spends half its time circling the small arc which lies beyond Neptune's orbit. But when it swings around and drifts toward the sun, its speed increases. In a few weeks it describes an arc equal to that over which it spent as many years at the other extreme of its orbit. Some comets require thousands of years to return to the sun, instead of 75 or 79, as in the case of Halley's comet; yet most of that time they spent in travelling very slowly. Professor Herbert Hall Turner, of the University of Oxford, has pointed out that if there are one thousand comets, each requiring one thousand years to revolve around the sun, of which about a year is spent in its neighborhood, we would be provided with about one comet a year. If the period is ten thousand years, we should require ten thousand comets. Just what the average period is we do not know, but he ventures the supposition that it must be thousands of years at least, and that accordingly there must be thousands of comets, which hover most of the time at a distance from the sun. On the whole he is inclined to believe that there may be fifty million comets.

This study of the orbits of comets throws at least a little light on the origin of comets. Because the sun seems to exercise so powerful an influence upon them, some astronomers hold that comets must necessarily be members of the solar system. On the other hand it is thought by others that comets are but aggregations of primeval matter left lying in space and picked up and gathered into entities as the sun, and with it the entire solar system, travels through space.

THINKS RULE RATHER THAN EXCEPTION SHOULD BE TEST

To the Editor of the Review.

With reference to the verdict of the jury in the Bailley case,, does it not seem a little inconsistent that the parents of the child should be exonerated for depending upon Christian science treatment while the practitioner, who was merely an exponent of the same doctrine as that entertained by the parents, should be censured? Is it not also inconsistent that Christian scientists should be held up to public ridicule each time they fail to heal a case, while nothing is said of the scores and hundreds of cases that are constantly being lost by the so-called "regular" physicians? To be fair, we must judge any system, not on its occasional failures, but on its general results. Christian scientists ask only to be judged by the same standard as are others, but they must protest against unjust discrimination.

To call for a law to punish Christian scientists for healing the sick is to attempt to interfere with man's sacred right to choose his own religion, and such a law would be class legislation of the worst and most dangerous kind. Is a man to be forced to depend for his health upon materia medica simply because it happens to be the prevailing method, even though such dependence may have failed him in the past? The fact is that faith in drugs is rapidly passing away, and not only among Christian Scientists, but outside of their ranks, the use of drugs for healing is being abandoned. It is estimated by Eli G. Jones, M.D., in a recent important article, that at present there are in the United States alone 30,000 practitioners of some form of drugless healing, who are patronized by 17,600,000 persons. Dr. Jones, writing recently on the subject of medical legislation, says in the Burlington, N.J., Times:—

"Any law on the statute books of a state, making it a crime to heal the sick is a disgrace to any state. It is taking away the individual right of the people to choose their own physician when they are sick, whether it be an osteopath, mental science, Christian scientist or any form of healing. . . . Medical laws have been the best things to boom drugless healing that possibly could have been devised by the old school. . . . When will the doctors learn wisdom, and let these drugless healers alone?"

Thanking you for the space for making this correction, I remain,

Yours very truly,
O. P. MUNRO.

MONUMENT WAS UNVEILED BY WOODMEN OF THE WORLD

The ceremony of unveiling the monument to the late sovereign, Robert S. Shannon, by the Campbellford Camp, Woodmen of the World, assisted by the local Sherwood Forest Camp, No. 50, took place yesterday morning at Little Lake cemetery, and a large number of citizens attended the beautiful and impressive service. The members of the visiting camp were met at the Grand Trunk station on the arrival of the train from Campbellford, and, headed by the band, were escorted to the Sons of England Hall, where they were received by the members of Sherwood Forest Camp. At ten o'clock a procession was formed up, and with the band in attendance, the two camps marched to the cemetery. Arriving there, the members formed in a circle around the monument of the late brother, which was becomingly draped. The ceremony commenced with the reading of a prayer from the constitution of the order by Bro. A. Graham. He was assisted by Bro. Wm. Johnston. At the conclusion of the prayer the draping was slowly removed from off the monument by Bros. R. Jones and F. Dummitt. Dr. W. S. Harrison, of Toronto, Head Council Commander, then gave an address to those present. Dr. Harrison referred to the solemnity of the occasion. They were gathered to fulfill the last vows to their late brother. All believed that the departed member had become a member through love—love for his fellowmen and for his family. The speaker urged that every man provide in some way for those whom he will leave behind when death comes. The statistics of the United States showed that out of fifty thousand men who died, only two thousand left estates of $5,000 and under. Dr. Harrison also referred briefly, yet forcibly, to the noble work which fraternal societies are engaged, and he praised the men who formed the basis of such societies.

Prayer was next read by Bro. Graham, and this concluded the ceremony. The Woodmen paraded back to the hall, headed by the band.

LOCAL Y.M.C.A. ATHLETES WERE WINNERS AT LINDSAY

A number of the local Y.M.C.A. boys journeyed to Lindsay yesterday and succeeded in getting the lion's share of the prizes for the events of the big sports programme:—

Walter Cole ran second in the 5 mile event, being only beaten two feet by Price, of the I.C.A.C., Toronto, in 29.50, which is very good time when the condition of the roads are taken into consideration.

Walter Flowers won the 10 0yards all the way. He followed this up by winning the standing high jump, and then finished second in the running high jump.

Harold Hill ran away with the 100 yards for boys. H. Smith ran a good second in both the half and the mile events, which were run in very good time considering the track. Both these events were won by Pratt, of Toronto West End.

Claude Bartlett won the pole ... and was just nosed out in the running high jump.

The 2 mile relay race was between Lindsay Y.M.C.A. and the local association and was won by the latter, although the Lindsay boys pressed hard for the first part of the race. The local team was: Had. Lees, N. Rae, H. Hill and N. Phelan, and the time 9 minutes, 44.1-5 second.

Physical Director Thompson, of the local association, accompanied the boys and assisted in running off the events. Altogether it was considered a very good day, and it was enjoyed by all.

T.A.S. WON CLOSE GAME FROM COBOURG RED BIRDS

A big stay-at-home crowd journeyed to Riverside Park yesterday afternoon and witnessed the go between the Red Birds of Cobourg and the local T.A.S. City Leaguers. Good baseball was played and at the finish the scoreboard showed the figures to be 3—1, and the visitors had to put up with the one. The hitting and fielding stunts were all divided in a manner that added interest to the struggle and the Quinlan brigade had the edge of the honors. Glenn, who dished up the benders for the Red Birds, did not appear to have anything of a startling nature, and in consequence his garden followers had plenty to do, and they did it well. The mighty wallops of the T.A.S. connected with their glue pots and there they stuck. The infield handled the ball nicely and their throwing was also pretty. Quinlan took the firing mound for the locals for six innings and held the Birds to two hits and no runs. Yeb Flaherty took a turn in the seventh and the first two batters hit safely. In this innings the Laketown nine secured their only run, Hohibeck crossing the pan. Another likely looking tally was chopped off when Callaghan went to the fence on a wild peg from O'Brien and threw to McFadden at the plate.

The T. A. S. broke into the score column in the third, when Quinlan scooted home. Vince Corkery added another in the seventh, he having replaced Doherty, and Cahill made it 3—1 after he had hit safely.

The teams were:—

PARMER WINS PLATE.

Col. Hendrie's Horse Captures the Guineas In a Canter.

Toronto, May 25.—Prophecies that the recently enacted restrictive legislation would be reflected in an impaired attendance at the opening of the Ontario Jockey Club spring meet here were not the fruit of inspiration, to judge by the volume of the human tide which, defying the uncertain weather, flowed towards the Woodbine on Victoria Day.

It was freely remarked, however, that the King's Plate was the least spectacular race for many years. The wild excitement of many past occasions when the horses swung down the stretch was lacking, and it was in comparative silence that Parmer crossed the line a winner. It was not that Hon. Mr. Hendrie, the owner, is not widely popular, but that there was general disappointment over the poor showing of the much-heralded Jane Shore and the hollowness of the victory struck the public dumb with surprise.

First race—Trial Purse, 6 furlongs, purse $500, for two-year-olds and up—Selwik, 1st; J. Reardon, 2nd; Polls, 3rd. Time, 1.15 1-5.

THE RED FOX'S TRICKS

THE LITTLE FELLOW SEEMS TO OVERCOME ALL TROUBLES.

In Spite of All the Evils That Beset Him the Red Fox Thrives and Manages to Get Along Almost Anywhere—He Is a Fine Mouse-Catcher and Is of Great Service to the Farmer.

Too well known to need description; the joy of the hunter; hated by the farmer, yet one of his best friends; hunted, trapped, and poisoned by experts everywhere, the red fox holds his own in every section of the country. In fact he appears to thrive and increase best under the most difficult conditions.

Have you ever during the spring months visited a fox den where a mother fox and family reside? If not, one of nature's treats has been missed. In crossing a piece of woods one fine spring afternoon I was attracted to a place by a most peculiar noise. Moving forward with extreme caution, I approached the brow of a high hill on the banks of the Nottawasaga River, an ideal spot for a fox den. The afternoon sun shone warm on the hillside and I approached carefully. But the disturbance ceased when I arrived at the spot. What appeared to be a well-worn path down the hill caused me to remain quiet and await results. Suddenly a tawny, yellow little animal appeared and disappeared several times. At last he was followed by a half dozen more young foxes. Then the row started once more, and down the hill on their path went rolling, tumbling, and growling, a bundle of young rogues. At the bottom they would break away and rush up the hill a distance, then disappear into a hole only to appear higher up or lower down the hill from some underground passage, and repeat the tumbling act. A sharp cry in a thicket close by told me I had been seen by mother fox, and the little fellows were gone in a flash. All was still, but from a couple of holes there could be seen a moment later a small pointed nose and sharp eyes curious to know the danger. The moment I moved from my position I was seen and all vanished. Examining the den I found a number of holes for fully fifty feet up the hill. The path had been made by the young foxes, and no doubt was an ideal playground. At the foot of the hill was a much larger entrance to the den. At the mouth of this entrance was a perfect litter of refuse, among which I noticed wings of ducks, turkeys, geese, chickens, crows, grouse, and other small birds, also feet of small pigs and lambs, fur of hares, woodchucks, and muskrats, as well as refuse from a slaughter house fully two miles distant. This fox den was about one-quarter of a mile from the buildings of a farmer of my acquaintance. I called at his place and made inquiry regarding missing fowl, etc., and was assured by all the family that their fowl, were never molested by foxes, and that these marauders always went some distance to steal fowl. Inquiry revealed the fact that farmers two and three miles distant were contributing their share of fowl toward the keep of the fox family.

However, in the course of a few months these losses would be fully repaid. Foxes are great mousers. During the twilight hours, morning and evening, they may be seen in the grain fields hunting small rodent that would make farming almost impossible were it not for the tireless energy of the foxes in hunting and destroying them. No doubt this great supply of food during the summer and autumn montns accounts for the large numbers of foxes always to be found in farming districts.

Boating with a friend one evening on the Nottawsaga River, we were watching a couple of flocks of young wild ducks which with the mother ducks swam toward us. This action on the part of the ducks surprised us as we had always noticed young ducklings make to the shore or hide in weeds. My friend noticed an animal swimming in the water; we went after it, a few strokes of our paddles brought us close enough to see it was a red fox that scrambled up the bank into the dense growth of ferns. At the same moment we saw another fox standing in the weeds watching the ducks and ourselves. Then was revealed to us another of the fox's cunning tricks. One fox had gone into the water and was endeavoring to drive the mother ducks and helpless young to the shore where his confederate was ready to pounce upon them. We allowed our boat to drift down stream some distance. The ducks followed us for a time, then went past us and disappeared down stream. The foxes appeared on the banks again, took a short look at us and went their way. My friend's only comment was: "The rogues! I wonder would they have divided the spoil?"

On another occasion I joined a party of four to go fishing on the river at a point near the Georgian Bay. Rain had fallen heavily during the early morning hours, settling the dust on the sand cliffs along the river, thousands of cliff swallows were flying around and in and out of their nests in holes along the top of sand cliffs. Out attention was drawn to over a dozen of those nests that had been dug out and destroyed since the rain of the morning. Going on shore we found dozens of fresh fox tracks leading up the banks to the perpendicular face of cliff. At this point the fox was still about nine feet below the nests of the swallows, and here was where he showed his cunning by commencing to scratch the sand down making a small mound, thus raising himself up and at the same time undermining the nests. The contents no doubt they devoured with relish.—Mark Robinson in Saturday Night.

A CARELESS REMARK.

Jab at Salvationists Helped to Defeat Labor Lawyer O'Donoghue.

It does not pay for politicians, to speak carelessly, and it certainly behooves the man seeking the popular franchise to treat the Salvation Army with respect. Mr. J. G. O'Donoghue, the barrister who ran for South Toronto on the Labor ticket with the Liberal organization at his back, says that he made this discovery when he went down to defeat before Mr. A. Claude Macdonell, M.P., at the last Federal elections. Two or three years ago one or two so-called socialists, who were merely malcontents with no formulated economic views of any kind, got into trouble with the police by insisting on addressing public meetings at street corners and refusing to move on when rudely interrupted by the men in uniform. They were arrested and were defended by Mr. O'Donoghue, who is counsel for most labor sympathizers when they get into trouble. In the Police Court, in combatting the allegation that these orators were a public nuisance to those doing business in the vicinity of their meetings, he remarked that they were no more of a nuisance than the Salvation Army with its outdoor services, or words to that effect. The remark was made off hand with no desire to offend the religious convictions of anyone, but with a view to helping his clients. An evening paper, however, being short of a subject took it up editorially, and administered a castigation to Mr. O'Donoghue for speaking disrespectfully about the Army.

The episode was apparently forgotten by the time that the elections of 1908 came on and Mr. O'Donoghue found himself a candidate, making a house-to-house canvass in South Toronto, in which the electorate is almost without exception poor. Then he found that the casual remarks thoughtlessly made in the Police Court had proven veritable dragon's teeth and had roused up a host of enemies. He encountered the story that he was an enemy of the Salvation Army on all sides, and many of the poorer classes of his constituents were outraged at the idea.

"I attribute to that matter more than anything else the size of the majority against me," said Mr. O'Donoghue recently.

GERM INOCULATION.

Late Nicholas Murphy, K.C., Tried Hard to Prove a Grave Charge.

Readers of the daily papers are aware that in one of the large American cities a doctor was recently on trial on a charge of murdering his wife's uncle by inoculating him with typhoid germs. Such charges, which seem fantastic but are not beyond the region of possibility, have been made not infrequently since the germ theory of disease became accepted by scientists. Over fifteen years ago the late Nicholas Murphy, K.C., had a case of the kind which he desired to have ventilated in the public prints. It may be said that he did not succeed, for the most sensational editor then would have shied at such a story and there would have to be a prima facie case of overwhelming strength before a Canadian newspaper would touch such a story to-day. The case in question was one that involved a politician long since dead, who was at that time very prominent in Ontario. Charges of disreputable conduct in his private life were made against him, and the chief witness against him was a young woman who lived in his home as a sort of companion to his wife. Her own character, which was good, was not involved, and she was apparently in good health also when she fell ill with some slight sickness and was treated by a physician who was related to the politician in question. She never rallied, and before the criminal charges and the libel actions arising from the charges came to trial she had succumbed to galloping consumption.

To his dying day Nicholas Murphy, who was counsel for the young woman and who was responsible for bringing the original charges to light, averred that she was a victim of tubercular inoculation at the hands of the physician, but he could obtain no credence for his theory in any quarter.

Another Carrie!

An unrehearsed comedy, in which the chief actors were a slightly inebriated Italian, a quart bottle of whiskey and a disciple of Carrie Nation, took place in the Toronto Union Station recently.

While the native of Sunny Italy was inviting some companions to share in a bottle of rye, a representative of the W.C.T.U. arrived on the scene and at once took in the situation. Snatching the bottle from the hand of the astonished Italian, she ran to the track and dashed it on the rails.

When asked the reason for her action she replied that she was only doing her duty by removing temptation, adding that she wished she could break the neck of the saloonkeeper who had sold the whiskey as easily as she had broken that of the bottle.

London's Latest "Princess."

Miss Isabel Jay, who is to take the leading part in "The Balkan Princess," at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, made her first appearance on the stage in the summer of 1897 in the revival of "The Yeoman of the Guard." "An awful panic seized me," she says, "while I was waiting to go on the stage. Just as I felt that nothing could ever induce me to go on, Mr. Walter Passmore took me by the shoulders, and with a kind word literally pushed me on to the stage. The effect of suddenly facing the footlights and the audience was like an electric shock, and seemed to brace my nerves. I was told afterwards that I did not miss a note of my part, though to this day I cannot tell what I did that night."

IN CASE OF ...

What Britain Must Do to Protect Her Shores.

Not long ago, when British naval manoeuvres were in progress, one of our admirals was instructed to consider that he was in command of a squadron which was convoying transports containing 70,000 soldiers. He was also directed to land those troops, if he could, at a certain Scottish port. The admiral's area of operations was the North Sea. Now the North Sea is notorious for bad and uncertain weather, and is particularly susceptible to fogs. It happened that the admiral had fog nearly all the way across that famous stretch of water, and the result was that in theory he managed to reach his port and land his men, that is to say, if he had been in reality an enemy, he could have invaded Scotland.

His performance negatives the assertion which has been so often made that invasion of Great Britain is impossible. Nothing is impossible in war, when the unexpected so often happens, and on several occasions these imaginary descents on our own shores have been carried out with great success.

If in the next naval war the fight for sea supremacy takes place on the North Sea, as most authorities believe it will, no Englishman can escape from the depressing feeling that on any morning he may awake to learn that the country has been raided by a foreign horde, and that his own life and property are in peril, and that his fellow countrymen have been plunged into the worst horrors that humanity can know. During very recent years the possibility of invasion has been recognized, and, as I have already pointed out, the British fleet has been completely reorganized and redistributed with a view to meet such attempts to land on our shores. So heavy will be the strain and responsibility on the heads of our fleets in such times that it is scarcely possible for an ordinary person to realize the immensity of the burden.

When the conflict does come it will be such as the world has never known on the waters, because there have never been such powerful fighting machines afloat.

Let us assume that hostilities suddenly break out between ourselves and a powerful European nation, one possessing a fleet almost equal in strength to our own, or, at least, equal to any fleet that we can put against it without weakening our naval power in other parts of the world. We know that everything depends on our smashing the enemy at sea, and making it impossible to cover a landing force. Once he gets a footing he has achieved his main purpose; for while we are desperately striving to destroy him he will claim our attention elsewhere in the world.

War has been declared, and the Dreadnoughts and super-Dreadnoughts of both powers meet and fight for mastery. The whole forces of both nations it seems, have been assembled for the combat, and when the rival fleets encounter each other there ensues a contest of unparalleled ferocity.

The huge steel monsters fire at each other from almost incredible distances. Here a lucky shot from a 12-inch gun creates such havoc that one of the opposing ships is put out of action and promptly starts away to try and seek salvation in flight. After her, however, goes a powerful modern British cruiser, a ship as formidable almost as the disabled battleship. She pursues her crippled antagonist, hanging on with ease and pounding her with her big guns. There is no help for it—the wounded leviathan must either surrender or be destroyed, and the captain, having done his duty, determines to lose no more lives and so he strikes his flag.—London Scraps.

Auburn School Picnic

A very pleasant time was spent by pupils and teacher of Auburn school yesterday, when they picnicked in a woods near the school.

About three o'clock Miss Little and about thirty of her pupils met together at the school, and then all proceeded with their baskets to a pretty spot near the water's edge.

Here they played games and enjoyed themselves until about five o'clock, when they all sat around for a lunch, which their teacher had spread out on the grass for them. Mr. Stenson, their former teacher, also added to the children's delight by his presence.

After lunch a short programme of a patriotic nature was ably submitted by the pupils. About 6.30 all the little ones went to their several homes, after having spent a most enjoyable time, and expressing a wish that their teacher would have another such picnic very soon again.

Any urinary trouble tells of kidney ills.

Peterborough people testify to this.

Mrs. T. DeRussia, of Mary and Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., says;—

"I believe Booth's Kidney Pills a remedy of exceptional merit in relieving backache caused from disordered kidneys. I frequently suffered with a dull, heavy pain in the small of my back. It would extend around my sides and into my shoulders. Headaches were frequent and often accompanied by spells of dizziness. Booth's Kidney Pills were recommended by a friend, and I procured a box at Wm. Madill's Pharmacy. I soon found them to relieve me. I have had no trouble since and can credit this only to Booth's Kidney Pills."

YOUTH BEAT IT IN FIFTH ROUND

Lively Go on George St. in Which "the Local Boy" Was Pummeled

Two well-known young men and two Englishmen, sent the fur flying on George street and near the arcade last night, shortly after eleven o'clock, and to-day one of the local pugs is wearing no smile because it would hurt him. It appears that one of the two from across the pond was about to take a cigar from a case when it was grabbed from his hand by one of the youths. This began the hostilities with all four taking a hand. The cigar snatcher lacked inability to sidestep and his face was decorated a la rainbow. Others on the street at the time, took ringside seats but in the fifth, the fresh youtht urned a dandelion color, and beat it and the fun was over.

GAMBLED AWAY HIS WIFE.

How a Painter's Gipsy Love Became a Russian Princess.

Once the famous Russian painter, Verestchagin, used to travel about Russia looking for subjects and models for his pictures, says the Wide World Magazine for April. One day he came upon a gipsy encampment. Among the women was a young girl of great beauty, with whom he fell in love. She was barely sixteen, and her parents were very poor. They asked very little for her, and the painter married her. The young couple left the camp at once, and in course of time went to St. Petersburg. Prince Chertkoff used to go to the painter's studio to play, and he, too, fell in love with the beautiful Olga, who was now mother of a small daughter. The officer, who knew the story of his friend's marriage, asked him if he were not tired of her. At first the painter laughed at the question; then he said "No," and finally, when it was repeated many times, he received it in silence. One winter's evening Chertkoff came in, and as usual suggested a game of cards. "I would play with pleasure," the artist said, "but I've no money."

Chertkoff laughed. "Well, then," he retorted, "let us play for love—the stakes to be Olga." They both laughed and sat down to play. The game got interesting, then absorbing. At dawn they ate a hasty meal and sat down again. The artist always lost. They agreed to stop at noon, because Chertkoff had business, and Olga watched them, perhaps not ill pleased to think that she might exchange the studio for a more exciting life, for the officer was energetic and, people said, likely to make a career. By noon the artist was still the loser. Chertkoff rose and looked at Olga.

"It is for you to choose," he said.

She got up and went for her cloak. Then she spoke to the artist.

"You are tired of me," she said. "I go with him, but only on condition that he marries me to-day. And I take the child into my new life as well."

Chertkoff went to a priest and told his story.

"We do not recognize gipsy marriages," was the decision. "She can be your wife at once if you wish."

And so Olga became Princess Chertkoff. She was a clever woman as well as a handsome one, and in a few months this gipsy became fashionable in circles where many are refused an entrance. A few years later her husband, rising from one post to another, became governor of the province of Vilna, then of the Caucasus, and, finally, viceroy of Poland. People say she was cruel and revengeful, and that she urged her husband to many cruel acts, until at last he died, a very old man, hated but feared. The princess returned to Russia, a handsome old woman, with a queenly air and cruel eyes.

Changed the Koreans.

Koreans were quick to quarrel in ancient days and won a bad reputation on this account. At one time, a historian explains, fatal quarrels became so frequent in the country that drastic measures were necessary. A law was promulgated ordering adult males to wear on all occasions a china head-dress shaped like an inverted flowerpot. It was impossible to fight when crowned with this fragile gear, and the penalties for removing it were severe. The first offence entailed fifty blows on the soles of the feet, and the second meant decapitation. This decree had the most soothing effects, the nature of the inhabitants changed as if by magic, and Korea was called the Land of the Morning Calm.

Human Blocks and Pulleys.

The block and pulley, or "tackle," was a great mechanical discovery, but nature made every man carry several of these about with him at the very beginning of creation. The most important of these tackles is found in the eye. If you turn your eye to the tip of your nose you use this block and pulley, which is just as perfect as any erected on a ship to hoist sail. The muscle which moves the eyeball works through the block easily and smoothly and without friction, for nature has supplied to all of her machinery automatic or mechanical lubricating inventions. These never fail to work unless we are ill, and then the danger of a hotbox is to be considered.

Javanese Music.

The Javanese musical instruments are made mostly of bamboo. They also played upon a pipe or whistle, which was about three feet long and six inches across. This sounded like the hollow roar of a lion. Another was a bundle of tubes of different lengths, which covered the small boy who carried it like a big saddle. A log hewn out with two strings stretched across it served as a drum. A zither of sixteen strings and a mandolin of two completed their outdoor band, while inside one could hear other music made by gongs of wonderfully pure and beautiful tone.

From the Days of Abraham.

Damascus has strong claims to be considered the oldest city in the world. The place remains very much what it was before the days of the patriarch Abraham, an island of verdure set in the Syrian desert, and has martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. According to Josephus, Damascus was founded by Uz, the son of Aram and grandson of Shem. It is first mentioned in Scripture in Genesis xv, 2, in connection with Abraham, whose steward was a native of that place.

Neighborly.

"So you don't like that crowing rooster?"

"I haven't anything against the rooster personally. But every time he crows he reminds me that I don't like the people he belongs to."

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Cured

"I think it should be the duty of the schools to teach children how to keep well," writes Miss Nannie E. Naydon, a well-known and highly esteemed resident of Bristol. "Ignorance of the laws of health and the use of improper remedies destroyed my vigor, and led me to the verge of invalidism. I was as a girl ruddy and strong. Nothing seemed to affect me until I was about thirty. Then gas began to form in the stomach. I suffered with bloating and a general failure in strength set in. If I went upstairs my breath hurt. My system was very irregular, and until I grew pretty bad I didn't pay much heed to my condition. Then I got blue, worried all the time, wakened in the night, and couldn't get to sleep again. None of the medicine I took helped me. One day I was reading of a very interesting case like mine cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I took the same treatment. It was just right—didn't physic me to death, but took hold of the weak, sick parts of my system, and set things right. It seems as if Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made me young again, and all my color, spirits, vigor, and health of former days have returned to stay."

Every girl and woman should use Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly. They help a woman in many ways. Beware of the dealer who asks you to take an inferior pill on which his profit is larger than on Dr. Hamilton's. Sold in yellow boxes, 25c per box, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone, Co., Kingston, Ont.

OBITUARY

JOHN CROWLEY.

At two o'clock this morning John Crowley, youngest son of the late late Patrick Crowley passed away at St. Joseph's hospital. The deceased had been ailing since last Christmas and had been confined in the hospital the greater part of the time since. He was 30 years of age, and for a number of years he had been employed by the C.P.R. as lineman between Toronto and Smith Falls. He was born in Otonabee and is survived by two brothers, Messrs. Michael and Morris Crowley, of Otonabee.

The funeral will take place Friday morning, from the homestead in Otonabee, lot 12, in the 20th concession, at 8.30 o'clock, to the Sacred Heart church, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

Pulling Him Through.

Mr. Melton Prior, the war artist, tells how during the Ashantee War on going up the hill into the town of Kumassi with the troops under Lord (then Sir Garnet) Wolseley, he was so tired and "done up" that he could scarcely walk. He was struggling along, when Lord Wolseley, mounted on a mule, passed, and without more ado he laid hold of the mule's tail. He had been assisted thus for but a short distance when Lord Wolseley turned round and saw who he was. [illegible] Of course, he apologized but Wolseley only laughed, and replied "Hold on, Mr. Prior, we'll pull you in."

Australia's Stony Desert.

The great stony desert of north Australia was discovered by Captain Sturt, an Australian explorer, in 1845-6. It is north of the river Darling and is about 300 miles long and 100 broad, consisting of sandy [illegible] or ridges. Its want of trees, except along the creeks, gives the country a sterile appearance. These [illegible] were probably formed by the joint effect of winds and a gradually [illegible]ing sea.

ORANGEMEN OPPOSED TO CHANGE IN CORONATION OATH

Want Jesuits Oath Regarding the Power of the Pope Removed First—Do Not Want Obligation of King Interfered With—Might Lead to Trouble.

Brantford, May 26.—Two hundred and fifty delegates to the Supreme Grand Orange Lodge of British America are assembled here for their 81st annual convention. It was 57 years ago that Orange delegates assembled last in the Telephone City, and a cordial welcome was extended the visitors yesterday afternoon by Mayor Wood. The attendance was a representative one, delegates being present from all parts of the Dominion. Dr. T. S. Sproule, M.P., grand master, presided and Lieut. J. H. Scott, Walkerton, was vice-chairman. On the platform were R. W. Grand Master Harry Lovelock, Ontario West; R. W. Grand Master James Berney, Ontario East; T. J. Noble, grand master, Manitoba; George White, grand master, Nova Scotia; W. G. Riblock, grand master, Alberta; Dr. Ellis, grand master, Saskatchewan; Rev. Allen Rident, New Brunswick; Rev. D. McLean, Prince Edward Island; Rev. Canon Walsh, Brampton; Rural Dean Wright, Brantford; Capt. Wallace, M.P., Woodbridge; Thomas Stewart, M.P., Hamilton, and Col. S. Hughes, M.P., Lindsay.

Dr. Sproule, grand master, in his address said: "A subject which has been forced on my attention is the adoption of a platform whereby all lodges shall be governed both in political elections and at all times. At last Provincial Grand Lodge meeting British Columbia adopted a platform for their guidance in future, and to which all are expected to live up. It seems to me that such authority, if exercised by provincial grand lodges generally, might lead to serious trouble and grave abuse through the diversity of platforms which might be adopted, and which doubtless be in conflict one with another, and thereby cause dissensions. If a platform is adopted it should, in my judgment, be one laid down by the most worshipful grand lodge, and govern all members of the association and all lodges alike."

Speaking of the coronation oath he said: "Until the Pope cancels the oaths taken by the Jesuits, he has no right to ask for a change in the oath of the sovereign of Britain. The Jesuit bishops are made to swear that they believe the Pope has the right to depose kings and governments. While this claim exists it is necessary that all who admit it shall be excluded from ascending the throne of the British Empire. In no other way can this be done so successfully as by retaining the accession oath in its present form. I trust that this grand lodge, before it adjourns, will place on record the sentiment of the Orange Association throughout the Dominion."

RUTHERFORD MAY RESIGN

Chief Justice Sifton Will be Called on to Form a Government.

Edmonton, Alta., May 26.—It is said in political circles that Premier Rutherford will resign to-day as a result of the Great Waterways' scandal, and that Chief Justice Sifton will be called on at once to form a Ministry. What members of the Legislature will be associated with him is not known.

The Calgary Albertan prints a report to the effect that Hon. W. H. Cushing will not be included, and at the same time adds that Mr. Sifton will only accept office on the understanding that those associated with him will agree to the cancellation of the Great Waterways' contract.

Politicians in close touch with the leaders of both factions of the Legislature agree that when the new Cabinet is announced it will not include the names of any of the present Ministers. As to who will be selected to take their places, there are various rumors, one of which is to the effect that R. B. Bennett, Conservative leader, may take office under Mr. Sifton. Neither of these gentlemen care to give any expression that would indicate their intentions. In view of the positions they at present held, that Mr. Bennett would accept office, or would be invited to do so is very improbable.

To-day the decision of Premier Rutherford will probably be made known to the Lieutenant-Governor. Already the various groups of members are getting their heads together.

HOPE HAS BEEN ABANDONED

Capt. Roland Who Was Lost Near Wabigoon Cannot be Found.

Port Arthur, May 26.—It is now regarded as certain that Captain Roland, who has been missing in the woods near Wabigoon for about a week, has lost his life. Fred W. White, who left here May 15, in company with Roland, to inspect property near Gold Rock, returned last night and said that after searching all the intervening time, assisted by several other men, he had very little hope that Roland was alive.

After reaching the property to be inspected on May 17, Capt. Roland, who is 82 years of age, suffered an acute attack of rheumatism, and White went out from the camp to gather samples, leaving Roland with a guide named Bonathan. Later in the day Roland decided he would go out himself, and told the guide to pack his sack and follow to the point where White was working. When Bonathan found White he was surprised to learn that Roland was not there. White and the guide spent days searching and then got the assistance of four men from Wabigoon, who helped them go thoroughly over the whole country.

There are several shafts of abandoned mining properties in the district, and it is feared the captain may have fallen down one. The advisability of sending out other search parties is being discussed by friends here today.

INVESTITURE OF PRINCE

London, May 26.—The problem already has been taken up of creating the Duke of Cornwall, the heir apparent, Prince of Wales.

That title in due time must be conferred on the eldest son of King George, who is now sixteen years old, even though the Duke of Connaught be kept as regent to represent the prince at public functions.

It is contended now that the investiture of the young duke with the title of Prince of Wales should be the stately and symbollic ceremony of old times. To the gift of a ring, which is the most symbollic ceremony by which Harry of Monmouth created the first Prince of Wales, it is insisted that there should be added the golden torques, which distinguished the princes of the ancient Celts. The ceremony would be performed by the Archdruid, in full gorsedd, for it is held that it should never be forgotten that the lad would be Prince of Wales even as his father would be King of the Tudors, by virtue of his descent from Harry Tudor, born and bred a Welshman, King of England by right of victory over the last King of the stranger race of Normans on the slopes of Bosworth Field.

UNITED STATES AND THE JAPS

Victoria, B.C., May 26.—T. Nakahashie, formerly a Tokio official and now president of the Osaka Hosen Kaisha, who recently visited America as a member of the commercial commission, contributes an article to The Taiyo, a prominent Tokio magazine, received by the steamer Inaba Maru yesterday, stating that the next war waged by Japan may be with America. The immediate issues at stake are the immigration and China questions.

Mr. Nakahashi, after dealing with Japanese immigration in Hawaii and the United States, goes on to consider United States policies and says: "The electoral labor ticket cannot be ignored. While the relations of Japan and America have been friendly for forty years, they may change in character, the increase of the Japanese armament having affected American feeling toward Japan, and there was suspicion of Japan regarding the Philippines."

By 1914-15 Mr. Nakahashi says the Manchuria, China and Philippine questions and others will require serious study. The article concludes: "Altogether the relations between Japan and America will become delicate in 1914-15, when the Panama Canal is completed, and the Japanese must constantly endeavor to solve the situation beforehand and avert a crisis."

A COURTEOUS PICKPOCKET

New York, May 26.—One of the most courteous pickpockets on record came to light yesterday on the steamship docks, where the liner Majestic was preparing to sail for Liverpool. Kyesuka Iwai, a Japanese business man, missed his wallet when he reached for his ticket. After he had recovered from the shock, he said the wallet contained, besides his ticket, a draft on London for $250 and $50 in cash. He was standing around despondently when a messenger boy appeared, waving a wallet, which he said a man told him to give to a Japanese on the steamer. The London draft and the steamship ticket were still in the receptacle. Instead of the cash was a laconic note. It read: "Many thanks."

DISCRIMINATION WAS NOT PROVEN

Ottawa, May 26.—The Board of Railway Commissioners has ordered that the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway give the same rates to ex-lake western grain from Montreal to points in Ontario and Quebec on the same mileage basis as that in force on the same commodities from Georgian Bay elevator points. Montreal shippers have been complaining about westbound rates for a couple of years, but the railways declined to equalize charges as between Montreal and the lake ports. Finally, the matter was brought to the attention of the board of Railway Commissioners, which has decided that there must be no discrimination in favor of lake ports and against Montreal shippers.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW,

GORHAM SAID MY GOD! I DID NOT MEAN TO SHOOT ANY PERSON

After He Found That He Had Wounded His Mother so His Sister Testified at Inquest---Jury Returned Verdict "That Ann Gorham Came to Her Death by a Bullet From a Revolver in the Hands of James Gorham."

"That Ann Gorham came to her death by a bullet from a revolver in the hands of James Gorham."

The above was the verdict reached after fifteen minutes' deliberation by the coroner's jury empanelled to investigate into the death of Ann Gorham, who was shot at her home on Maria street, Ashburnham, Friday evening, May 20th, and died the same evening at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Coroner Gray presided at the inquest held last evening in the City Council chamber. County Crown Attorney Wood was present in the interests of the Crown, and Mr. D. O'Connell for the prisoner, James Gorham.

During P.C. Meharry's evidence, and when the officer was testifying as to the positions occupied by the principals in the shooting, Coroner Gray stated that in his opinion the jury should ask for an adjournment and visit the scene of the affair. He asked for a vote on this later on, but the jury did not think a visit necessary.

Four witnesses of the shooting were called. Miss Annie Gorham, a daughter of the dead woman, went through the trying ordeal bravely. She sat while giving her evidence and only once did she appear to be on the point of breaking down. This was when she was telling of her mother being shot and her brother's conduct when he came into the house and found his parent lying on the floor bleeding from the death wound which had been brought about by his own hand. The witness asked for water, and after she had taken a small portion of it she proceeded.

P.C. MEHARRY.

I was called to Ashburnham on the evening of Friday, May 20th, shortly after six o'clock. I went to Maria street and to the house of Mr. Gorham. I found Jas. Gorham there, also his mother, sister, young brother and two young fellows, Graham and Neil by name.

Mrs. and Miss Gorham were in the house. Gorham and Neil were out in the front. The youngest Gorham boy had met and returned with me. James Gorham was in Peck's field to the east of the home, and behind a tree. The first time I saw Gorham he held a revolver. I called to him to come but he did not, and he first shot into the grass in front of himself. He said: "If you come half way I will." I got over a fence and walked toward him and he came toward me.

"I'LL SHOOT YOU."

He said: "If you come any farther I'll shoot you." I was on the Peck property at the time. I walked on toward him and he fired a shot. I stopped and spoke to him.

I told him he was foolish for shooting, and took a couple of steps. He pulled the revolver and said: "I'll drop you." He held the revolver up and counted one, two, three and fired. He had pointed the revolver at me.

I heard a bullet go past my head, and then heard a yell, "I'm shot," or "Mother is shot," coming from the house.

The line in which the revolver was fired was toward his mother. He was ten or fifteen yards ahead and his mother was about 30 yards behind me.

I hollered to him that he had shot his mother. He answered he didn't give a —— —— who was shot. I walked back to the fence and he followed and said to get over the fence or he would shoot me. I walked up around the fence by way of a path and came out in front of the house and stood in the yard for a few minutes.

He came around and pulled the revolver on me again and said: "Get over the track." I walked down to where Capt. White and a man named Cooley were standing, and told them to go to the station and get some more men. Gorham came down the track and then turned around and walked into the house. I met Newhall, Adams and McGinty, and we went back to the house. We saw Gorham run across a field and toward the lake.

He came out on the road on Maria street and then went on to the bridge. Newhall, Adams, McGinty and myself were there. Adams and Newhall went up one street and McGinty and I went up another.

THREE SHOTS FIRED.

As McGinty and I got up to the track three shots were fired from the south.

"When the shot was first fired at you was there any other shooting in that locality?" asked the Crown Attorney. Witness said there was not.

MISS ANNIE GORHAM.

I was at home Friday evening about six o'clock. James and my mother were also at home. Mother telephoned for the police and I saw P.C. Meharry when he came. James had climbed the fence and was in Peck's field. Before P.C. Meharry got over the fence he had to reason with James and after he got over I think my brother counted. I was in a position to see my brother but not P.C. Meharry.

Witness described the house, the kitchen of which, she said, faced the lake.

Continuing, she said: My mother was standing probably ten or twelve feet from the door. I was looking from the window. I only heard two shots and heard my mother scream. I did not hear a shot immediately before.

"DID I SHOOT MOTHER?"

I went to the kitchen and picked her up. I did not see her fall. She said, "I'm shot." My brother came directly in. He said: "Anna, did I shoot mother?" I said "Yes." He said: "My God, I did not mean to shoot any person."

At this stage in her evidence witness asked for a glass of water.

Mother spoke again and she asked for him. He stood there beside her. Mother was not bleeding very much. She was bleeding at the right breast and there was a small hole below. She was moved to the other kitchen and Dr. McNulty came. I went to the hospital and remained there till she died at about 10.45. Dr. McGrath also came to the house.

My brother wasn't in the habit of carrying a revolver. He had the one that belonged to the house—that is my brother's—and he must have got it just before the shooting. He had been going on like one crazy.

"Did he fire the revolver before the policeman came?" asked Coroner Gray. "Yes," replied witness. "He was frothing at the mouth before he did the shooting and was tearing up everything in the house."

WILL WIDEN LACHINE BRIDGE

Montreal, May 26.—It is announced here that the Canadian Pacific has decided to rebuild the Lachine bridge, which was completed in 1884 by the late Sir Robert C. Reid at a cost of from two to three million dollars. When Sir Donald Smith, Sir George Stephens and Sir Wm. Van Horne crossed the new bridge the first time, they little thought that a quarter of a century would find the structure too small. To-day the company will take the superstructure west for a smaller bridge, widen the piers and make a double track.

Fire Destroys I.C.R. Power-House.

Halifax, May 26.—Fire broke out in the power-house of the Intercolonial Railway at North Street Station last evening, and resulted in the building being completely gutted and the roof destroyed. The loss will be light, as the machinery was carefully protected.

Alberta Crops In Good Shape.

Calgary, May 26.—From practically every portion of Alberta despatches were received yesterday announcing the condition of crops. Reports show that rains were general through the province last week, being of from four to forty hours' duration. The condition of the crops is reported as good and the growth excellent. No damage from any cause has been recorded.

Two Children Burned to Death.

Coehill, Ont., May 26.—Despite the heroic efforts of Tom Moore to save his children from a blazing farmhouse at seven o'clock yesterday morning, his little girl was burned to death and his infant child fatally injured.

Bigamist Escapes From Jail.

Cobourg, May 26.—Wm. Elsley Herrington, a prisoner in the county jail here, while working in the jail grounds in charge of an officer, succeeded in making his escape from custody Tuesday evening. He was serving a sentence for bigamy.

A reward of $100 is offered for his capture or information that will lead to his arrest.

TO RESTORE THE STATUS QUO ANTE

Paris, May 26.—Great Britain and France yesterday submitted to the Governments of Russia and Italy, the other two protecting powers, a proposition to invite Crete to admit Mussulman deputies to the Cretan Assembly, and thus restore the status quo prior to 1908.

According to this plan, which it is believed Russia and Italy will accept, Crete would retain its autonomy, under the suzerainty of Turkey.

George V. Not a Mason.

London, May 26.—King George V. is not a member of the Masonic fraternity. His father, the late King, was grand master for many years, and his uncle, the Duke of Connaught, is the present grand master of the Grand Lodge of England. The late Duke of Clarence, eldest brother of the King, was a member of the craft.

NO SUBURBAN TICKETS; TORONTO'S REQUEST REFUSED

Chairman Maybee Declares That if Toronto Should Get Commutation Rates to Brampton all the Cities in the Country Would Demand Them.

Toronto, May 26.—The efforts of Toronto and Brampton to secure a suburban railway service in and out of Toronto with commutation rate privileges, have failed. Chairman Mabee of the Dominion Railway Board dismissed both applications yesterday afternoon.

He could not bring himself to believe other than that the railways were entitled to grant commuters' privileges out of Montreal and not out of Toronto, inasmuch as the Railway Act gave them discretionary powers. Besides, if Toronto were put on the same basis as Montreal in this respect, would there not be discrimination against Hamilton, London, Kingston, Winnipeg and every other city in Canada? And why, again, stop at cities? Why not extend the privileges to towns, and then on to the villages? he said. At the last analysis it would mean that the railroads would be giving a six-tenths-cents-a-mile rate all over the country. So it resolved itself back to the question of what was fair and just.

Every vestige of hope was not shattered by the chairman's ruling. He announced, however, that the commission was now seized of the importance of the situation and would endeavor to frame a set of new regulations governing commutation rates generally.

"There is power," said he, "given to the board to make general regulations with regard to the words in the act, "substantially similar circumstances and conditions," and it will probably be our duty, as a matter of general policy, to find out what Parliament meant by those words.

"It is hard to lay down any precise rule under which commutation rates shall be given. I suppose that commutation rates are the forerunners of suburban service. It is entirely to the advantage of cities to have a suburban service in getting people to outlying districts; but, after all, it must be left largely to the good sense of those in charge of the railways to say what service shall be given and what the tolls shall be."

GREAT FLOODS IN NORWAY

Christiania, May 26.—The extraordinary heat during the spring months has melted the snow on the mountains in the interior, causing a flooding of the lakes and rivers far beyond the record established in 1860. The situation at several places is critical, especially at Lillestrommon, near Skedsmo, where the streets are submerged to the first floor of buildings.

M. Braenne, Minister of Public Works, is now inspecting the city in a motor boat. Floating timber endangers the bridges over many rivers. At Fetsund 360,000 pieces are afloat, and it is feared that the railroad bridge will be damaged.

The question of state assistance has been submitted to the Storthing.

Golden Rule Chief on Carpet.

Cleveland, Ohio, May 26.—Fred. Kohler, chief of the Cleveland police department since May 1, 1903, and hailed by Theodore Roosevelt as "the country's best police chief," has been made defendant before Mayor Baehr on charges of habitual drunkenness, gross immorality, incompetence and failure to obey orders of his superior officers.

Kohler is noted for his policy of "golden ruling" petty offenders without arresting them.

GREY GOING TO HUDSON BAY

Ottawa, May 26.—Earl Grey, who last year visited the Yukon, is contemplating a journey overland to Hudson Bay. If the present plans are carried out, the Governor-General will leave Ottawa in July for Winnipeg, and will then be taken by a party of the Northwest Mounted Police over the route of the Hudson Bay Railroad to Hudson Bay. At Port Nelson, or Churchill, or Hudson Bay, the Governor-General will be met by the Government steamer Earl Grey, and will journey through Hudson Bay and Hudson Straits, landing at Quebec.

THE NEWS AS TOLD IN DESPATCHES

Two Kings Marked to Die.

Madrid, May 26.—Secret warnings have been sent to the Government officials at Lisbon that an attempt on the life of King Manuel is likely to be made upon his return from London. The Spanish police, in tracing the details of the widespread anarchist plot for a campaign of terror, find not only King Manuel and King Alfonso marked for death, but members of their Governments as well.

It is believed that the conspiracy extends no farther than the Ibenian Peninsula, but secret officials of other Governments are co-operating in the work of ferreting out the conspiracy. It is reported that several have been secretly arrested here, and there are even hints that the conspiracy extends to army circles.

A War of Extermination.

Hankow, China, May 26.—The Chinese rebels are in complete control of territory embracing several hundred square miles in the northern part of Hunan Province, and a war of extermination is being waged on all native Christians, according to reports reaching here by indirect routes yesterday. The mobs have destroyed all telegraph wires, according to authentic information, as part of the preparations for the anti-foreign uprising called for May 29.

Will Not Press Charge.

Brantford, May 26.—The crown authorities, it is announced, will not likely press the charge of infanticide against Lizzie Hill, the Indian domestic, who concealed her baby in a telescope valise at a local residence a couple of weeks ago. The girl was committed for trial by Magistrate Livingstone, but on account of her ignorance and her story of the affair, the case may be dropped. A charge, however, of concealing birth will be pressed.

Relaxation of Rules.

London, May 26.—At a further conference of immigration societies it was decided to take steps to obtain a relaxation of the Canadian rules in cases of an individual not undesirable. It was also suggested that three months' notice of the new rules be given.

Teamster Crushed.

Galt, May 26.—Hugh Corbut, teamster, while unloading pig iron yesterday, became caught between the wagon and iron pile, and sustained serious internal injuries, besides being severely crushed about the head and shoulders. His recovery is doubtful.

Enthroned as Archbishop.

Vancouver, May 26.—With the ornate ritual of the Church of Rome, Most Rev. Dr. Neil McNeil was enthroned yesterday as Archbishop of the Metropolitan See of Vancouver, in the Church of Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, which was crowded.

Offer of $50,000,000.

Montreal, May 26.—It is stated here among financial men that William Mackenzie and Dan Mann have just refused fifty millions hard cash for their common stock of the Canadian Northern, which would, of course, entail the control of the road.

Ready for Business.

Winnipeg, May 26.—The Manitoba Elevator Commissioners took the oath of office yesterday morning before Chief Justice Mathers, and have held their first session. They have opened offices and are now prepared to receive communications.

Knighthood for Brodeur?

THE FOOL IN HIS SEASON

A few days ago in Wilkesbarre, Pa., a fool in a boat rocked it, when the craft overturned and eight young people were drowned. The only bright spot in this terrible tragedy is the fact that the person who rocked the boat died also. Each season brings its fools.

They are as sure as the dandilions of springtime, and the robin or bluebird.

Last week a man pointed a gun at his best friend. "Don't, its loaded," shouted the friend. "No it isn't," was the reply. He pulled the trigger and the friend fell dead. Here is another variety of fool.

The man who didn't know it is loaded, is hard to dodge, but there is recourse against the toll of the water—learn to swim.

THE EXPERT

When they make their first report they will receive $5,000.

This is a small fortune, but the men were experts.

The question of railway tubes is being agitated for Toronto. There was no one wise enough to give advice in the Queen City, and so they sent to New York for two men who will report on the feasibility of the scheme. The price mentioned was large, but they got it and got it willingly. They were experts.

Experts are seldom idle. They do not feel bad times. Few men can be experts in the building of tubes for a great city, but every man and woman has the chance to be an expert in his business.

It may be only the digging a drain, it may be the lawyer pleading to save his client from the gallows. There is a knack in every calling.

Not every hotel clerk can make a good proprietor and not every carpenter can build a pair of stairs. There are a thousand callings in this Canada of ours, and the shout for experts is loud.

"Give me an expert stenographer," asks the office manager, "one who can punctuate and write a clean letter."

"I want a clerk who can think for himself," says the store-keeper.

"I want a hired man who will take an interest in the stock and the fields," cries the farmer. And in the meantime these two experts from New York will receive $5,000 for the know how, without so much as soiling their hands.

A JUSTIFIABLE GIFT

Pierre Martin, who invented the original steel smelting process by which the famous Siemans-Martin steel is produced, having been discovered to be living in in very poor circumstances in the neighborhood of Paris, the French steel smelters' organization, known as the Comite des Forges de France, opened a subscription list with $20,000, and invites iron-makers all over the world to contribute, with the object of placing M. Martin in an independent financial position. The inventor is 86 years old.

This is a case where a gift is justifiable. As a result of his invention iron and steel manufacturers have made huge fortunes, while the users of steel all over the world have got it at lower prices. The man who conferred such benefits upon the steel men and the world at large is in poverty. If an amount of money as large as that given to Hon. William Fielding should be collected for Pierre Martin there would be no shame in his acceptance of it because he made the world richer by his invention.

But the gift to Mr. Fielding is altogether different. He holds a public office which gives him the power to confer favors at the expense of the Canadian people. If the men who gave him the $120,000 have grown rich through his favors they should have paid this money into the national treasury instead of into Mr. Fielding's pockets.

SHE WAS A GOOD WOMAN

There passed through Peterborough on Wednesday morning's G.T.R. train from the west, the remains of a remarkable woman, Mrs. Brown. The body is interred in Zion cemetery, near Millbrook.

The days of Mrs. Brown's pilgrimage upon this earth were many, and they were happy ones.

She was 103 years old, and at the time of her death there were living several great great great grandchildren.

She had never known serious illness until her demise, and the end came as quietly as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and falls asleep.

For thirty years Mrs. Brown had eaten but two meals a day until a short time before her death.

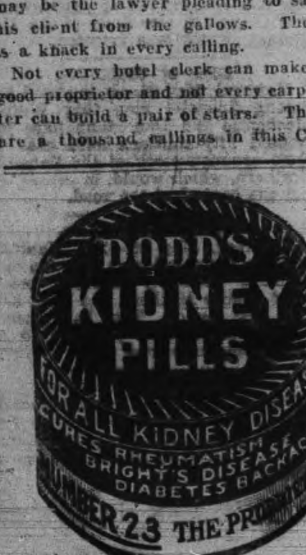
She went to bed late, retiring shortly before midnight. She refused to worry. Mrs. Brown did not enter her second childhood, and always read without glasses.

When asked as to what the secret and happiness of her freshness in old age was, she replied, "I always worked hard and refused to listen to gossip."

In the quiet of the county they have laid her where her children, her grand children and her great grand children may help keep green her grave.

We may all work hard and mind our own business, but we cannot all remain up till midnight and eat but two meals a day. Nor can we all refrain from worry.

There seems to be no set rule for length of life and a happy old age, but when a mother in Israel is buried within the confines of our own county we can at least breathe the line, "peace to her ashes."



THE COOK AND THE CRITIC.

A Problem Worthy the Attention of All Earnest Women.

It always awakens a sort of amused wonderment in me, says Marietta Ladd in Table Talk, when I hear learned men, especially bishops, tell schoolgirls that in order to secure husbands they must learn to be good cooks. Just as though a man ever thinks seriously of cooking when he is really and truly in love! The idea is absurd. Yet it is undeniable that a large proportion of unhappy marriages result from an imperfect knowledge of the sublime art of cookery on the part of the wife. All sensible women know that their power and influence in the home is inseparable from their practical ability to prepare healthful and appetizing foods for those under their charge. The problem of our time is to increase the number of careful and intelligent cooks and so lift the race on to a higher plane of life.

It is clear to me that this problem, worthy as it is of the attention of all earnest women, cannot be satisfactorily solved by educating women alone. Man is an important factor in the home, and it is as much the business of a man to know what foods are helpful and what harmful as it is a woman's. In the stress of modern business life it is unreasonable to expect a married man to do actual cooking. If he does it some part of his work outside the home must suffer. But if he cannot do work he can always criticise. He should therefore be taught how to criticise intelligently in such a way as to help his wife and not try her temper to its utmost limits.

Domestic unhappiness usually arises in one of two ways—either the wife is incompetent and as a natural consequence ultra sensitive to criticism or the wife is really a good cook, but her husband has been spoiled and rendered bearish by living at good hotels and restaurants where "many hands make light work."

There is only one remedy for this state of affairs. Boys and girls must learn cookery side by side as they learn other necessary knowledge. The boy who knows what to eat and how to help, not hinder, digestion in the kitchen will be a kind and helpful critic to his wife. The wife who knows the science and art of cookery will consult her husband's taste and blend it with her own, knowing that the masculine point of view in cookery, as in all else, is a valuable corrective of the feminine.

Make Your Toilet Articles.

Any girl can have the very best toilet articles if she will make them herself, and many of them offered for sale at the stores will often do a permanent injury to a delicate skin. Should a lotion be needed for perspiration stir one ounce of hydrate of chloral in one pint of soft boiled water and keep in a bottle. Apply with soft old linen and allow the lotion to dry on the skin. To keep the hands in good condition keep a preparation of vinegar and cornmeal ready for use and after washing clothes or doing any work that soils the hands wash them in warm suds, rub the hands well with the cornmeal mixture, then dry and rub a few drops of honey and water well into the skin. An excellent and safe face powder is made by sifting half a pound of pure rice powder eight or ten times and then adding a few drops of oil of rose and a little carmine if you want the powder tinted. One of the best cucumber creams is made by cutting up two large cucumbers into half a cupful of water and allowing them to simmer for half an hour; then strain, add a cupful of boiling water, ten grains of powdered borax and enough tincture of benzoin to make the water look milky and bottle when cool. The skin may be kept in fine condition by using a little borax in the water every time the face and hands are washed and then rubbing this lotion well into the skin. An excellent fluid for keeping the scalp clean and free from dandruff is made with half a teaspoonful of the borax powder, a small piece of gum camphor and half a pint of soft water, and one of the best and safest washes for the mouth and teeth is made by adding one ounce of the powder to one pint of boiling water and then before it is cold adding half a teaspoonful of spirits of camphor. The hair tonic should be rubbed well into the scalp once a week. About two teaspoonfuls of the mouth wash in half a glass of water is the proper proportion, and the fluid whitens the teeth and keeps the gums in a healthy condition.

Two hundred and thirty-six parcels of school lands were sold at Camrose, Alta., at an average of $12.35 per acre.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, May 25.—(Special.)—At the Canadian Pacific live stock market this morning the offerings of live stock were 500 cattle, [illegible] sheep and lambs, [illegible] hogs and 1500 calves. There was no important change in the condition of the market for cattle to-day, prices being firmly maintained at the recent advance, on account of the continued small supply coming forward for this season of the year. The weather was warm and depressing, but notwithstanding this fact there was a very good demand for cattle and a clearance was made early. There were no extra choice beeves on the market, consequently the top price paid for choice was 7¼c, while good stock sold at 6¾c to 7c, fairly good at 6¼c to 6½c, fair at 6c per lb. Cows were somewhat scarce and prices were firmer at 4½c to 6½c per lb., as to quality. A few very choice bulls brought 6½c, and the lower grades sold from that down to 5½c per lb.

Supplies of small meats were larger than they have been of late, and in consequence a more active trade was done in them at steady prices. The demand for both sheep and lambs was good, and sales of the former were made at from $4 to $6 each, and the latter at from $3 to $6 each. Calves met with an active demand and, as supplies were more plentiful than on Monday, prices ruled at from $2.50 to $6 each. The tone of the market for hogs was firm, and prices show no change, as compared with Monday. The demand was good and sales of selected lots were made at $10.25 to $10.50 per cwt. The offerings of live stock at the Montreal stock yards, west end market, were 300 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, 500 hogs and 900 calves. The trade in all lines was fairly good and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 6400 head; slow; yearlings steady; lambs 10c higher; others 25c lower; lambs, $7.25 to $9.

New York Live Stock.

NEW YORK, May 25.—Beeves—Receipts, 2713; trade slow and steers demoralized, 10c to 15c lower; bulls and cows slow to 15c lower; steers, $6.75 to $7.80; bulls, $4.50 to $6; cows, $3 to $5.525; tail-ends, $2.60 to $2.75. Exports to-day, 40 cattle, 164 sheep and 2500 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 3774; slow to 25c to 50c lower; veals, $7.50 to $9.25; few fancy, $9.50; culls, $5 to $7; buttermilks, $5.50 to $6.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 8574; sheep slow and weak; lambs and good spring lambs steady; common weak; common to prime sheep, $4 to $5.25; culls, $3 to $3.50; lambs, $7.75 to $8; spring lambs, $6.75 to $11; culls, $7.

Hogs—Receipts, 4370; market weak; good state hogs, $10 to $10.15.

Gets Back His Money.

Woodstock, May 26.—At the high court sitting here yesterday before Mr. Justice Clute, Donald Guthrie of West Oxford sued J. B. Jackson, formerly of Ingersoll, now Canadian agent in Hong Kong, for $2,325. Jackson induced Guthrie to put the money into a wheat deal in Chicago on an agreement that the two men should share losses and profits. The sum raised was $4,500, and Jackson informed Guthrie that this had all been lost. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for the full amount of the claim with interest.

Think of Last Summer--

You can remember days when the heat inside your kitchen was so great you could hardly bear it. With the right stove you would have made a better hostess. Save your health. Don't put up with the drudgery of a coal range. You can have a clean, cool, pleasant kitchen. The

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME

does away with all drudgery of cooking. Why should you be a slave to a coal range when you can have an Oil Cook-Stove that is cheaper than coal, cleaner than coal, doesn't "smell," doesn't smoke, lights instantly, can be put out instantly, leaves no ashes, and doesn't heat the kitchen. With one of these stoves you can boil, bake or roast the most elaborate dinner. You can change from a slow to a quick fire, or the other way about, by simply turning a wick. Apply a match, and instantly the heat from an intense blue flame shoots upward through the turquoise-blue enamel chimneys to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven — but nowhere else. The stove has every convenience that can be thought of: Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping food and dishes hot, drop shelves to hold coffee or teapots, towel rack; in fact every convenience possible.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove — see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive.

Made with 1,2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"Dear me! Well, do adhere to your customary style and spare me the rhetoric. I prefer to hear your news or whatever it is in your most Saxon form."

"The shock might be too great."

This was not at all as he had meant to steer his communication, for no one could have felt more earnestly the gravity of what he had come to communicate, and his chaffing was far from expressing his true mood, but he felt that his case was lost already, that rhetoric could not save it, and his tongue ran away with him.

"It's something 'shocking,' then?" inquired Miss Wolcott.

"That depends on how you look at it."

"Well? Do hurry, please."

"Miss Wolcott," he said, solemnly, "I'm afraid what I have to tell you will not be welcome news."

She looked surprised at his sudden seriousness and waited, with what patience she could command, for him to go on.

He rose and walked the length of the piazza, then came back and stood before her.

"I am very stupid. I don't know how to begin it."

"Gracious, Peter, you're not thinking of proposing to me, are you?"

"It would require less daring than what I have to tell you."

"If you don't say it soon, I shall have hysterics!"

He cleared his throat, and his voice was not quite firm as he plunged in.

"Let me begin with a question. Tell me, were you perfectly convinced at the time of your brother's death that his little daughter was with him and died with him? Did you ever have any doubts about it?"

Her eyes opened wide in amazement. "Of course not!"

"Did you see the dead child who was identified as your niece?"

"No. I was in Florida at the time of the accident and did not get back in time for the funeral."

The woman had turned white and was looking dazed.

"The child was not with her father, Miss Wolcott."

Miss Wolcott sat upright, her hands clutching the sides of her chair.

"Well?" she half gasped.

"That child is living."

"Impossible!" she exclaimed sharply.

"She is alive," repeated Kinross.

"Alive! My brother's child! But it can't be true!"

"Did you ever receive, a few months after Mr. Wolcott's death, any communications telling you that your niece had been stolen from her home and would be returned to you—for a reward?"

"Never!"

Kinross looked at her uncertainly. Was she telling the truth? If she was not, she was a genius at acting, for her bewilderment seemed very genuine.

"Ah!" she suddenly exclaimed breathlessly, lifting her hand, "I remember something—some anonymous letters—that I received—one after another—shortly after my brother's death, telling me that if I would pay down a certain sum of money a matter of vital interest would be revealed to me. Who would dream of paying any attention to such communications? I tossed them into the wastebasket, of course, and never gave them a second thought."

"Did none of them mention Eunice?"

"Never. They were melodramatically cautious, I remember. Oh, what are you going to tell me?"

"The kidnapers defeated their own ends by their cowardice. If they had given you any hint that they held Eunice as a hostage"—

He paused questioningly.

"Well?" she asked excitedly.

"You would not have ignored their communications?"

"If I had had any least reason for believing them, of course not. What a question to ask!"

He took from his pocket a long envelope and drew from it a manuscript. It was the "confession."

"Perhaps, after all, this will be the best way to tell you."

He handed it to her.

"Read it, please, while I wait."

He rose and walked to the farthest end of the piazza—while she, with fingers that shook, unfolded the paper.

Kinross knew that he did an unbusiness-like thing in letting the paper leave his own hands, but Miss Wolcott was an old family friend, and when it came to the point he found himself quite unable to offer her the discourtesy of handing her the copy of the original document which he had brought with him for that purpose.

CHAPTER XXI.

It seemed to him a very long time before he was summoned back to her.

She was white to the lips as they sat down again together, but she was a woman of strong will, and her voice was steady when she spoke to him.

"How in the world, Peter, did you come by this paper?" she began.

He told her briefly of his summer at the farm and of his investigation of the haunted room. He did not, however, mention his nightly seances with Eunice. Miss Wolcott was nothing if not conventional.

"You believe this story?" Her questions were abrupt and sharp.

"I do. Do you?"

"I am open to conviction. And you would tell me that this paper remained undiscovered all these years and that my niece has been kept by this farmer's family, knowing nothing of her origin? You say you met her at this farm?"

"Yes."

"The proof of her identity offered here?" she demanded.

He drew from his pocket a small box and handed it to her. She quickly opened it and took out the chain and locket.

Her face grew whiter as she handled them, and her voice was not steady when she spoke again.

"Oh! I—I remember this!—I remember clasping it about her little neck!"

She leaned her head on her hand for an instant. But she quickly rallied.

"And the other proof?" she questioned.

"It is there."

"The two little moles under her ear?"

"I saw them."

"Tell me of the girl."

Her tone was tense with anxiety. Was it the prospect of losing her wealth or her fear of hearing an unwelcome account of her niece that drew those deep lines about her strong mouth?

"She has been brought up in the farmer's family—not quite as a member of the family"—

"I should hope not!"

"But rather as their servant."

She sank back in her chair, looking as though he had struck her in the face.

"What do you mean?"

"She has done every sort of menial work to pay them for giving her a home. She has been a domestic drudge for them."

He felt that he was cruel, but he was speaking advisedly, and at least his purpose in putting the case so brutally was merciful—to both Eunice and her aunt.

"A servant! To a farmer's family! My niece!"

As she spoke Kinross had a sudden

Miss Wolcott.

mental picture of Eunice transplanted into this house—her own house really. He saw the girl in all her exquisite delicacy of face and form, her grace, her thrilling voice, her natural dignity, in contrast to Miss Wolcott's funny, dumpy little figure, abrupt manner and almost coarse features.

"The girl would appear distinguished beside her," he thought.

"Then she is a crude, uneducated country girl, quite unfit for decent society?" she demanded.

"It depends upon what you mean by 'decent.'"

"Is she quite hopeless, or could something possibly be done for her?"

"Her blood ought to tell for something," he said, not without a touch of malice.

"Unless she has been ruined by her environment. And it would be too late now to make up for her lack of education. Of course they never sent her to school."

"Not after she was twelve years old."

"Gracious."

"She has never been away from the farm except," he stoically added, "to go with her foster parents to town to market to sell vegetables, butter and eggs, smearcase, apple butter, ponhaus, snits and sauerkraut."

She gazed at him speechless.

"Let her have it!" he thought. "It will do her good. If she does the right thing, she will find out for herself what the child really is."

"What would the poor girl do with wealth?" she asked in a hollow voice. "You say she is utterly unfit to use it?"

"I have seen many rich people no better fitted."

His eyes were constantly drawn to the "confession," which she firmly held in her hand. He had an apprehension that at any moment he might see her tear it into shreds and defy him to do his worst. Yet an inborn instinct of courtesy, stronger than his vaunted cynicism, made it impossible for him to ask her for the paper until he had given her every chance to return it voluntarily.

"A fine lawyer I'd make!" he sneered at himself.

"Then," she continued, "granting, for the sake of argument, that I believed this paper," tapping it with her finger, "I would at least have to try to civilize her somewhat before I turned over to her the control of her money. It would be an actual wrong to her to give it to her before she was somewhat prepared to use it rationally and decently."

"I think so."

"How would you suggest from your knowledge of her that I go about it?"

She put the question tentatively.

"You might travel with her. There's Europe, you know. Art galleries and cathedrals are very civilizing. So considered, I believe."

"I can't understand, Peter Kinross, how you can jest about a thing which you must see touches me to the quick—in my most vulnerable spot, my family pride."

"But you know I always did think you pampered that vulnerable spot. And pampered things get spoiled. A little exposure of the spot won't hurt it."

"The girl is of age. She might not consent to my patronage. She might want to take things into her own hands at once. Can't you," she urged, "give me some idea of what she is like?"

"I prefer to leave your mind unprejudiced to judge for yourself."

"She must be dreadful!"

"I don't see that that follows."

"Else you'd reassure me. You wouldn't let me suffer such dread as I shall suffer from now until I know the worst."

"Clothes make a lot of difference, you know," he said consolingly. "At least I know women think so. Dress her up. That will help."

She ignored his flippancy. "How do you think she will take it—the news that she's an heiress?"

"Then you acknowledge her claims?" he quickly asked.

"She 'claims' the money, of course?"

"She knows nothing of it. I have not even told her her name."

"Why have you not?"

"I thought it best to find out first whether you would credit my story. It would have been cruel to raise her hopes of being an heiress only to disappoint them in case you are unwilling to make over to her her father's fortune."

"Unwilling? Is it a question of my being willing or unwilling?" she asked with a touch of bitterness.

"I must tell you that however sure you and I might feel of her identity, the legal proof is too weak to establish any claims"—

She looked at him keenly. "Well? What are you driving at?"

"No one can force you to part with a dollar of this money."

"Indeed!"

"That is my conviction."

"It is very interesting," she said, shrugging her shoulders.

He looked at her dubiously.

"I think I see your point," she added.

"I believe I've lost it myself," he declared. "Just what is it, anyway? Help me out."

"You are doing me the honor to believe me capable of withholding my niece's fortune; of being unwilling to make restitution to her."

"I am presupposing nothing, Miss Wolcott," he hastily affirmed—not quite candidly.

"I do not deny that your news is bitter to me. But, Dr. Kinross, the prospect of losing the money is the least part of the bitterness."

"Is the discovery of a niece so great a calamity?"

"I suppose I can't expect you to appreciate my feelings about the way my brother's child has been reared," she said with a dignified melancholy.

"I think I do appreciate them, Miss Wolcott."

"Not so much, Peter, as you think you appreciate my loss of money."

"I merely pointed out to you that there could be no legal compulsion in the case."

"Compulsion! Don't you think you use strange expressions? You said you believed this girl to be my niece. I tell you now I also believe it. How, then, can there be any talk of 'compelling' me to return to her her father's money, of which she has been deprived for twenty years? What the loss of the money may mean to me"—She dismissed that side of it with another shrug, though she was very pale.

Kinross sprang to his feet and held out his hand. "Miss Wolcott, blood does tell. If you were a man I'd call you a bully fellow. You renew my long lost faith in womankind."

"Because you discover that I'm not a scoundrel?"

"You have a most uncomfortable way of making a fellow feel small."

"Sit down and talk sense. We must decide what is best to do with the girl. You have not told me how you think she will take it when she learns she's an heiress."

"Now, do you know, I've not the least idea. I'm curious myself to find out."

"Do you think it will turn her head?"

"She is incredibly unsophisticated and ignorant of life—so much so that she will probably not realize at all what it means in a worldly way to come into great wealth. So if you manage her wisely you may save her from having her head turned."

Miss Wolcott sighed heavily. "It seems to me I have a herculean task on my hands."

"I suppose," said Kinross gravely, "I have seemed heartless in my way of bringing you this unwelcome news. But, believe me, I do most sincerely feel the disaster that it is to you—not," he quickly added, "in the discovery of your niece, but in the loss to you of wealth which you have enjoyed so long that I don't see how you are going to get on without it."

"I managed to worry through thirty years of my life without it, so I suppose I can do it again," she curtly dismissed that phase of the matter.

A victoria containing two ladies had driven in at the gateway and was coming up the drive. Kinross rose and took up his hat from a table close by.

"We will arrange details tomorrow morning?" she asked as he held out his hand. "I shall have the girl come to me as soon as possible," she announced stoically.

"I wish I were a mediaeval knight! I want to bend the knee to you and kiss your hand!"

"Your enthusiasm at finding me honest is positively insulting, Peter Kinross!"

"Miss Wolcott, I believe in my heart that you will not be ashamed of the girl. I believe you will love her."

"Indeed! But what you believe could have no weight with me, you know, your standards are so impossibly absurd!"

With this exchange of civilities they cordially shook hands and Kinross took his leave.

CHAPTER XXII.

In the uncontrollable restlessness that possessed her during the dragging days while she waited for Dr. Kinross' return, Eunice became so doplig (awkward) that she proved a sore irritant to her already outraged foster mother.

"Can't you watch what you're about oncet?" would be demanded of her a dozen times a day when, in her distraught state, she would spill, break, burn or otherwise destroy. "What's got into you these couple of days back? You don't do nothin' right! What do you think pop'll say at your leavin' all them pie git spoilt? I ast you did you take 'em to the spring house and you sayed yes, you did, and then here this morning there they stood standing—in this here hot kitchen all night yet! Pop'll jaw somepin turrible!"

It was in the occasional brief respite from toil in the evening hour, just before bedtime, that her unrest became feverish, maddening; and one night it governed her to the point of driving her to seek at least a moment's diversion from her unbearable heart hunger in an unprecedented act. On her return from the spring house, where she had gone to finish her last bit of the day's drudgery, she deliberately sat down with the two young ladies on the porch steps.

Miss Ellery had become an object of engrossing interest to Eunice since Dr. Kinross had told her that he "loved Georgiana." Georgiana herself had in the past few days observed the scrutiny she underwent whenever she was in Eunice's presence. The girl seemed to watch every movement she made, to hang upon every word she uttered, in a way which secretly gratified Georgiana's love of ascendency.

"What's the matter, Eunice?" asked Daisy in surprise and curiosity as Eunice joined them, for the farm girl had seemed during all their stay at the farm to shrink from any intercourse with them. "Have you and Abe had a scrap?"

"A scrap of what?"

Daisy squealed. "You know, Eunice, the course of true love never runs smooth, so, to be sure, you and Abe must expect to have rows now and then. Is it in Shakespeare, Georgiana, or the Bible? But never mind. No doubt Eunice knows. I can't account for your favoring us with your society, Eunice, unless you've been fighting with Abe and are wanting to be sympathized with. I'm sorry to say I can't oblige you. I couldn't possibly sympathize with a girl who would or could take an interest in Abe, a brute who thinks a woman's a pack horse. Oh, that kind of a man! How I'd love to stand on my hind legs and jump at him! Eunice," she said earnestly, "you're too nice a girl for Abe. Choke it off. You don't need to throw yourself away on a chump like Abe—a girl like you."

Eunice, gazing fixedly at Georgiana, made no comment upon Daisy's advice.

"Would you object if I asked you a question?" she inquired timidly of Georgiana.

"Certainly not," Georgiana smiled kindly. "Ask me what you like, Eunice."

"How do you occupy your time when you are at home?"

"Up to now," Georgiana answered, "I have spent all my life in school and college. Now I am going to take my place at the head of my father's home. As he is a college president, my life will be more or less public. And of course I shall do a good deal of work in our woman's club. I would prefer to take up a career. But my father really needs me, and so," she concluded heroically, "I am willing to make the sacrifice."

"A career? What sort of a career would you like to follow?"

MY GOD! I DID NOT MEAN TO SHOOT ANY PERSON

PERCY NEIL.

I was at Gorham's house. It was about 6.30 or 7 p.m. James Gorham was on the east side of the house. He had a revolver in his hand and seemed to be drunk. He was trying to catch some pigs.

He asked Joe Graham and I to help him. When Graham saw Meharry he came back to the post and said to me: "If Meharry asks you where I am gone say over the fence." He went over the fence to a tree and Meharry came along and I told him Gorham was over the fence. He crawled over and Gorham told him to stop, and counted one, two, three.

After Mrs. Gorham was shot I went to telephone, but met Martin Gorham who said he had telephoned.

When I was on the railroad track Gorham came out with a rifle. He returned to the house, came out again and went east to McMahon's. Then he came up the track again and to the house and looked in a north window.

I was in the house when Mrs. Gorham was carried to the front door.

Elmer Faux was called, but he stated that he had not been present at the time of the shooting.

MARTIN GORHAM,

I was at home Friday evening and saw P.C. Meharry come. I met him near the C.P.R. bridge. I had gone to meet my father, as I was afraid James might shoot him. He had been acting foolishly. When I went back James was at the south side of the house. He ran east when he saw P.C. Meharry. He had been shooting with my brother Jack's revolver before this. I think I heard a shot, but not before my mother screamed. We were standing at the door. I could see both James and P.C. Meharry.

Witness' account of the conversation between P.C. Meharry and his brother, and the shooting, was practically the same as given by P.C. Meharry. He said that his brother and the officer were in a line with his mother.

After mother was shot, he continued, she cried: "I'm shot," and fell to the floor. Then she told me to go for a doctor. I went up to Miss Strickland's and saw Miss Tobin. She telephoned. I returned home and met Percy Neil. I saw James out on the track, north of the house. He went into the house later and asked my mother, who was lying on the sofa, in the kitchen, if she was shot. She said yes.

ASKED FORGIVENESS.

He asked her to forgive him and she said she she would. He told her that he didn't mean it, and then said he was going away. He shook hands with all the people in the house.

He told me to get the rifle and I did. He left, but came back again when father was in. He stood in the door and said: "Here come the policemen. Wait and see some fun." He then left.

DR. YOUNG.

Dr. Young, who assisted Dr. McNulty in the post-mortem, read the report. There was a wound in the right breast and another lower down. All the organs were normal.

Death was due to an internal hemmorage, which was caused by a wound in the right liver. That wound was a jagged one—such as would be caused by a bullet.

In answer to Coroner Gray, Dr. Young said that the bullet had not been located, although Dr. McNulty and himself had worked for three hours in an endeavor to find it.

The jury was composed of H. C. Stabler, foreman; Patrick Leahy, Wm. Gray, Wm. Merril, E. Bowie, W. Hall, G. Lech, Arthur T. Johnston, Martin Kylie, Myles Henry, Joseph Picard, Harry Morgan, Chas. Banks.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

James Gorham Present at the Preliminary Hearing at the Police Court

James Gorham, who shot and mortally wounded his mother last Friday evening, was present at the preliminary hearing at the police court this morning. The prisoner was committed for trial by Magistrate Dumble.

County Crown Attorney Wood was present for the Crown.

Mr. G. N. Gordon acted in the interests of the prisoner.

The evidence was practically the same as given at last night's inquest and reported in another column of this issue.

Miss Annie Gorham, a sister of the prisoner, was not called, as she was in a weak and nervous condition. Her evidence as given at the inquest was accepted by the court.

The prisoner listened attentively to the witnesses during the greater part of the time.

The revolver, which was secured from Gorham when he gave himself up, was brought to court and P. C. Meharry identified it as the one used by the prisoner. It was still loaded.

HANDSOME GIFT FOR THE CHIMES

The chimes committee were delighted yesterday to receive a handsome gift in the shape of a cheque for $100 from Messrs. M. M. and W. T. C. Boyd, of Bobcaygeon, whose kindness will be much appreciated by their many friends and by citizens generally. This has been followed by another fine subscription of $100 from Mr. Ryerson Ritchie, of Boston, who is at present in the city. Considerably over $60 has now been given by generous donors outside Peterborough to this city enterprise, and when their own local interests and home calls are considered, the broad generosity of these donors and their interest in Peterborough will be rightly appreciated. This should inspire our own citizens to further swell the fund, which has now reached about $3,250. Nothing will be done until at least $6,000 has been raised, and some other features may be added if the subscription list should warrant them.

The comet is now 27,500,000 miles away, having covered 2,500 miles since yesterday. Continue to look for it in the western sky after sunset, if atmospheric conditions are clear.

Comets have their accidents as well as human beings. As they wind through space they are subject to a number of influences, which may so change their path that we may never see them again and never know for certain, what has become of them.

On June 14th, 1770, the famous astronomer, Messier, discovered at Paris a fairly bright comet whose orbit was afterwards determined to be elliptical by Lexell. The period of revolution proved to be about 5 1-2 years. When it was looked for again in 1776, the year of its expected reappearance, it could not be seen. Lexell suggested that the comet fell a prey to the planet Jupiter, and in that supposition he was upheld by the most distinguished mathematician of his day. Lexell thought that the comet would be seen again in the summer of 1881, in its new orbit, after once more coming under the away of Jupiter in 1779, Again the most careful search for it was unrewarded Lexell drew the conclusion that, as Jupiter had driven the comet out of its course once before, so it changed the orbit again in 1779, with the result that the comet could not be traced. Because of Lexall's painstakingtaking investigation of this singular case the comet is known as Lexell's lost comet.

Another mislaid or lost comet was that discovered by DeVico at Rome, on August 22nd, 1844. It was expected to return in early 1850, but it did not and has never since been seen. There was some mathematical evidence that DeVico's comet was identical with the comet of 1678, and still stronger evidence that it was identical with a comet discovered by E. Swift in California on Nov. 20th, 1894. The recognition, however, is far from certain.

More remarkable than either of these disappearances if the fate of Biela's comet. Lexell's and Devico's comets were twisted from their orbits by planets. In other words, they were the victims of a gravitation assault. Biela's comet, on the other hand, suffered spontaneous destruction. The comet took its name from an Austrian officer who saw it in 1826. It was found to revolve in an ellipse and that it would return again every six and one half years. For a time it fulfilled all astronomical predictions perfectly.

When the comet appeared again in 1845, Professor Challis, putting his eye to the great equatorial telescope of the Cambridge observatory, exclaimed; "I see two comets!" At first, he distrusted his own observation, but the phenomenon was soon confirmed, Biela's comet had split in two. For a time the twin comets followed the same orbit as when they were part of the same mass. Once more, in August, 1852, the double comet returned, but under circumstances not the most advantageous for observation. Since that time Biela's comet has disappeared. The showers of meteors observed near the end of November, 1972, 1885, and 1882, may possibly be the remnants of that comet. At all events these meteors are known as the Bielids. In 1885, or the 27th of November, a large iron meteorite fell and was picked up at Mazapil, Mexico,—a chip from Biela's comet.

Still another vanished comet is Brorsen's, discovered at Kiel in 1846, and observed at four subsequent returns. It failed unaccountably to be visible in 1800. Probably it suffered a fate similar to that of Biela's comet. When first discovered it seemed timeworn; for it was devoid of a tail and rapidly lost its light. It seemed to expand excessively as it fled from the sun, so that, in a way, it may be said that it vanished like smoke in air.

TWO IMPORTANT BY-LAWS SHOULD BE CARRIED

Citizens Should Not Fail to Pronounce Favorably on These Two Propositions—Both Are Good

The Hamilton Co. By law

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Of the two by-laws to be voted upon by the electors on Monday next, one is to give a fixed assessment of $10,000 to the works of the Wm. Hamilton Co. for ten years. The history of the works is known to the electors. It is one of the very oldest and most valuable of our industries. When it was closed a few years ago all felt that it was a serious loss to the whole city. A Toronto firm proposed to revive it and approached the council with that in view, and it was arranged that they should received a fixed assessment, a loan of $30,000 and other minor concessions. The Ontario Legislature authorized the council, with the approval of the electors, to gice this aid to the company. It will be remembered that the firm did not proceed with the undertaking, and the gentlemen, most of whom had been connected with the works, organized a company and re-established them. They are now being carried on and are doing good work and employing a large number of mechanics, over one hundred hands being employed. The works are a are a good asset for the city, and it has given pleasure to every citizen to know that the works are being successfully operated. The new company has not asked for the loan, but requested the fixed assessment for ten years. The council has obtained legislation to authorize the electors to give them this concession, and we feel sure that it will meet with the approval of the electors. The men who took hold of the works and re-established them deserve encouragement and assistance. The industry is one that is of great benefit to the city, and less aid than the fixed assessment that is proposed could hardly be given.

To legalize the by-law the assent of three-fifths of those voting on the by-law will be required. This is a condition made by the Legislature. It is therefore urged that the freeholders who are entitled to vote will not neglect to poll their votes on Monday, and that they will show by a good, strong, favorable vote that they are willing to give the encouragement asked for to this old and valuable industry.

The Sewage By-law

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Two by-laws will be submitted to a vote of the electors on Monday next.

One of these by-laws is to provide for borrowing $30,000 to construct sewers and drains in the south-western part of the city. Further sewerage accommodation in this section has been made necessary by the rapid growth of that section of the city. South of the works of the Canadian General Electric Co. and west of George street there is a large population, and for the convenience of the people and the health of the city sewers are required.

Two means of providing for sewers in this section were suggested, one by constructing a new outfall sewer along the continuation of Park street to the river, and the other by a pumping station on Romaine street. The council consulted Mr. Willis Chipman, C.E., of Toronto, and obtained a report from him. As to the construction of a new outlet he says:—

Eventually it may be necessary to construct another main sewer on Park street but in my opinion it is not now required. If built it would not drain basements and cellars in the low areas without pumping.

"If a large main sewer were laid on Park street at a sufficient depth to serve as an outlet for all tributary sewers, it would be necessary to pump the entire flow in this sewer at the outlet. This scheme may be adopted at some future date."

Mr. Chipman therefore recommended that a pumping station be constructed at the lowest point in the area under consideration, and selected Romaine street at its intersection with the Grand Trunk Railway line to Belleville, and added:

"The Romaine street sewer west of the pumping station should be relaid at such lower depth as will permit all streets within the low area being sewered by gravity to the proposed pumping station. Between the railway and the Lock street main sewer as laid may be used as an outlet for some years. When the flow of sewage increases sufficiently a larger discharge may be provided at a higher elevation."

Mr. Chipman also reported on the drainage of this section. The Rink street drain he found in a foul, unsanitary condition, and as this drain was constructed when Spaulding's Bay was full of water, an extension is needed. A drain is also needed down Romaine street to provide for the large section north and west that is being rapidly built up.

The cost of these works has been estimated by Mr. Hay, the city engineer, at $30,000, and his estimates have been submitted to and approved by Mr. Chipman.

The section of the city that these works will provide sewerage and drainage for is becoming more and more important, and with the additions to the Electric Works it will receive a new impetus. Not only are the works required for the well-being of the people in that large section, but also in the interests of the health of the whole city, and we hope that the by-law will be supported by the electors on Monday next.

R. HICKS, Chairman Board of Works.

Heavy Punishment Meted Out to Young Men Who Were Disorderly on George St.

At the police court this morning two young men were fined $20 after it had been proved to the satisfaction of Magistrate Dumble's mind that they were guilty of assaulting their accusers on George street yesterday afternoon. The fines were ordered to be paid forthwith, the alternative being one month in jail for each.

In giving judgment his Worship said that no such blackguard conduct would be allowed on the streets of Peterborough.

EXTRA ATTRACTION FRIDAY'S CONCERT

Mr. Racey Kilmer of New York, probably one of the finest tenor singers in the United States, who is visiting friends in the city, has generously consented to sing at Miss Hallihan's complimentary concert on Friday evening. This is an extra attraction to an already splendid programme, and a packed house should greet one of the best concerts, from a musical standpoint, that the people of Peterborough have ever had the opportunity of attending.

Do not miss hearing Mr. Racey Kilmer, tenor of New York, who will sing at Miss Hallihan's Concert on Friday evening, He is one of the best tenors in the United States.

Westwood Ho

Mr. Murray Miller, who has for the last couple of years, conducted a bicycle repair shop at the corner of Queen and Hunter streets, intends selling out his business in the near future. It is understood that a prospective buyer is negotiating for the purchase of it, and, if suitable terms can be reached, the sale will be effected, Mr. Miller, who has always been very popular around Peterborugh, is leaving for Toronto, where he will stay for a couple of days, before leaving for Moosejaw, Assa., where he intends to follow the plumbing trade. Mr. Miller who has been an active member of St. Andrew's church, and the Young Men's Guild, will be much missed in social circles and other church activities with which he has always been energetically associated. The best wishes of his numerous friends will go with him to his new field.

PREMIER AT TRACK.

He Presents Liverpool Cup to Winner at Woodbine.

Toronto, May 25.—Hooray was the only favorite to win on the second day at Woodbine Park, though every first choice, except Expansionist finished in the money where you could not back them. Thus it was a bigger clean-up for the books than on the holiday. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Mr. Graham were visitors yesterday, the Premier presenting the Liverpool Cup to Charlie Boyle.

The feature was the twelfth renewal of the Liverpool Cup, when Charles Boyle's Detective won a clever race. Busy, the favorite, and Wm. Pitt were out in front, with Detective and Don Antanio back amongst the rabble. Plaudmore had every chance, but couldn't handle the weight.

Haggett Convicted Again.

Toronto, May 26.—Arising out of the affair on Louisa street last February, Alfred James Haggett was convicted in the sessions yesterday of committing a common assault on Washton Framanski, a Pole. The charge was shooting and wounding, but the jury reduced it. He has already been found guilty of shooting and wounding Chas. Turfi, and yesterday he pleaded guilty to a charge of obstructing the police on the same eventful night.

SMUGGLING TALES.

Stories of the Evasion of the Officers at the Boundary.

The higher a dam is raised, increasing the quantity of water held back, the greater the liability of the water to overcome the obstruction either by sweeping it away or by cutting out for itself a new channel.

A tariff is a sort of dam to the natural current of commerce which would flow in upon a country were it not held back or at least obstructed by custom-houses.

Smuggling is the leakage around the tariff dam: and as with the water, so with trade, the more that is held out the greater its effort to break through.

For example, when the duty on tobacco was considerably increased a few years ago, it was stated in the House of Commons by members representing frontier constituencies that so far as the border country was concerned, the demand for tobacco would be supplied by means of smuggling.

It would be worth while to engage in the contraband trade either to supply individual needs, or for the purpose of making a profit.

All along the frontier, but especially the frontier bordering on the States of New York and Vermont, which has been long settled and where Canadian and United States territory is separated by only an imaginary line indicated by iron posts, set by the roadside at points where the highways cross the boundary, there is wrapped up with the local history many smuggling yarns.

Some of them may be worth spinning again just for the sake of old times—for of course there is no smuggling to-day (?).

On one occasion an officer seized an American buggy, on which no duties had been paid, at a village about ten miles distant from his office.

The seizure was made in the evening, and so he decided to spend the night at the village tavern, and in the morning tow the buggy home behind his own rig. Finding no place in which he could store the buggy over night under lock and key (probably because none of the village people wished to assist him), he had to leave it in an open shed in the hotel yard; but in order to guard against recapture he secretly tied a strong cord to the rear axle of the buggy, and passed it up through the window of his bedroom.

After spending the evening in the bar-room where, according to the custom of those times, he imbibed pretty freely, he went to his room.

Just as he was about to get into bed an idea entered his rather muddled brain. He would make his buggy safe by fastening the cord around one ankle. This done, he turned in and was soon fast asleep.

The owner of the buggy knew where it was housed, and planned recapture.

During the night he came to the shed with a harnessed horse, and hitching on as quietly as possible, jumped into the vehicle and drove smartly off. The cord suddenly tightened on the sleeping officer's ankle and awakened him with a start. He was dragged out of bed, across the floor, and almost out of the window, when the cord broke.

The crown never recovered the buggy.

A few years ago there was seized at St. Johns a considerable quantity of American cigarettes and cigars. The officers rightly suspected that the goods had been brought in by a farmer whose home was in the southern part of Missisquoi county, about a couple of miles from Alburgh, Vermont.

This farmer was something of a trader, one of his occupations being the buying of fat cattle and hogs from his neighbors throughout the parish, butchering them and carrying the meat to the St. Johns market.

Occasionally he picked up a part of his load from his neighbors in Alburgh, Vt., whom he visited after sundown, and whose local market at that time was not very good.

Mingled with the meat, his load often contained large boxes of American cigarettes for which he had regular customers in St. Johns. The profit on this portion of his freight was handsome.

Italians In Canada.

The emigration authorities in Rome have been for some time studying the possibility of encouraging emigration to Canada. With this object an attempt was recently made to discover how many Italians emigrated to the Dominion. At the present time the figures relating to the total number of foreign immigrants yearly entering Canada do not afford any indication regarding the nationality.

The Canadian authorities place immigrants in two categories—English-speaking and non-English-speaking. The former average about 75 per cent. of the total. Therefore, the number of Italian immigrants is very low. A majority of the Italians bound for Canada, however, pass through the United States, and are very often included in the category of English-speaking.

So far as the Italian authorities have ascertained, between 1900 and 1909 about 57,000 Italians emigrated to Canada. By comparing these figures with those of the last census in 1901, when the Italians in Canada numbered only 10,834, proof is afforded that Italian emigration to Canada is increasing.

Manitoba Cattle Scarce.

The report of the Manitoba Department of Agriculture contains some pertinent figures on the cattle industry. Last year there were 372,520 cattle in the province; in 1908 there were 415,483 cattle, and in 1907 there were 463,862. The decline of nearly one hundred thousand head in two years in the face of a rapidly increasing population is a serious matter. There is an even more marked decline in the sheep industry. As long ago as 1893 there were 35,400 sheep in Manitoba. The numbers have steadily decreased, until in 1909 there were but 17,922. The hog industry alone seems to be thriving; the numbers have been gradually increasing, jumping from 104,113 in 1905 to 135,541 last year."

Begins to look as though the whole world is confronted with a long period of beef scarcity.—Toronto World.

Co-operative Fresh Air Circles Will be Organized Throughout the County

A movement is on foot in and around Peterborough County for the betterment of the quality and quantity of poultry products. A special feature of the movement is the organization of coperative fresh egg circles. Farmers and poultry raisers in general (as the outcome of this organization) will pay strict attention to the gathering and marketing of their eggs and in doing so they will receive better prices. The consumer will in no way be over-taxed as a result. He will pay simply for what he gets and better still, get what he pays for.

Several meetings are being arranged for in different sections of Peterborough County. The first will be called at Central Smith, town hall on Thursday evening next. Meetings will also be held at Pine Grove, Zion, Stewart's and Monaghan on dates to be announced later.

Farmers and their wives, sons and daughters and all interested in poultry, would do well to attend.

Italian Stabbed.

Guelph, May 26.—More excitement was caused in the Italian quarters of this city when George Carere was stabbed by a fellow-countryman. Carere and a few other Italians were standing on Alice street. While they were engaged in conversation Carere received a gash about seven inches long. The knife penetrated the lower side of the neck and ran up past the jaw on the cheek, ending just below the eye.

Carere was taken to the hospital. He lies in a serious state. He will not tell who did the stabbing, nor will he state how it came about. The culprit has been searched for in every Italian house in the city, but has not been found.

REIGN OF FILLETS.

Fashions of Greece For the Easter Girl.

Greek and Roman fashions reappear in the hair ornaments of today, but with a difference. Hairdressers hold that few American faces can stand the severity of purely classic adornments. A woman may be ever so charming, but unless she has Juno's perfect features she had better not assume Juno's fillet. Fillets and wreaths, though, American women will have, and some go so far as to crown their pompadours with two and even three bands. But they are bands such as the maids of Athens never had—fillets with attachments of spangled, sequined and jeweled wings and cabo-chons. Then there are wreaths of grape leaves, with the fabric made of a lustrous tinsel fabric, exquisitely light, with a sort of moonlight on the frost effect. Hairdressers aver that if the women of old Greece and Rome, with their several fillets, could see these wreaths they would be green with envy, and as they aren't here to deny the statement it will have to be accepted.

Debutantes with loads of fluffy hair can venture on wearing the simpler fillets of gold or silver, jewels, rhinestones or sequins made without adornments of feathers or bows. A beautiful fillet is of pearls—simple bands confined at either side with cabochons of the same gems—but only a very lovely woman can wear this—ought to wear it, at least. The debutante nowadays is given to lovelocks, careful little ringlets and floating wisps of hair, which are charming when they are artistically done.

For the younger girl, who is not supposed to require many embellishments, are ribbon bowknots and loops and twists of silk to stick in her fluffy hair. Only for her older sisters are the gold and silver poinsettias, the winged insects, the clusters of golden fruit and the filmy birds. One favorite ornament for older girls is a tuft of frosted silver wheat mixed with the misty feathers of an aigret and caught to the hair with a silver white butterfly.

The beauty of these ornaments depends much on the quality of the tinsel. "There's an awful difference in tinsel," remarked one dealer in hair ornaments as she laid out two specimens, one most exquisite, the other gaudy and inartistic just because of the cheap tinsel used in making it.

Two kinds of gold are fashionable in making up hair ornaments. One sort is termed pale gold and the other old gold. Neither has the decided yellow to be found in Frenchy side combs and mountings for broad and narrow rhinestone bandeaus.

Seasonable Salad.

Cut some sweet oranges in small pieces and serve on crisp lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing.

Divide some medium sized tomatoes in half and remove all the seeds and hard portion. Cut the latter into small pieces and put it into a basin with some dice shaped pieces of cucumber and some finely shred crisp lettuce and dress the whole with mayonnaise sauce. Fill the halves of the tomatoes with the mixture and place a large olive in the middle of each.

Arrange lettuce hearts on individual plates and place in the center of each one tomato, cut into small pieces, and on top of this sprinkle French endive stalks, chopped very fine. Serve with French dressing of oil, vinegar and paprika.

Toasted educators can be served with salad for a change in place of cheese wafers.

Mock Chicken Pie.

In a certain vegetarian family a mock chicken pie is made which is popular among friends who still cling to meat in their diet. A pint of pecan meats is chopped fine and mixed with a cupful of pine nuts, one can of button mushrooms, half a dozen small onions that have been boiled whole and a can of corn. Three large potatoes are peeled, cut into dice, boiled half tender and drained. A sauce is made with two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour and two cupfuls of water or milk. The sauce, the potatoes and the first mixture seasoned with salt and pepper are put into a baking dish, covered with a biscuit or potato crust and baked about half an hour in a hot oven. It is not a cheap dish, but it is tasty and nutritious, and it outwits the butcher.

To Polish Glass.

When a goblet or tumbler is cold after being washed it takes longer to dry and polish. It is best to leave such articles in a pan of warm water and dry each glass as it is lifted from the water.

Walter Jaggard, injured in a runaway accident at Hamilton a week ago, is dead.

COLOSSAL ARCTURUS

The Fourth Brightest Star In All the Heavens.

IN REALITY A MONSTER SUN.

It Is Thought to Be at Least a Hundred Times Larger Than Our Sun In Diameter and Is About Nine Hundred and Fifty Million Miles Distant.

Most of us are prone to think of our sun as being the largest body in the heavens, the grand high lord of all the little planets and the twinkling stars. Such is very far from being the case. Practically all of the fixed and twinkling stars are as large as, and some even larger than, our own sun. They appear small only because of their great distance, for they are just as truly suns with families of planets flying around them as is our central orb.

There is one of these stars in particular that has attracted the attention of astronomers, not only on account of its great size, but also its enormous distance from our solar system. This is the star Arcturus. To have some conception of the almost inconceivable distance that separates it from us the astronomical standard of measuring distance must be comprehended. Now, light does not come from a luminous body instantaneously to our eyes. It takes time to come, because it is a wave motion in a medium. The velocity of light as most recently determined is about 186,000 miles a second. Multiply this by the number of seconds in a year and we have a distance known in astronomy as a light year. Therefore when a star is, say, six trillion miles away we say it is one light year off, which means that the light from the star takes one year to reach us. It may be of some interest to know that there is no fixed star less than ten light years away, or sixty trillion miles. This is the one known as Alpha Centauri. Most of the stars are much farther even than that, Arcturus being the farthest one measured to date.

Arcturus is thought to be at least a hundred times larger than the sun in diameter. That would make it 10,000 times larger in surface, or the dimension that is ordinarily compared. By means of the photometer its brightness has been determined to be 6,200 times that of the sun. It is the fourth brightest star in all the heavens, Sirius, the dog star, being first in brightness. As regards the distance from us, it has been found to be a little over 160 light years, or 950 trillion miles. This distance, of course, cannot be conceived by mortal man, it is so stupendous and amazing. However, one can get a slight idea of it by means of an everyday analogy. Think of the fastest express train going at the rate of 100 miles an hour toward such a star and compute the time it would take. It is found to be in round numbers exactly 120,000,000 years! Now, as we know that it has taken its light so long to come to us and as there are a great many stars whose distance has never been measured exactly, but which have been computed to be approximately several million light years away, we have absolute proof of the great age of the world and the stellar universe.

The elements composing the sun Arcturus are, peculiarly enough, very nearly the same as our sun. As it is one of the most wonderful and astounding things that a scientist can tell what a star so far away is composed of, a small explanation of the modus operandi would not come amiss here. It is done by means of a small instrument known as the spectroscope, which consists of glass prisms so arranged as to split up the light falling on them into its constituent parts. Now, every substance has the power to cause a certain color or line in the spectroscope if it is in a luminous condition, so this instrument is simply pointed at the star whose composition is sought, and if any line is found that corresponds to a substance that we know about we assume that this substance is found in the star examined.

Another interesting thing is the method pursued in determining the great distance of the stars. This is done by determining their parallax or angle made at the star between two rays from the star striking at two different points in space. As the greatest distance that we can measure off in this way and still take the angle is the diameter of the earth's orbit, that distance is invariably used. It is almost 200,000,000 miles, but that, as is seen, is very small compared with the enormous distance of the star. Now, the angle thus measured from Arcturus is only two-hundredths of a second! When it is remembered that there are 60 seconds in a minute, 60 minutes in a degree and 360 degrees in a circle, it is at once seen what a small angle the parallax is and how careful the astronomer has to be in his observations. Indeed, for a long time, before modern delicately measuring instruments were invented, no star's distance could be found, for there was seemingly no angle formed, and thus the old scientists had to assume the star to be at infinity.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Wealth of CALIFORNIA OIL FIELDS

Greater Than the Yukon

Coalinga, California, the Centre of Operations

ENORMOUS YIELDS—FABULOUS PROFITS. MEN WITH SMALL HOLDINGS BECOME INDEPENDENT

So great is the wealth of the oil fields of Coalinga that in the year 1909 this limited area of country produced 15,324,374 barrels of oil from 554 wells. This at the present price of oil, 65 cents per barrel, at the well, aggregates the grand total of $9,857,343. 1910 promises to be double as much.

When such eminent experts as Messrs. Ralph Arnold and Robert Anderson, for many years in the employ of the Geological Survey Department of the United States Government, in Bulletin No. 398, describe the Coalinga District as an exceptionally rich oil field, and limited in area to 50 miles in length by 15 miles in width. Of this stretch of country but 20 miles in length and 4 miles in width comprises the proven oil zone. These authorities estimate in the underground reservoirs of these proven fields that there are 2,737,000,000 barrels of oil yet to be extracted.

This means that all the present working wells, together with a similar amount of new wells to be brought in, could not pump out this great reservoir of oil inside of a couple of hundred years.

The property controlled by this Company, the Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, is situated in Section 24, Township 21, Range 14 E., and consists of 80 acres, in the very heart of the proven oil zone, and is adjacent to such great oil producing properties as the Lucile, Silver Tip, Amy, Aladdin, The Consolidated, The Boychester, Marian, etc. In fact our property is surrounded by shareholders, and whose stock is quoted upon the open market at many times par value. Just think of the daily production of the properties that completely surround that controlled by this Company, averages from 400 to 1,000 barrels.

It is safe, therefore, to predict that our property will do at least as much per day as the former figure.

The ground controlled by this corporation is sufficient in extent to accommodate 56 wells. This would be seven wells to each 10 acres.

Figuring, therefore, that we get 400 barrels per day as a maximum, and 200 barrels per day as a minimum, from 56 wells, we would be able to pump 11,200 barrels per day, or 332,000 barrels per month, which at the present price would give the shareholders a gross income of $2,469,600 per year, deducting from this the operating expenses of, say, 10 per cent, $246,960, and the Company, will still have a net income of $2,222,640 to be distributed in dividends. This represents a yearly dividend of $4.44 for each and every share of stock on the whole capitalization (500,000 shares), or a monthly dividend of 37 cents per share.

Such a financial condition would mean that every shareholder, even though he were possessed of but 500 shares, would in the course of a year or so be provided with a competency for life.

Development work on the Company's property is being rushed forward on Well No. 1. It is expected that a rich flow of oil will be struck at from 1,000 to 1,500 feet. This means quick returns on the immediate investment.

The first well should be brought in inside of 90 days. This will raise stock to par, or above par, consequently the Company will not place on sale, after the 28th of May, but a small block of stock, which will be 35 cents per share. The present lot of stock at 25 cents per share is almost all taken up.

We, therefore, urge upon the readers of this publication not to delay in writing and mailing their order for stock until after they have wired their reservation; even then we cannot guarantee a delivery, since the 50,000 shares to be sold at 25 cents will, in all probability, be oversubscribed by Saturday, May 28th.

However, since you are at liberty to send your wire charges collect at this end, don't hesitate to wire your reservation (not less, however, than 100 shares) immediately, after reading this announcement, then send your remittance by the first mail. Have your wire read as follows:

"The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, Selkirk Block, 135 Hastings Street, West, Vancouver, B. C.—"Reserve for me .... shares "in your Company, mailing pay-"ment to-day."

We will allot shares in rotation of receipt of applications.

Every Director in our Company has acquired large holdings.

Those who have visited the property have not hesitated to stake their last dollar. All who are acquainted with such men as S. E. Tucker, E. W. Preston and A. C. Elliott, oil experts, have bought heavily of shares of this Company after reading the reports of these gentlemen on our property. In each instance these oil experts have irretrievably and unconditionally endorsed The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company's property as being one of the greatest, one of the most promising oil properties in the Coalinga fields. S. E. Tucker himself says:

"You may strike a gusher in your "first well of several thousand barrels per day. Regarding this I will "not speak definitely, but I will "stake my reputation as an oil expert, and after many years of acquaintance and knowledge of the "Coalinga Oil fields, that your property will produce wells which will "give up enormous quantities of "high grade oil. Your stock should "be worth, and sell for par when "you bring in your first well, which "should be in about 90 days' time."

Sit down at once and write your telegram and remit by first mail, making your cheque, draft, express order or money order payable to the Trustee of the Company, George L. Taschereau. Where all cash is remitted, a certificate will be issued at once. Remember, the shares of this Company are non-assessable, so that when you pay your 25 cents, you receive a certificate for fully paid-up stock.

We advise our most intimate friends not to buy less than 200 shares when the price is 50 cents, retaining the other 100 shares absolutely free of cost to themselves, since they purchased the whole at 25 cents per share.

Never again will this opportunity present itself to you. You have the assurance of men who know, men who are on the ground, that the stock will be worth par in 90 days, and the par value of each share is $1.00. We have every reason to believe that before this year 1910 comes to a close, Coalinga-Eureka stock will be worth $3 to $4 from the fact we should have three to four wells in operation.

Bear in mind that the price of the shares in this Company will be advanced at six o'clock p. m. May 28th to 35 cents per share.

Prospectus and fuller particulars will be furnished at the office of The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, Selkirk Block, 135 Hastings Street, West, Vancouver, B. C.

A TIMELESS WORLD.

What Would Happen if We Were Entirely Inclosed by Clouds.

If astronomers are right in ascribing the wonderful brightness of Venus to the existence of an atmosphere continually filled with clouds, then she must be a world without time—at least there can be no measurement of time there such as we have here.

It is because we can see the sun and the stars that we are able to traverse the oceans and run railroad trains across the continents.

Surround our earth with an unbroken shell of clouds and what would become of all our clocks and chronometers? Not a ship could safely cross the sea; not a railroad would be able to run its trains without a series of frightful wrecks. In a few weeks every clock and watch would be hopelessly wrong and all exact timekeeping would cease.

Probably there are few who stop to think of the way in which our everyday life depends upon astronomical observations. Our great primary timekeeper is the earth rotating on its axis. If we could not see the sun and stars because of clouds we should not know that the earth rotates and there would be no standard to which we could refer our timepieces and by which we could correct them. In fact, we should probably have no timepieces.

There could be no hours and minutes, for they are exact divisions of an ideal day based upon celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

They could not be based upon clocks or other mechanical devices, because the most exquisite chronometer that can be constructed will not keep time indefinitely and must be continually corrected by means of observations of the stars made in the observatories.

There could be no accurate maps of countries or charts of the seas, for such maps and charts can be made only by the aid of astronomical observations.

There could be no parallels of latitude or meridians of longitude, for they, too, are based on celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

We should not know with any certainty where we were upon the earth. We could not measure the distance from New York to London nor from New York to San Francisco.

Poetical minds, moved by the spectacle of Venus in her glory, have drawn brilliant pictures of the delights of life in that radiant world, but there is another side to the question of which we may well think as we gaze admiringly upon her electric splendor.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

The "Arabian Nights."

The collection of tales called the "Thousand and One Nights," or the "Arabian Nights," is of unknown date and authorship. It was first made known in Europe about the end of the seventeenth century by Antoine Galland, who was employed by Colbert to collect manuscripts in the east. The copy of the Arabic manuscript brought by Galland from Syria contained a marginal note dated 1584, and from internal evidence the middle of the fifteenth century has been fixed upon as the probable period of the composition of the work. Some of the tales were evidently borrowed by the writer from other authors, and Von Hammer identifies at least the plot and some of the stories of the "Arabian Nights" with an earlier collection in Persian called the "Thousand Fanciful Stories."

April Fooling.

The origin of the custom of April fooling cannot be traced with any degree of certainty. In the literature of the last century there are found many references to it, and yet beyond that it is scarcely possible to go. One suggestion is that the custom of playing tricks on the first day of April was derived from some ancient pagan custom, such as the Huli festival among the Hindoos or the Roman feast of the fools. One fact, however, we do know, and that is that the practice prevails in many countries under various names which would seem to indicate that it dates away back to the early history of the race.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Four Extremes.

The coldest place on earth inhabited by man is Verkhoyansk, above the arctic circle, in northeastern Siberia. The thermometer there drops to 90 degrees below zero in January, but sometimes rises to 86 degrees above zero in the shade in July, dropping, however, to the freezing point on the warmest summer nights. The hottest place in the world is the interior of the great Sahara desert, in Africa, where the thermometer rises to 122 degrees. The wettest place is Greytown, Nicaragua, where the mean annual rainfall is 260 inches. The place of least rain is Port Nolloth, in South Africa, where less than an inch sometimes falls in a year.

All For Love.

"Did you ever know a girl to die for love?"

"Yes."

"Did she just fade away and die because some man deserted her?"

"No; she just took in washing and worked herself to death because the man she loved married her."—Houston Post.

NEWS FROM IDA

Ida, May 23.—The farmers have been favored with dry weather the past two weeks, which has enabled the majority of them to finish seeding. The crops have not grown very much owing to the cold weather which has existed. Warmer weather is eagerly being looked forward to.

Friends and acquaintances of Ven. Archdeacon Allen, of St. John's church Ida, will be pleased to hear that he is recovering from his recent illness. Mr. Spencer, curate, with outside assistance, has been carrying on the various duties in connection with the church.

A new flag pole was erected on the grounds of Beechwood school last week, the new flag being flown half mast out of respect to the late King.

Confirmation will take place at St. John's church, Ida, on June 5th. It is expected that a large number will be confirmed on the above date.

The congregation of St. John's church, Ida, intend having a new Sunday school room erected on the church property this summer.

The garden party in connection with St. John's church, Ida, is to be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Chris. Sisson. The committee is to be congratulated on its selection, as the above home is admirably suited for such an event, there being a nice lawn adjoining the house, also two orchards, an old one and a new one, which will be thrown open to the public for promenading.

OSHKIGMONG

Oshkigmong, May 23.—Mr. P. McCue had quite an adventure with an enormous sized mudturtle the other day. As he was passing quietly along the turtle, which was composedly enjoying its mid-day meal and not liking to be disturbed, viciously seized the paddle in its jaws and towed Pete about five rods before it let go, all the while Pete trying to extricate his paddle from the turtle's mouth. The submarine animal is about twenty inches across its back and moss-grown.

The driving shed for the church and town hall is about completed. The shed is all closed, 140 feet long.

A number of young folks and some of the older ones joined in a canoe trip up to Sandy Lake one day this week. The party consisted of ten canoes, each carrying its full capacity of living freight, numbering thirty-four persons. After participating and enjoying a relishable lunch some two or three hours were spent in playing games, etc. The party returned at a late hour in the evening with nothing to mar the pleasure of the day with the exception of a few mosquito bites.

A memorial service was held on Friday in sacred memory of the death of King Edward VII., and paying the last tribute to the one who so wisely ruled the British Empire.

HON. DR. PUGSLEY PROMISES BIG THINGS FOR TORONTO

He Says the Intention of the Department is to Aid a Big Drydock Scheme—He is Favorable to an improved Whartage System.

Toronto, May 27.—If only a portion of the improvements to Toronto harbor outlined by Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works for Canada, at the banquet at the Ontario Club last night, are completed within the next few years, there will be no question of this city's supremacy on the great lakes as a receiving and distributing point for ocean and lake cargoes.

There are three things in the opinion of the Minister of Public Works, gleaned from observations in a tour of the harbor during the morning, that Toronto needs:

1. An adequate system of wharves, with better connection between the railways and the wharves and better opportunities for the handling of freight.
2. The enlargement of the Welland Canal.
3. A dry-dock, with a shipbuilding and repair yard capable of handling the largest vessels on the lakes.

"Toronto is the second greatest city in Canada. It seems to me that Toronto is in a position to increase its business and population with marvelous rapidity."

"I am not here to-night for the purpose of making promises to the good people of Toronto," Hon. Mr. Pugsley said. "It is not necessary that I should make promises. What we have done and what we are doing to-day ought to be an earnest of the feeling which we entertain towards the City of Toronto, and that ought to be a guarantee of the course we shall pursue in the future with regard to its claims.

"I would like to see it, not the second city of Canada, but one of the great cities of the American continent. The opportunities are great. The industry, enterprise and intelligence of its citizens are second to none anywhere. I see no reason why any limit should be put on the prosperity and increase which may be obtained by Toronto.

"I believe from what I saw to-day that the people of Toronto are alive to their possibilities as to the development of their harbor, and you will be able to count upon me and upon the Prime Minister and my other colleagues in the Government," declared Hon. Mr. Pugsley in conclusion.

The Department of Public Works, said Hon. Mr. Pugsley, had always been subject to criticism. It was the large spending department of the Government, and had to depend on the fidelity and sagacity of its employes. He had always endeavored to play the game fairly, but declared that only half the truth was usually told by his political opponents. He reported an expenditure for the year ending 31st March last of $14,784,739.39, which was made up of $1,867,364.01 on capital account, $12,292,359.15 on income, and $625,034.23 on revenue.

The chair was occupied by M. J. Haney, president of the Ontario club, with Hon. Mr. Pugsley on his right and Senator J. K. Kerr on his left.

METALS ARE TRANSMUTED

Modern Alchemist Succeeds in Performing the "Grand Work."

Scranton, Pa., May 27.—Dr. F. W. Lange, a reputable and wealthy physician of this city, yesterday corroborated the report that he had fulfilled the chemists' dream of ages—that he had discovered a simple chemical process of transmuting the bases of metals into the finest of silver and gold, and consequently he anticipates a quick drop in the prices of the two standards of money. Fumes from Dr. Lange's transmuting furnace in his laboratory brought death to Chas. C. Dickinson, the New York banker, who had come here to witness the operation and who before he died, according to Dr. Lange, pledged all of the financial aid necessary. It was Dickinson's death which attracted attention to the Scranton laboratory.

"My discovery is one which upsets all scientific theories," says Dr. Lange in the statements which was made public yesterday, "I have discovered a means of increasing an atom of silver by the introduction of base metals to 100 times its size and weight—the result being still pure silver of equal if not greater fineness. The product passed successfully the sharpest scrutiny of the best assayers and analysts in the country. I even sent specimens of the transmuting metals to the U. S. mint, and the report came back that the substance was pure silver."

Burned 30,000 Fruit Trees.

Vancouver, B.C., May 27.—The provincial fruit inspector held a bonfire here yesterday, destroying 30,000 insect-laden trees from Ontario, United States, France, Belgium, Germany and Holland, part of one million trees shipped to British Columbia this winter. There were enough germs to have horticulturally infected the whole province.

MISS DOROTHY R GITTINGS.

Quincy Mass., May 27.—That grim old sea fighter, Commodore Andrew Sterrett, would have swept the Mediterranean clean of Barbary pirates if he had under his feet so speedy a craft as the torpedo boat destroyer which, bearing his name, plunged down the launching ways at Quincy, Mass., U.S., recently.

But Commodore Sterrett died 107 years ago, in the days of the wooden frigate and the muzzle loaders, and the Navy Department had difficulty in finding a direct descendant in the person of Miss Dorothy Rosalie Gittings, of Baltimore, to smash the wine bottle and cry the name of her ancestor.

THE PREMIER OF ALBERTA HAS RESIGNED AT LAST

Chief Justic Sifton is Called on to Form a Government—Judge Mitchell Will be Attorney-General and Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture.

Edmonton, May 27.—Premier Rutherford and his Cabinet resigned yesterday morning, and Chief Justice Sifton was sworn in by Lieutenant-Governor Bulyea as Premier. With Hon. Mr. Rutherford, Hon. C. W. Cross, Attorney-General; Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. P. E. Bessard, Minister without portfolio, all retired. Hon. W. H. Cushing, former Minister of Public Works, and Hon. W. A. Buchanan, Minister without portfolio, the other two Ministers of the Rutherford administration, resigned during the session of the Legislature during the Waterways crisis.

The new Premier, who is a brother of Hon. Clifford Sifton, will have in his Cabinet Judge Mitchell of Medicine Hat as Attorney-General; Hon. Duncan Marshall, as Minister of Agriculture, and another southern member, possibly Dr. Warnock, as Minister of Public Works. The new administration is made up entirely of southern men.

Premier Sifton, after being sworn in yesterday, stated that no announcement with regard to his Cabinet could be made till Monday. Yesterday afternoon Lieutenant-Governor Bulyea swore in the new members of the Legislature and immediately prorogued the House. Another session will be held in the fall, perhaps November.

The caucus held Wednesday night of Government supporters, decided to ask Premier Rutherford to place his resignation in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor. At the same time it was decided to request Chief Justice Sifton to assume the Premiership, he being assured of a substantial majority in the House.

There was a hard fight to save Attorney-General Cross, as he has enthusiastic followers, but the only condition on which Sifton would discuss the leadership was that none of the Ministers who had anything to do with the legislation and contracts of the Great Waterways should be included in the new Cabinet.

Judge Mitchell of Medicine Hat, is the only name mentioned as successor to Cross. Besides the retiring Premier and Attorney-General, J. A. Boyle is the only lawyer in the House, and the prominent part he took in leading the insurgents, makes him persona non grata to the majority of the Government supporters.

$1,000,000 SHIPYARD

Owen Sound, May 27.—A syndicate of English capitalists will construct a million-dollar shipbuilding and repair plant and two dry-docks at Owen Sound. An agreement has just been signed with the town by Edward Box, their representative, who for the past month has been sizing up the shipping of the great lakes and visiting the different ports before deciding on the best point to locate. The plant will be built on the C.P.R. waterfront here, and that company is taking a block of stock in the concern. The company propose to build in Owen Sound two dry-docks, a graving-dock 650 feet long and a floating dry-dock, capable of handling steamers up to 300 feet in length, and in addition to put in a shipbuilding and repairing plant. The ratepayers of Owen Sound will vote on a bylaw granting a bonus of $50,000 and sanctioning the taking stock for $50,000.

RECIPROCAL REGISTRATION

London, May 27.—At the general medical council, President MacAlister, referring to the forthcoming conference in Canada regarding the possibility of federal action, with respect to medical registration, said: "Should the conference lead to the establishment of a Canadian medical register, the question of reciprocity between Britain and Canada would be greatly simplified." The council resolved that anyone who holds the license of the medical council of P.E.I., shall be entitled to be registered on the colonial list of the medical register.

LOANED HIM TO CANADA

Ottawa, May 27.—Lieut. P. C. W. Howe of the dockyard branch of the Admiralty, has been lent to the Canadian Government for service at headquarters' staff at Ottawa, and, according to a cable received yesterday, will act in connection with the organization of the Canadian navy.

Lieut. Howe will act in the capacity of a consulting engineer. He will sail from England on the Niobe and will watch her engines closely during the trip. No definite date is set for when she will sail for Canada.

CANADA NOT SO FAR AHEAD

London, May 27.—Dr. J. W. Robertson, addressing the County Council Association at Westminster, said that the people who gave the impression that Canada was far ahead of Britain did not know much about Canada, and knew less about England. He found here excellent conditions in agricultural education in spots; his main work in the past had been to try to multiply those spots in Canada.

Killed Hunting Woodchucks.

Belleville, Ont., May 27.—John Bartlett, a Barnardo boy, who worked for a farmer named Dan Henderson, near Coe Hill, was out after woodchucks with a rifle. He prodded a hole with the stock of the gun, which went off, the contents going through young Bartlett's body, killing him. He was thirteen years old.

Well-Known Hotelman Dead.

Brockville, May 27.—Samuel Connor, one of Brockville's oldest and best citizens, died yesterday morning. He was the owner and proprietor of the Revere House, and one of the best known hotelmen in eastern Ontario.

FACE EATEN BY RATS

Windsor, May 27.—John Tuck, whose horribly decomposed body was found in a barn on Dougall street, did not die as a result of a broken neck, as was at first thought. The police are inclined to accept the suicide theory.

The body was in a dreadful state when found Wednesday night by a little girl, who went into the barn to gather eggs. Half of the face and both hands had been eaten off by rats.

When found, one pocket in the coat contained a small vial of chloroform, and a home-made billy. Tuck's wife has been living in Toronto for some time.

INTERMEDIATE RATE TO ITALY AND BELGIUM

Ottawa, May 27.—The tariff agreements with Belgium and Italy, which Hon. W. S. Fielding promised the House of Commons last session, and the details of which, it is said, will shortly be announced, will practically give these two additional European countries the same tariff concessions granted to France.

Both Italy and Belgium have been placed at a distinct disadvantage by the treaty with France, which gives intermediate tariff rates on a considerable list of French products, while the higher tariff is still collected on similar commodities from these countries.

Belgium has been hit by the provision of the Canadian-Franco treaty that goods must be shipped to Canada direct from the country of origin, in order to get the intermediate rates.

This has had a tendency to injure the shipping port of Antwerp. Italy has suffered more particularly on account of the lower rates given to the silks of France. The departure of Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. Wm. Paterson for England has been delayed by the negotiations with Belgium and Italy, which are expected to be concluded within the next ten days.

No legislation is required for the Dominion Government to extend to Belgium and Italy, or any other countries, the benefit of the Canadian intermediate tariff in full or in part.

$60,000 FIRE AT GALT FOUNDRY

Galt, May 27.—At an early hour yesterday morning fire broke out on the premises of the J. B. Ballantyne Foundry Co., and before being extinguished did $60,000 damage. Half of this loss is caused by the destruction of valuable patterns, some of which belonged to the Preston Car & Coach Co. The insurance is $24,000.

George Watson, a farm laborer, was arrested by County Constable Lake yesterday, and, after medical examination, was taken to the Hamilton Asylum as dangerously insane.

GIRL'S FATHER SHOOTS SUITOR

Wetaskiwin, Alba., May 27.—Louis Goldman, a former butcher of Wetaskiwin, was shot Wednesday by his father-in-law, Serene Amand.

Goldman married a Miss Amand about six months ago and the announcement of the wedding was clipped from a newspaper and sent to his wife in the old country.

The girl's father heard about this previous marriage. The two men began quarrelling and Goldman undertook to give the old man a horsewhipping, when he received two shots in the head.

SUBMARINE GOES DOWN WITH HER CREW ABOARD

Pluviose is Hit by Channel Steamer Pas de Calais and After a Few Ineffectual Plunges She Goes to the Bottom—Attempt at Rescue.

Calais, France, May 27.—Another French submarine, the Pluviose, with all her crew aboard, lies in thirty fathoms of water in the English Channel. She was sent there by the cross-channel steamer Pas de Calais, which, crowded with passengers bound for Dover, struck the partly submerged Pluviose when about two miles from the harbor.

Accounts differ as to the cause of the accident. Admiral Fournier has expressed the opinion that the submarine attempted to pass beneath the steamer, while other officials think that the Pluviose, after a long dive, came up by chance directly under the paddle wheels.

The shock of the contact brought the passengers to the steamer's rails, and they saw almost instantly the hull of the submarine rolling about, as though trying to right itself. A boat was hastily launched, but the foundering craft, which seemed to have been hit, turned partly over and disappeared.

Signals of distress from the Pas de Calais, which was making water rapidly, brought two tugs to the scene, and later a torpedo boat destroyer put out and anchored near where the Pluviose had gone down. Within an hour or two a wrecking vessel was lying near the destroyer, and her crew were making hasty preparations to send down divers to locate the ill-fated submarine, entombed in which are three officers and 24 men.

The chances of rescue are very slim, because, in the opinion of experts, either the naphtha reservoirs of the Pluviose burst or the craft was so badly damaged that she filled.

After fruitless efforts made to reach the 27 entombed men in the submarine, hope practically has been given up of bringing them to the surface alive.

A powerful undercurrent balked the divers in their attempt last evening to reach the Pluviose, and if the imprisoned men are not already dead, it is certain that the delay will prove fatal.

Even if the crew succeed in closing her water-tight compartments, they will not be able to survive for any great length of time.

REFUSED DUKE, MARRIED HER CHOICE

Washington, May 27.—Miss Mathilde Townsend, who renounced the suit of the Duc D'Alba, and became incensed when she learned that her mother had offered the French nobleman $250,000 annual income, was married yesterday in American fashion to Peter Goelet Gerry in the presence of the President of the United States, the Vice-President and the American Cabinet.

Mrs. Richard Townsend, the millionaire mother of the bride, who reluctantly became reconciled to her daughter's decision, turned her magnificent home into a dream castle of flowers and priceless decorations for the occasion.

COMPROMISE SETTLEMENT

London, May 27.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Lord Ridley, the tariff reform leader, speaking at Wimbledon, advocated a compromise settlement of the constitutional question. There were reforms which would make the Lords a more effectual and more useful chamber. If Conservatives said that one essential feature of any change which took place must be a second chamber, they must also recognize that Liberals, on their side, might reasonably ask for a second chamber with which they had some chance of getting a majority.

QUEEN MARY'S BIRTHDAY

London, May 27.—Queen Mary's birthday yesterday was marked by a salute of artillery in St. James' Park. The public generally is much pleased at the official announcement curtailing the period of public mourning. It is not difficult to trace the good influence of Queen Mary in the royal decision, which thus abbreviates by about one month the period of public mourning for the dead monarch.

Court etiquette has strong claim to formal consideration by Their Majesties, but fortunately both are endowed strongly with a sense of human sympathy. They realize what hardship might be caused by a too rigid adherence to precedent and custom in the present instance, a hardship to large branches of trade which would spell ruin in some cases and a loss of the current year's earnings in all, if the summer stock of draperies had to be sold for export.

For a similar reason King George's pronouncement of his decision to continue his father's attention to the turf has aroused wide satisfaction and praise.

CONVENTION OF WOMEN'S MISSION BOARD

Guelph, May 27.—The Canada Congregational Women's Board of Missions is holding its 24th annual convention in this city, at which about 100 delegates from all over Ontario and Quebec are present.

Yesterday the opening sessions of the convention were taken up with the reading of gratifying reports, and the appointment of committees. Rev. Mr. Tippett of the First Congregational Church, Hamilton, and Miss Jamieson of Toronto, superintendent of the young people's department of the board, were speakers at last evening's session.

Mrs. Moody of Montreal is president, and Miss M. L. Silcox of Toronto, secretary, while Mrs. (Dr.) Stevenson of Montreal is also taking a prominent part. Miss Halfpenny of Toronto nursing at home mission, was one of the most interesting speakers at the afternoon's session.

PROF. [illegible] APPOINTMENT

Toronto, May 27.—Prof. J. F. McCurdy, of the University of Toronto, will have charge of the School of Oriental Research, under the auspices of the Archaeological Institute of America, at Jerusalem, during the year 1911-12. He is the first Canadian to be so honored.

The appointment involves the care and training of students from all over the world, and the inspection of ruins in an effort to throw light on Bible matters.

BURGLAR FELLED BY WOMAN

New York, May 27.—Louis Gratch, 25 years old, painter by day and burglar by night, was discovered by Mrs. Dora Gieteman in her apartments on the third floor of a Delancey street house yesterday, and, after beating the man with a cuspidor until he backed against an open window with a low sill, was smashing him across the face with a rolling pin, when he toppled to instant death on the concrete pavement fifty feet below.

LATE TICKS FROM WIRES

A memorial service for King Edward was held on the White Star liner Adriatic on her trip to Southampton.

Theodore Roosevelt was made a Doctor of Laws of Cambridge University by the students and townspeople.

Miss Mary Harriman, daughter of the late railroad master, was married quietly yesterday to Charles Cary Rumsey of Buffalo.

The U. S. Government has declared that the schooner Espuerzo, which was fired on by the Nicaraguan gunboat Venus, was not entitled to fly the Stars and Stripes.

With his right foot crushed by the falling of weights on the Government dredge Quebec, Floyd Denny of Phillipsville was taken to St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, yesterday.

Geo. Hollowes, a street cleaner, was taken to the General Hospital, Toronto, yesterday, being struck down in Broadview avenue by an auto driven by Allan McIntosh. He was severely injured internally.

CONVICTS ON STRIKE

Columbus, Ohio, May 27.—Twenty-five more convicts in the Ohio Penitentiary struck yesterday, on the plea that they were being served with condemned food, the total number on strike being 147, but all of them, after a parley with the warden, promised to go to work at noon.

Warden Jones promptly ordered that all the strikers be "hung up," so that their arms in shackles are held above their heads, though none of their bodily weight is sustained by the shackles. Many of the strikers were murderers at work in the bolt room.

ADVERTISE IN THE REVIEW.

"I ARREST YOU" WAS HARD ON HIS NERVES

Harvey Windover said He Became Excited when Constable Dickson Told Him He Was to be Arrested—Judgment Reserved Till Thursday Next in Both Charges Against Prisoner

Harvey Windover appeared before County Magistrate Edmison this morning and the charge against the prisoner, that of assaulting County Constable Dickson on Friday, May 13th, was heard.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for Windover, pleaded not guilty, and at the conclusion of the evidence his Worship remanded the prisoner to jail and reserved judgment till Thursday next at three o'clock.

Windover was arrested at the home of Nelson Windover, in Cavandish, on Friday evening, May 13th, on complaint of Nelson Windover, but not before he had put up a fight. He was charged with assaulting the wife of Nelson Windover by pointing a loaded rifle at her.

He received a hearing before Magistrate Edmison on May 20th and was convicted. Judgment was reserved.

County Constables Dickson and Montgomery gave evidence for the prosecution this morning in the second charge and the prisoner and his wife were called for the defence.

CONSTABLE DICKSON.

On instructions from High County Constable Cochrane, I came up from Westwood on May 13th and went on to Buckhorn, where I was joined by Constable Montgomery. We drove to Nelson Windover's house in Cavandish and reached there about two o'clock.

The Prisoner came to the house about six o'clock and when I said that I had come to arrest him he clinched with me. I struck him with the baton and Constable Montgomery came to my assistance. Windover caught hold of me around the waist and resisted as well as he could.

Finally he said he would give up and I placed the handcuffs on him. Afterwards he said he was sorry that he had caused so much trouble.

P. C. MONTGOMERY.

The evidence given by this witness was practically the same as that of Constable Montgomery. He differed, however, in telling of how the handcuffs were put on the prisoner. He thought it was Nelson Windover who put them on.

HARVEY WINDOVER.

Windover said that he became excited when Constable Dickson stood up and said, "I arrest you," and this brought about the clinching. Prisoner said he did not know at the time that Dickson was a constable.

MRS. CAROLINE WINDOVER.

In answer to Mr. Gordon, Mrs. Windover stated that her husband was of a very excitable disposition. He had always been good to his family until the recent affair.

IMPORTATION OF PULPWOOD

New York, May 27.—The case pending before the board of general appraisers to test the provisions of the tariff law governing the importation of pulp wood and wood pulp has been abandoned by the claimants, the Treasury Department agreeing to refund the amount of excess duties collected without trial.

There was a good chance that the appraisers would impose the maximum rates against all Canadian importations, which would have embarrassed the Government.

Henderson, Ky., May 27.—B. K. Ebelin, a well-known horseman of this city, was shot and killed and Mattie White, a negro servant in the family, was fatally wounded by Mrs. Ebelin, at the Ebelin home yesterday. Mrs. Ebelin gave herself up, telling the police that either she or her husband had to die. Jealousy is supposed to have caused the killing.

Little Boy's Jaunt.

UNCLE SAM'S COW

Sam Hunter is an able cartoonist. For years he has almost daily displayed in striking picture story, in the Toronto World, the misdeeds of the Liberals, or warned the Conservatives of any weakness either in this province or at Ottawa.

Under the heading "His Idea of Reciprocity," the artist has the picture of Uncle Sam leading a cow up to a fence, the other side of which is Canada, and speaking to Mr. Fielding, the astute man with the cow says, "Let my cow pasture in your garden and I'll sell you all the milk you need." This is a fault our dear American cousin has.

He wants his own and a little more. Now, if he sold us that milk from his cow fattened on Canadian green pastures and refreshed from Canadian living and running waters, he would skim it, steal the water and put it in the milk, and then charge us top price.

We had better let Uncle Sam keep his cow. We need all our own pasture just now.

INDUSTRIAL RECOGNITION

The Co-operative Fresh Egg Association, now in its embryonic stage, will be well received by the residents of this vicinity. Its aim is to give the the consumer fresh eggs and place in their hands the product of the industrious Canadian hen at as early a date as possible.

The history of the egg is an interesting one. It is gathered by the farmer's wife, brought to the country store and traded for sugar or coal oil, dress goods or tea. There it may repose for a week or ten days till the buyer's wagon comes for his load. Then it is gathered in for the second time. The commission merchant makes the third gathering. Again the egg changes hands, this time to the retailers.

"Are they strictly fresh?" Now, not having affidavits as to the age of the egg, the shop keeper of course assumes that it is so, and he assures the customer that the purchase is new laid. So she takes it home for breakfast. It may be one month in the land of the living, or it may be two, and the older it gets and the more often it changes hands, the higher goes the price. So does the flavor.

The Co-operative Fresh Egg Circles are going to try to bring the hen and her products closer to the consumer at a more reasonable price, but why not stamp the egg on the date when it was laid, and the question of value would then at once be largely settled.

OUR COBALT IS HERE

The call of the Cobalt is loud.

Silver streaks here and there, and gold shows its shining face in the Porcupine.

Once in a while we read of a man who struck it rich, who lives retired, who buys an auto, and builds him a mansion.

But it's only once in a while.

Where we are is the opportunity for most of us.

Distance ever lends enchantment, even if it is only the enchantment of the stage, but in this world this great living, pulsing theatre, we are all actors.

There is silver and gold in Peterborough and in the lands surrounding it.

All that is necessary is the digging.

The farmer gets it. In league with the Infinite, his crops ripen, his hogs fatten, his orchards grow heavy, as he sleeps.

The young man who works can secure it here. He doesn't need to go to the Cobalt, where the black flies are a torment, potatoes are five dollars a sack and bread thirty-five cents a loaf.

For one who secures a prize in the Cobalt there are one hundred who draw a blank.

There are in every town scores of men who never left their birth place and who won honor, respect and a competence.

Our Cobalt is here.

THE POINT OF VIEW

Will He Raze or Move

(Hamilton Spectator.)

Truth is stranger than fiction, as is easily shown in the case of the contractor who put up a two-storey brick house on a Prospect street lot and did not discover until he was doing the interior finishing that he was working on the wrong lot altogether.

Patronage

(Toronto News.)

The whole patronage business is based on the false notion that the offices of the country belong to a party. In its operation the system is cruel and unjust. It fills the offices with inexperienced, and often incompetent, men, and it casts good officials into the streets. More, it is not a benefit, but a detriment, to the party administering it. Patronage should be abolished. It is a nuisance and a political snare.

Nearing the Top

(Ottawa Journal.)

In two years Canada has gone up from the tenth nation in the list of the world's wheat producing countries to the fifth nation, passing in the two years in question, Hungary, Spain, Italy, Germany and Argentina, and soon Canada will pass British India and France, and then United States and Russia will be the only two greater wheat producers. Judging by Canada's percentage of yearly advance, it will only be about five years before she is in the third place, and a generation before she is well up towards entering into serious competition for places one or two on the list.

HAVE YOU BEEN STUNG ?

Some people have recently been badly "stung" by getting substitutes for Zam-Buk. When they have asked for a box of Zam-Buk, the dealer has produced some line on which he makes more profit, and talked about "Just as good and cheaper," or "One of my own, and I know what's in it," or "Really, the same thing at half the price," etc., etc. When tested, this cheap substitute has, of course, failed to do anything like what Zam-Buk does, but the buyer has, nevertheless, parted with his money! You will have to get Zam-Buk eventually! Don't waste money on useless substitutes. The name "Zam-Buk" is protected by law. See it on every packet before paying. If your local dealer should be out of stock, write "Zam-Buk, Toronto." We will mail it by return.

Benefit Concert

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—Might I be permitted to call the attention of the citizens of Peterborough to the benefit concert being tendered Miss Hallihan to-night, and to point out why, in the opinion of the writer, it should be made a grand success. 1st. The proceeds are to be devoted exclusively to the advancement of Miss Hallihan's vocal training. 2nd. Miss Hallihan has demonstrated the fact that she possesses a voice of great promise. Her singing recently received the unqualified praise of the press and critics of Toronto. Dr. Vogt, Dr. Ham and Mr. Howard Brockway, of New York, all of whom are eminent judges, have pronounced her voice capable of great possibilities, while His Excellency Earl Grey and the competition committee, as we all know, took special means to emphasize their appreciation of her singing. 3rd. Miss Hallihan is a Peterborough girl whose voice up to the present time has received only the training her own town affords, and for the last two or three years none at all. It is therefore hard to say what her voice really may amount to under proper direction, and as great singers are rare, it would be a crying shame if the people of Peterborough allowed her voice to go longer without receiving the attention she is personally unable to give it. We have recently noticed with pleasure the distinction won by Miss Hallihan for herself and Peterborough as "the best vocalist" out of hundreds appearing in the Earl Grey competition. It is our time now to show our practical appreciation of her efforts, and let us do it well. Let us make it impossible for Miss Hallihan ever again to sing "Home, Sweet Home" without deeper pathos, and the writer feels certain we will have many occasions in the future to be proud of our little vocal protege.

Yours, etc.,
CITIZEN.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, May 26.—The railways reported 105 carloads of live stock at the City Market for Wednesday and Thursday, consisting of 1053 cattle, 4011 hogs, 339 sheep, 366 calves and 5 horses.

Exporters.

There were no export cattle on sale, at least there were no straight loads sold as such. Prices for exporters, had there been any, would be from $6.40 to $7.20, at least we think that would have been about their value for steers, and bulls from $5.25 to $6.

Butchers.

George Rowntree bought for the Harris Abattoir Company during the week over 1200 cattle at following prices: Exporters, $6.40 to $7.30; butchers' heifers and steers, at $5.90 to $6.75; cows, $4 to $5.90; bulls, $5.25 to $6.

Stockers and Feeders.

Harry Murby reports the market quiet. Mr. Murby bought 150 cattle during the week at following quotations: Steers, 800 to 1000 lbs., at $5 to $5.75; steers, 600 to 800 lbs. each, at $4.50 to $5; light stockers of good quality, $4 to $4.50.

Milkers and Springers.

A moderate supply of milkers and springers sold at $35 to $65 and an exceptionally fine cow or two brought $75 each.

Veal Calves.

Sheep and Lambs.

Ewes sold at $5 to $5.50; rams, $4 to $4.50; spring lambs, $3 to $6 each.

Hogs.

Receipts from all sources for the two days were large, over 4000. The market was easy at $9.85 for selects, fed and watered, and $9.55, f.o.b., cars, at country points. Look out for lower prices as prospects point that way.

Feeding Young Stock.

The best way to fatten young stock to secure a maximum profit is to feed them well from the start. Whether it be young cattle or lambs, they should be liberally fed from the beginning of the feeding period.

A WONDERFUL CAPTAIN.

Collingwood Had Misfortune Always to Follow Someone.

Collingwood's fame is great and lasting, but in the imagination of his fellow-countrymen he remains a somewhat shadowy figure among the more tangible heroes of his time, a man of splendid achievement and of undimmed reputation, but one who never moves alone, or first, across the stage, says Henry Newbolt in The London Graphic. This was his destiny from the beginning; wherever he went in life he found a greater man ahead of him.

There is something strangely ominous in the regularity with which he was sent by fate to sail in Nelson's wake. As a lieutenant he succeeded him first in the Lowestoffe and then in the Bristol; as a commander he followed him in the Badger, and as a post-captain in the Hinchinbroog. He was with him under Hughes in the West Indies, and gave him invaluable backing through the troubles over the Navigation Laws; seconded him in his magnificent disobedience at St. Vincent; carried out his plan for the Trafalgar attack; succeeded him in the Mediterranean command, and there found death, after a wearier struggle, but in the same obedience to the love of duty.

It is true that of this extraordinary record part only was the work of accident; part may have been due to the insight of the authorities, and the most memorable items were the result of Collingwood's own genius for loyalty. But the result has been that the public has hitherto been content to find the biography of Collingwood in the Life of Nelson, and has taken little pains to form a clear picture of the man himself, apart from his memorable services and his almost more memorable friendship. Another contributing cause was, no doubt, the fact that Collingwood was actually less visible to his contemporaries than any prominent Englishman of his time. To the people of these islands he was a name, a force, a safeguard, but hardly a living and conversible being—a historical personage who happened to be still alive, but of course out of reach.

For long and continuous sea service his life has no parallel; out of fifty years he spent less than six on shore; from 1793 to his death in 1810 he had but one year at home. In those seventeen years of war he fought in three great battles—the First of June, St. Vincent and Trafalgar—but the rest of the time was passed in the harder service of blockade, the strain of which may be faintly imagined from the fact that at one time he kept the sea for twenty-two months without so much as once letting go an anchor. As he himself wrote when watching off Cadiz in 1806, "A battle is really nothing to the fatigue and anxiety of such a life."

Fortunately, though materials seem to be lacking for a detailed life of Collingwood, it is possible to find him in his letters, which are excellent reading. "I know not where he got his style," said an eminent diplomatist, "but he writes better than any of us." Perhaps that is true of most sailors: they have leisure and loneliness, and minds less crammed with journalistic phrases.

It is not, however, so much the style as the substance of Collingwood's letters that will give the reader the sense of intimacy; even when "the English admiral wishes health and peace" to His Highness the Bey of Tunis, he is less interesting than when he sends a sovereign to his old gardener Scott, to comfort him "in these hard times," or gives directions for the education of his beloved daughters. "How do the dear girls go on? I would have them taught geometry, which is of all sciences in the world the most entertaining." His taste was all for science. "I would have my girls gain such knowledge of the works of the creation, that they may have a fixed idea of the nature of such a world. Whenever they have that," he adds, "nothing on this side of the moon will give them much uneasiness of mind."

His sense of humor is intermittent, but lively: in this vein he loves especially to play with Bounce, the dog (in prose and verse), and admirably relieves the solemnity which naturally accompanied his elevation to the peerage. "The editors of the Naval Chronicle have written to me for the history of my life and progress. . . . So I have employed —— to write a history for me. For my birth and parentage he has selected two or three chapters of Bamfylde Moore Carew; for my service in the West Indies and on the Spanish Main he has the history of the Buccaneers; and for my shipwreck he has copied a great deal out of Robinson Crusoe: all of which, with a few anecdotes from the lives of the admirals, a little distorted, will make, I am inclined to think, a very respectable piece of biography."

The words which immediately follow these give a curious touch of reality. "I have just heard that the Brest fleet is at sea, and coming this way. If they do, I have force enough to beat them all, and it would be a lucky hour." Another vivid stroke, in his account of Lord Howe's victory, is worthy of the author of "The Dynasts." "We received all their broadsides two or three times before we fired a gun. It was then near ten o'clock. I observed to the admiral that about that time our wives were going to church, but that I thought the peal we should ring about the Frenchmen's ears would outdo their parish bells."

Motoring Through the Air.

Barney Oldfield's recent 27-second mile feat recalls to mind the feat of the intrepid motorist, Mr. Coles, who some time ago gave a thrilling performance at the London Alhambra. A platform, constructed some feet from the stage, and supported by strong baulks of timber, was approached by a steep chute on one side and steps on the other. Driving the car up the chute, Mr. Coles brought it to a dead stop in a space not an inch longer than the actual length of the car, and then sent it down two flights of stairs, afterwards pulling the car up in its own length. There was no ridge or edge of any kind to the side of the stairs, and a mistake of a quarter of an inch would probably have resulted in a fatal smash-up.

Wingham District Methodists praised the Ontario Government's enforcement of the liquor law.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN.
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"If I consulted only my own inclination I would go on studying, take my degree in philosophy and teach."

"Teach!" exclaimed Eunice, with repressed excitement. "You think it a desirable occupation?"

"There is no higher work," Georgiana answered earnestly.

"There are some young women," answered Eunice, "to whom it would appear a pale drab. And some men wouldn't wish it to their 'meanest enemy.'"

Georgiana regarded her with a puzzled surprise. "What makes you think so, Eunice?"

"So I have been told."

"There is no nobler work," Georgiana insisted, with enthusiasm.

"Excuse me," objected Daisy. "I'd rather take in stairs to scrub. If you want to know what I'm going to do, Eunice, now that my education is finished"—

"Finished?" questioned Georgiana, with gentle irony.

"Anything more that's done for it, Georgiana, will have to be a passive process. I refuse to co-operate. I've monkeyed with myself long enough trying to 'develop' my 'latent possibilities.' Anything further in that line has got to be accomplished through a process of absorption by means of my contact with you and uncle. Meantime I'm going to sit in the market, Eunice—the matrimonial market, of course. I'm down to the highest bidder."

"Daisy," Georgiana pleaded with her, "if contact with me has given you no higher ideal than that"—

"Oh, it's easy for you to talk, Georgie!" Daisy retorted plaintively. "Your market is made."

"What do you mean, Daisy?"

"You're as good as engaged already to Dr. Kinross."

Eunice had a sensation as though the earth were suddenly floating out from under her. What did it mean. Daisy speaking of "Dr. Kinross?" Was his disguise a pretense and did these girls know him otherwise than as Pete? What was this which Daisy had said, "You are as good as engaged to Dr. Kinross!" And he had told her that he "loved Georgiana." Eunice felt herself floating amid clouds of illusion.

Georgiana laughed and looked rather pleased. "I'm afraid your assumptions are quite gratuitous, my dear."

"Well, at least there isn't the least doubt as to what his feelings will be," Daisy predicted. "You'll do him brown! He won't be able to help himself no matter how much he'd like to be a misogynist or whatever you call 'em."

"I'm not so sure," Georgiana protested, but she laid her hand affectionately on Daisy's arm.

"But you may be sure," Eunice spoke with a half gasp and almost without volition. "He does love you."

"What?" Daisy turned upon her.

"Yes, Dr. Kinross does love her."

Eunice's voice sounded hollow to herself. She was dazed. There was a dull dead weight upon her heart, an undefined but keen sense of loss and pain. Dr. Kinross and Georgiana were "as good as engaged."

"He says he loves you," she repeated mechanically.

There was a sob in her throat that ached intolerably. She felt an imperative need to get away by herself. She suddenly sprang up, and before the other two girls could collect themselves she was gone.

"Have you and Abe had a scrap?"

For an instant surprise held both of them silent.

"She's a little bit off the top!" declared Daisy.

"What could she have meant?" wondered Georgiana.

"I can't get aboard!" said Daisy. "I don't think she knew herself. I always did think that girl acted as if she had wheels!"

"If Pete were still here I would ask him what he knows about her. She is singular," Georgiana agreed. "But what could she have meant?"

"She never saw Kinross, and Kinross never saw you. She was talking through her hat."

"Of course," Georgiana again agreed reluctantly. It would be so much more interesting if Daisy's conclusion was not so inevitable—if Eunice had not been "talking through her hat."

Meantime Eunice, alone in the "haunted" chamber, seated on the side of the bed and staring with unseeing eyes into the darkness of the room, groped in a greater darkness of soul as she tried in her blind ignorance of life to understand her own great desolation.

Engaged to be married! What did marriage mean to men like him? She had an unhappy knowledge of what it meant to such as Abe and the other countrymen about here. But to a man like Dr. Kinross, a man with an intellect and a soul as well as a body, would not marriage mean something different to such as he?

Suddenly a hot wave of realization swept over her. Some burning lines of Browning came to her mind:

> Be a god—and hold me with your charm.
> Be a man—and hold me with your arm.

Eunice sank down upon the bed and buried her face deep in the pillow. To her trembling heart only one thing was clear. That which in the days just past had made the sun in the heavens shine for her as it had never shone before, that was over. He belonged to another. What had he to do with her or she with him? She was alone—utterly and absolutely alone.

CHAPTER XXIII.

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon two days later Kinross was once more with the assembled Morningstars in the farm kitchen, the entire family, including Eunice, being present at the important interview he was having with them.

The withdrawal of Georgiana's all pervading presence from the farm had made the family seem to Kinross on his return quite shrunken and small.

He had wondered how, after his few days' absence and his fresh contact with the world, Eunice would appear to him from the point of view of his own and her aunt's world, and it seemed to him now as he looked at her sitting opposite him at the kitchen table that she was even more detached from her environment than he had at first thought her and far more akin to his own and her aunt's sphere of life than that of the farm—to which, indeed, she seemed entirely alien.

He fancied today that the habitual melancholy of her eyes was intensified. But surely the great news he had for her would quickly dissipate it and the original "pale drab" of her existence change to rosy hues—perhaps, alas, to lurid ones—for in his heart he felt not a little misgiving as to the possibly baneful effect of her seeming good fortune.

Before returning he had sent a message ahead of him to Mr. Morningstar, warning him to be ready against his arrival to pay over to Eunice immediately the sum of $3,000 or be prepared to accept the consequences.

The effect of this communication had been to lead the Morningstars to urge upon Eunice once more the suit of Abe, but neither their persuasions nor their anger had succeeded in moving her.

On his arrival he had of course insisted upon seeing Eunice alone. But he had met with such violent opposition to this from both Mr. and Mrs. Morningstar that even the girl herself drew back, unwilling to brave the storm that would follow her open defiance. He saw that part, at least, of what he had to tell her of her affairs would have to be told in the presence of the family. Surely the news would make her able to throw off the last vestige of her yoke.

So, first, he had forced Morningstar, under the lash of his threats, to sign, in a cold perspiration of horror, the draft for $3,000 (which in fact represented at least a fourth of his possessions) and pass it over to the bewildered Eunice.

"Now, Mr. Morningstar," he began when this transaction had been completed, leaving the farmer utterly shaken out of his orbit, "I have a piece of news for you and your wife and for Eunice."

Eunice's face was pale, and her eyes, intent upon his face, were burning bright. He wished that he had the power to read all her thoughts, unique young creature that she was. It was distasteful, even painful, to have to break his news to her in the presence of these people, who, indeed, seemed her natural enemies, but it was apparently unavoidable.

"What's your news?" Mrs. Morningstar curtly demanded, her curiosity getting the better of her rage against him, and her husband, too, bitter as was his chagrin, looked up keenly, suspicious of further calamity.

"When I spent the night in the haunted room I made some discoveries. I found out, as you know, about the $4,000 belonging to Eunice. I found out also some other things."

He paused an instant. They all waited breathlessly.

"The man and woman who left Eunice here were not her parents."

"Now," exclaimed Mrs. Morningstar, "you ain't tellin' us that!"

"Och, my souls!" breathed Ollie. "Forevermore!"

"Kin you prove it?" demanded Mr. Morningstar sullenly.

"What did they do with havin' her, then, along with 'em?" cried Mrs. Morningstar.

"They had stolen her from her home."

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Mrs. Morningstar, her eyes bulging.

"I had wished to talk to Eunice of this and other details alone, but as you made that impossible I'll give you the bare facts now, after which," he added in a tone of authority, "Eunice will come with me to hear in private what concerns no one but herself."

The Morningstars stared resentfully, but no one answered.

"Her father," Kinross went on, "was W. W. Wolcott of New York. He was a man of large means. Eunice was his only child. Her aunt, Miss Wolcott of Washington, who believed her to be dead, has meantime had possession of the fortune rightfully belonging to Eunice. She is ready now to make restitution."

"Kin you prove it?" Abe here repeated his father's demand.

"How did you find it out?" asked Morningstar.

"Haunted rooms reveal secrets," Kinross answered, with a solemnity that made the family shudder to a man.

"How much is comin' to her?" inquired Abe covetously.

"A very great fortune."

While the family gaped, speechless, he rose from the table and moved around to Eunice's side.

"Miss Wolcott," he said, holding out his hand, "I congratulate you."

It took the Morningstars a long time to grasp it, and Eunice herself seemed dazed by it. She had not the least conception of what a great fortune meant. Kinross found her childlike acceptance of the stupendous fact both refreshing and amusing.

It required a vast deal of explaining before he could make them all even begin to understand the discovery he had made. Mr. and Mrs. Morningstar were loud in their comments and questions. Even Ollie overcame her habitual shyness before him and became articulate. Only Eunice had nothing to say as she sat motionless, with her eyes fixed upon his face, when again he took his chair opposite her.

"Now, just to think!" heavily breathed Mrs. Morningstar. "Who'd 'a' thunk it?"

"Och, it minds me of that there story of Cinderella, ain't?" Ollie appealed to Kinross, taking courage under the excitement of the occasion to display her knowledge of literature.

"Now, see what you done me, mom," exclaimed Abe bitterly, "with your always jawin' Eunice fur makin' up to me! See what you cheated me out of! If you'd of left us be, look at what I'd be comin' into!"

"Yes, anyhow!" Mr. Morningstar also bitterly reproached his wife.

But Mrs. Morningstar turned on the latter resentfully. "Just as if you wasn't always agin it as much as me!"

"I only thought they oughtn't to engage to marry till they was sure oncet," he declared.

"Well, if you ain't"— But she checked herself judiciously. "That's all I meant, too!" she also declared, turning appealingly to Eunice.

But the girl did not reply. Mrs. Morningstar sighed heavily.

"But look a-here!" suddenly cried Mr. Morningstar. "It'll spite that there aunt somepin turrible to have to give up the money after her havin' it all this time and thinkin' it's hern!"

"I guess, too!" agreed his wife.

Eunice glanced an inquiry at Kinross. "Will it leave my aunt poor?"

"Comparatively. Not what you have been accustomed to call poor."

The girl looked thoughtful, but said no more.

"Under these circumstances, Mr. Morningstar," Kinross continued, "you understand you will of course have to part with Eunice."

Mrs. Morningstar started as if dodging a blow.

Would this man never have done tormenting and robbing them?

"You think you're a-goin' to take her away, do you?" she exclaimed fiercely.

"Why," he smiled, "even you could scarcely expect her to remain here now."

"I ain't leavin' her go!" she stoutly maintained, evidently not yet realizing at all the significance of what she had heard.

Kinross drew a purse from his pocket and, taking out some bills, laid them before Eunice. "Your aunt gave me this money to give to you for your expenses until you join her in New York."

The girl's eyes opened wide. "I am to go to my aunt?" she breathlessly asked. "My aunt! It seems so strange," she said, her face flushing, a quiver in her voice that revealed pitifully her lifelong loneliness, "to feel that there is some one in the world belonging to me!"

"Your aunt expects to send her secretary, Mrs. Kenyon, a widow, down here for you next week to take you back with her to New York. This money, she instructed me to tell you, you can use in getting yourself some clothing for your journey with the help of Mrs. Kenyon. When you are with your aunt she will do everything in the world for your welfare, I know."

"Eunice," cried Abe, starting up, "you ain't a-goin' away to stay away—ain't not, you ain't?" he pleaded. "Och, Eunice, if you'd say yes to me I'd leave you hire the washin' with the money wot your pop inherited to you, and I'd leave you spend at the cloes all you wanted, and we'd go a good bit, too, to circuses and county fairs and even to the rooft garden in town. We could afford to with your havin' such a lot yet! Why, I guess we could afford 'most anything! Won't you say yes to me?"

Eunice slowly turned her eyes upon him. "Say 'yes' to you now with freedom—freedom just at my hand? Marry you and remain a bond slave, with my heart still crying out as it has done all my life, 'Who will deliver me from the body of this death?' Tie myself to you, when liberty and the wide world lie before me? Oh, Abe," she exclaimed, "if the thought of marrying you was horrible to me while I was under your mother's and father's tyranny how must it look to me now that I am free—free to live, to be myself, to feed the hunger of my mind and soul with all the beauty of the world? Marry you, Abe?" A little rippling laugh broke from her lips. Kinross felt his brain beat with the shock of the joy that suddenly surged up in his heart at the revelation of her words while he mentally pronounced himself an ass for his stupidity in not having realized the impossibility of her caring for Abe.

"Ty-rantry!" exclaimed Mr. Morningstar, taking up her words, while Abe looked dazed. "After all me and mom done fur you—and our son even wantin' to marry you and us urgin' it—and givin' you back your $3,000"—

The draft for that money was in her hand. She suddenly broke in upon his speech by holding it out to him.

"Take it back. I know how you have suffered in having it forced from you. And I don't need it. Take it as payment for my board during the remainder of my stay here."

Mr. Morningstar almost pounced upon it, while his small eyes gleamed. "That ain't no more'n right, seein' you don't need it, and me I couldn't rightly spare it." He glanced triumphantly at Kinross. "You thought you was wonderful smart, ain't, gittin' this here money off of me? But I got ahead of you that there time."

Kinross gave a short laugh. "I'm satisfied with my work," he said.

"Eunice, you ain't goin' to act so ongrateful as to leave right in the middle of cannin' season?" exclaimed Mrs. Morningstar, with a momentary return to her habitual asperity toward the girl. "You could put off goin' to your aunt till a couple weeks a'ready anyhow. How is me and Ollie goin' to get through all without you? And mebbe if you stayed on a couple of weeks you'd come to see it some different about Abe too."

"Just as soon as the lady whom my aunt is sending for me can take me away I shall go."

"Well, if you don't call that actin' mean—right in the middle of cannin' the tomats, too, yet!"

"Och, mom, you talk dumm!" said her husband, with a disgusted turning of his back on her and flinging his words behind him at her. "With a fortune waitin' fur her at New York over, what would she do with stoppin' to help with our cannin' the tomats? She kin afford to buy canned tomats out of the grocery stores and won't have to bother no more with puttin' up. I know what a big fortune means to a person if you don't. I knowed a man out west was worth worse'n $50,000 yet."

Again Mrs. Morningstar sighed heavily. "Eunice," she said, changing her tone to motherly persuasiveness, "you'll come to see us now and again, ain't? You would like to come home where you was raised, still, ain't you would?"

Eunice looked at her and shook her head almost shudderingly.

"Never!"

"Ain't you got no gratefulness?" Mrs. Morningstar exclaimed in despair.

HANDICAPPED

This is the Case With Many Peterborough People

Too many Peterborough citizens are handicapped with a bad back. The unceasing pain causes constant misery, making work a burden and stooping or lifting an impossibility. The back aches at night, preventing refreshing rest, and in the morning is stiff and lame. Plasters and liniments may give relief, but cannot reach the cause. To eliminate the pains and aches you must cure the kidneys.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Can you doubt Peterborough evidence?

W. Wormington, of 121 Brock street, Peterborough, Ont., says:—"I had suffered with rheumatism for over three years. I found little or no relief in any of the remedies I tried. I became so stiff and sore that I could scarcely turn in bed, and had to lay off from my work. The urine was highly colored and filled with a heavy sand-like sediment which plainly told the disordered state of the kidneys. I tried Booth's Kidney Pills through an advertisement at Wm. Madill's drug store, and was surprised to see how quickly the urine cleared. The kidneys were soon active and the uric acid went from my system. The rheumatism gradually became less severe and finally left me. I am better than in years previous and could not hesitate to recommend Booth's Kidney Pills."

TRAINS SHOULD BE LABELLED

Suggestion That the G.T.R. Morning Trains be Placarded

A suggestion is made, and it seems a reasonable and good one, that the G.T.R. trains leaving the Peterborough station in the morning for Lakefield, Belleville and Lindsay should be placarded like the trains in large stations.

Three trains leave within five minutes of each other: For Lindsay at 8.25, for Belleville at 8.30, and for Lakefield at 8.35. As these trains do not always run up to the minute on scheduled time, there is frequently confusion among the passengers as to which train they should take. Placards naming the different trains would do away with this ambiguity and would be appreciated by the public.

EIGHTEEN APPLICATIONS FOR CHIEF OF POLICE

Were Considered at Meeting of Police Commissioners — List of Possible Appointees Was Reduced — Another Meeting Next Week.

A meeting of the police commissioners was held yesterday afternoon at the city buildings to consider the appointment of a new chief of police. Judge Huycke was in the chair and Mayor Morrow and Police Magistrate Dumble were also present. The session was held at 4 o'clock, and occupied two hours, during which time eighteen applications were taken up and the list thinned down to three or four. The standing and ability of the applicants under consideration will be fully inquired into before an appointment is made.

The commission will sit again early next week, probably on Tuesday.

MISSING SIX YEAR OLD BOY WAS FOUND HERE

A visit to this city this week by a Mrs. Blackburn, of 407 Ossington avenue, Toronto, was the means by which Cyril Hopkins, who strangely disappeared from his home at 79 Munroe avenue, Toronto, was recovered and taken back to his parents. Mrs. Blackburn was visiting here over the holiday, and she found the lad, who is but six years of age, playing on the street, in company with several other children.

When asked what he was doing in this city the little fellow replied that he intended to spend the summer in this place.

Mrs. Blackburn, however, notified the parents, who had been very much alarmed over the boy's absence, and they were greatly relieved to find that he was safe.

Last Tuesday he left his home to go to a grocery store to change a five-dollar bill for his mother. He left the store with the change, but did not return to his home. The police made inquiries and searched for the boy, but no trace of him could be found.

PHILOMATHEAN SOCIETY'S "LIT"

Address by the Members of the Society and Interesting Programme

Peterborough Collegiate Institute held a literary evening last night to which the public were invited. The programme was varied and held chiefly to encourage public speaking by the students. Mr. Alex. Primeau, the president of the society, was in the chair and made a short opening speech. The public speaking contests were for both junior and senior pupils. Those who competed in the junior, were Miss Stella Cuffe and Lester Pearson, and in the senior, Margaret Edwards, Marmaduke Pearson and Harold Lees. The judges gave the decision to Miss Margaret Edwards for the seniors and to Lester Pearson of the juniors.

Miss Bernice Giroux gave a piano solo, and Miss G. Gumphrict and Helen Greaves, gave an instrumental duet, both of which added greatly to the pleasure of the evening. Miss Gladys Pentland gave a splendid recitation on George Washington. At the close of the evening Mr. Stubbs, of the teaching staff, gave an interesting and helpful address on the "Importance of Public Speaking." The meeting was dismissed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Since yesterday the comet has travelled 3,500,000 miles, and is now distant 31,000,000 miles. Look for it in the western sky after sunset if weather conditions are clear.

HOW BIG IS A COMET?

How big is a comet? Because no two comets are alike it is difficult to give any definite answer. One comet may have a long tail and a small head; another a small tail and a broad head; a third may be a mere whisp of light in the sky. Moreover, the selfsame comet may change in appearance, length of tail, and density of nucleus in a few hours.

Some idea of these wide variations in the size of comets will perhaps be obtained by the consideration of a few records. Perhaps the smallest nucleus of which we have any record is that of the first comet of 1798; for its diameter was only twenty-five miles. The biggest nucleus was that of the great comet of 1848, which nucleus had a diameter of 8,000 miles. Between these two extremes we have diameters of 428 miles for the nucleus of the comet of 1825, and 5,600 miles for that of Donati's great comet of 1858

The dimensions of the comas (the envelopes surrounding the nuclei) are more impressive. Thus the great comet of 1811, which as we have just seen had a nucleus of only 428 miles, was adorned with a coma measuring no less than 1,125,000 miles. Halley's comet in 1835, had a coma of 357,000 miles diameter. A comparatively small comet was that of the comet of 1847, which measured but 18,000 miles.

It is difficult indeed to give any adequate conception of the size of a comet, because that size is in large measure dependent upon the comet's distance from the sun. For example, Encke's comet, which was the second comet for which any astronomer found a period of revolution which would bring it back to visibility at regularly recurring intervals, had a diameter of 281,000 miles on October 9th, 1838; yet on December 17, when it was nearest the sun, its diameter had shrunk to a paltry 3,000 miles. This contraction as the sun is approached is suffered [illegible] comet.

When we consider the size of a comet's tail we deal not with thousands, but with millions of miles. Perhaps the longest tail of which we have any trustworthy record, was that which steamed behind the comet of 1843. The length of that wonderful appendage was no less than 200,000,000 miles. Huge, too, were the tails of the comets of 1811 (130,000,000 miles); 1860 (100,000,000 miles); 1618 (50,000,000 miles); 1882 (over 100,000,000 miles); and 1858 (42,000,000 miles.)

More formidable still are the dimension for the orbits in which comets travel toward and from the sun. Halley's comet, for example, journeys beyond the orbit of Neptune, some thirty times the distance of the earth from the sun, or, roughly 3,000 million miles. Hopelessly inconceivable as that distance is, there are comets that recede from the sun for even greater distances. The comet of 1729 travelled 406,130,000,000 miles from the sun. Even Encke's comet, which has one of the shortest tracks, is nearly 400,000,000 miles from the sun at one point of its orbit.

In the nearness of their approach to the sun comets also vary considerably. Halley's comet was about 57,000,000 miles from the sun on April 20, on which date it swung around that body and sped toward the earth. Much closer was the approach of the comet of 1843, for it came within 538,000 miles of the sun, which is relatively nearer the centre of our solar system than a ginger held one inch from a gas flame. The comet of 1729 was more cautious, for it kept at a safe distance of 3,383,800 miles.

How many comets have been seen? The ancient records are far from trustworthy. Moreover, the telescope has enabled us to see many a comet that might otherwise have been unrecorded, and we have systematically searched for comets only in the last decades. All told there are about 1,200 comets on record, but the actual number that have actually been seen in historic times must run well up into the thousands. Most of the ancient civilized peoples lived north of the equator, for which reason a large number of comets visible only in the southern hemisphere have flared up and passed away without notation.

A comet may remain visible for days, and it may hover in the sky for years. Halley's comet was first discovered on the present return on September 11, 1910. It will be visible in the telescope well into the autumn of this year. In 1835, it was visible for nine and one-half months. The comet of 1847 remained visible for a similar period. Nowadays we keep a comet in view longer than was possible fifty years ago, thanks to our more powerful telescopes and our astronomical cameras. Thus comet IV of 1905, as it is known, was visible to the eye of science for three and one-half years; comet I. of 1889, for two years; comet II. of 1890, for twenty-two months, and comet IV. of 1907 for ten months.

Article 209 (a) general order 58 (2), 1909, is hereby cancelled, and the following substituted therefor:

285 (a)—For the training of a cadet corps during the school year, subject to the certificate of a military inspecting officer that the cadet corps has been well instructed in the course of military training laid down for it, allowances may be paid to lieutenants, or others, calculated as follows:

When the corps has an enrolled strength of less than 30 cadets, no allowance.

From 30 to a maximum of 50 cadets, $1 per cadet.

Where there are school teachers qualified as cadet instructors, a teacher instructor will be detailed to each company of 50 cadets for their instruction in military training and musketry. In the event of there being but one teacher properly qualified to instruct cadets and more than one company of cadets connected with the educational institution receiving instruction from him a further allowance may be paid him, as follows:—For each additional cadet over 50 and up to 100, 75 cents per cadet. For each cadet in excess of 100, 50 cents per cadet.

In the absence of a school teacher properly qualified to instruct a cadet corps, the above allowances, less 20 per cent., may be paid (subject to the inspecting officer's certificate of inspection) to any officer of the militia any N. O. from His Majesty's imperial forces, acting as cadet instructor to a gazetted cadet corps.

Lieutenants of the corps of school cadet instructor who may instruct cadet corps other than those affiliated with their own schools, may be paid the above allowances, less a deduction of 20 per cent.

SINGLE TAX ASSOCIATION FORMED FOR PETERBOROUGH

At Conclusion of Mr. F.E. Coulter's Address at City Council Chamber—Mr. W. H. Moore is Chairman—Arguments in Favor of Land Tax and the Need of Assessment Reform

There were vacant seats in the City Council Chamber last evening when the president of the Board of Trade, Ald. A. G. Gillespie, took the chair and introduced Mr. F. E. Coulter, secretary of the Single Tax Association and Direct Legislation League of the Province, as the speaker for the occasion.

At the close of the address twenty-seven signed a card, to show their sympathy with the land tax movement, and a local society was thus formed. The following officers were appointed:—

Chairman—W. H. Moore.
Vice-Chairman—H. B. Cowan.
Secretary—Robert Fair.

Next Tuesday in Toronto, a convention will be held, at which delegates from all the societies will be present and deal with matters of interest to the movement.

Assisting the speaker was Mr. Cyrus B Newton, a humorist of marked ability. His personifications and other numbers were heartily received.

Mr. Coulter discussed the whole system of taxation, going especially into detail of the conditions in Ontario and the history and necessity of the so-called Fripp Bill, which grew out of a petition from 280 municipalities, including all the large cities of the province, save one. They asked to be given the power to put a higher rate upon land values than upon improvements, and an equally important provision to go carefully into its assessment each year, and thus discover and end the irresponsible and arbitrary assessments that now rule as the result of the whims of the assessors, because there is no adequate way to have them reviewed.

Mr. Coulter proved himself master of his subject, and he left no stone unturned in the time allotted for its cause. He gave many instances where the taxation of land values alone, in Canada, was being carried out, always with great credit to the community and justice to all. He also went exhaustively into the theory of taxation, showing how it would either breed idleness and speculators, or industrious and agricultural workers, as it was applied on industry on the one hand, thus fining men for being good citizens, or upon land values alone, thus taking only that which society produces and liberating the individual completely from the grevious burden of paying for another man's misdeeds. He said:—"The accepted theory of taxation is like the modern theory of disease. We are told that God made the earth, and found it good; the sea, and found it good; the fishes, and birds and animals, and found them good; we are told that God made man and found him very good, and rested the first Sunday. And then science tells us (Great is Modern Science and foolishness is her prophet) that on Monday He went raving crazy and made a bug to destroy all He found so very good. So it is with taxes. We are told that we must be taxed because we must be governed. We are told that those who need no government must pay out of their industry for the government of the criminal and the bad. We are told that the public value in lands must not be touched, because some scoundred three hundred years ago, who didn't own it, gave a deed to another scoundrel who then thought he did. Go to! It is like the theory of bugs—only useful to transfer the earnings of the good, the industrious and the useful, to the pockets of the idle, the crooked and the useless.

"There are 62,000 farmers less in Ontario than there were eight years ago. All gone west or into the cities. West to escape those penalizing taxes and reach cheaper land under a system of land value taxes, or into the cities to hide and escape by becoming mere wage earners.

"Already this spring more than two thousand Ontario families have gone west to settle where their personal enterprise will not be subject to taxation. Throughout the entire Province of Alberta there is no tax upon improvements among the farmers.

"Edmonton has, in the past five or six years, increased from 5,000 to 25,000 in population. This rapid increase has caused a tremendous rise in the value of land, a tendency that has been assisted by the public ownership of cars, gas, water, lighting and telephone systems; the latter a general government concern. Yet the value is not a speculative one, but a real one, and building is fairly up to the land boom.

"Vancouver, B.C., has just taken off all taxes save on the land values. The result is the greatest building boom in the history of the city. While our own Waterloo county, by long odds the most prosperous in Ontario, has, for some time, practically exempted all rural improvements from taxation, the result being that when you cross the line into Waterloo from any direction it is like coming into another country, for thrift and enterprise."

To meet the objection of the Government and at the same time relieve them of embarassment, pending a closer review of all the assessments, it is now proposed to organize the whole province, so that a complete popular demand may leave no room for doubt as to the wish of the people upon this proposition, or the further demand for the power of initiative and referendum so that these needful popular measures in future can be taken up, and the province brought to the front with other progressive countries without embarrassment of any kind to the Government.

EVERYTHING IS FLOURISHING IN THE WEST

Mr. Andrew Brown, who has been on an extensive trip throughout the provinces, as far as the Coast, is back in the city, and when seen to-day spoke very optimistically of conditions in the west. Mr. Brown stopped at all the important western towns and cities, and as the majority do who have visited the west, has nothing but praise for it. At nearly every place he met dozens of Peterborough citizens and spent many enjoyable hours with them.

Regarding business conditions in real estate, Mr. Brown was much impressed with possibilities for investment in Vancouver, where things are in a very flourishing condition. Calgary and Edmonton also offer splendid fields for investment. Some of the old Peterborough residents whom he had the pleasure of meeting were Mr. G. A. Reid and family, of Vancouver, Messrs. Chas. Warner, Frank Bradburn, Norman Allison, Lt.-Col. Edwards, and numerous others.

CO-OPERATIVE EGG CIRCLE WAS FORMED

Farmers Supplying Fresh Eggs Want Protection From Unscrupulous Sellers

Much encouragement was given last night by the farmers of Central Smith to the movement set on foot by Farm and Dairy, which has for its object the organization of Co-operative Fresh Egg Circles amongst the farmers in the adjoining townships.

It was decided to organize a Fresh Egg Circle in the district.

To this end a provisional board of directors were elected as follows;—President, J. A. McGregor; Secretary-Treasurer, Will Scott; Directors, C. E. Moore, J. A. Young and Fred Campbell. These men will assist in completing the work of organization.

Just what this movement will mean to those farmers who become members and live up to the rules and regulations as set forth in the constitution of the circle, becomes apparent when it is known that 17 per cent. of the eggs as ordinarily collected and sold to produce men prove to be absolutely unfit for human consumption and have to be thrown out on the dump. The produce men, naturally do not bear this loss, it resting ultimately in every case, directly on the producers who are paid for their eggs accordingly and the man who supplies the good eggs is taxed, most unjustly to be sure, along with the rest.

Additional meetings having in view the organization of similar circles as that formed at Central Smith last night, are to be held at Pine Grove next Monday evening, North Monaghan town hall Tuesday evening, Stewart's Union hall Wednesday evening, and at Zion Thursday evening next week. Ladies are especially invited.

Points For Mothers

Where there are small children mother's stocking basket is very rarely empty.

It is amazing how small toes and heels resent being covered and how quickly they work their way into the outer world. A great deal of time and trouble is saved and the lives of the stockings doubled if the toes and heels are run with mending silk or even with cotton before they are worn. Silk will not shrink as mending wool does, and it is not nearly so bulky.

Washing, too, has a great deal to do with the wear of stockings. They should first of all be well shaken in order to remove any dust and then soaked for fifteen minutes in a lather of warm water and soap to which a little ammonia has been added. Next make a fresh lather of soap and water and squeeze the stockings in this. Rinse in two lots of warm water, dry and press with a moderately hot iron before they are quite dry. Never use soda for socks or stockings. It injures the color.

Hints About Babies.

Never bathe a bady immediately after it has fed. Two hours at least should elapse before a bath.

When a child is fretful give it a little water to drink. Just as often as not it is simply thirsty.

A lump of ice tied in a muslin bag will soothe gums swollen from teething and is welcome to most babies.

Ill nature or angry outbursts on the part of a mother will unfailingly react on the baby, who will suffer from indigestion, colic and general fretfulness.

When a child suffers from earache syringe the ear with water as hot as can be borne every hour or so and keep a bag of hot salt over the back of the ear. Never drop hot oil or any other substance except water into the ear. Keep the child very warm and quiet. These earaches, so frequent in childhood, are generally due to congestion from a cold.

Babies should preferably sleep on their sides. When sleeping on their backs the food is apt to rise in their throats and choke them.

Game For Children.

Did you ever make a pin organ? It is great fun and so easy that even a very little child could make it with some help perhaps. The pins are just common pins, interspersed with a few needles, and the organ is just a cigar box. Turn the box upside down and mark a straight line down the center and drive in the pins, remembering always that the deeper they are driven in the higher will be the note. Small black pins make good high notes, while needles are excellent for bass notes.

An older child with some ingenuity can tune his organ to play real music. Select a simple tune and drive each pin in until it corresponds to a note. Use a small hammer and push the pin up and down, picking it with another pin until it makes the right note. Time is regulated by placing the pins of greater or lesser distance from each other, and a little experimenting will soon make the task comparatively easy. To play the organ use a stout wire hairpin.

For Hard Knocks.

Small folks who play hard will fall down and get hit and bumped.

To relieve the effects of a blow rub the injured part immediately with a little butter or olive oil. It should be applied every half hour for an hour or two.

It is curious how many people acquire black eyes by walking carelessly around in the dark.

Since bruised eyes may cause serious trouble, some precaution such as the following would be quite worth while:

When walking in the dark in unaccustomed places always raise the arm to about the level of the nose and keep it bent there to protect the face and chest.

Quilling For Hats.

Some very beautiful quillings for children's hats can be made more successfully by hand than by machine.

They require a quantity of ribbon velvet or ribbon (more of the latter, because it is less heavy), but the simple mushroom shape will mean no further expense for trimming. Your inch wide ribbon will work up well into a snappy looking hat decoration when the two ends that depend from the back, after the quilling is tacked to the hat, are each passed through a jet or metal slide.

A Soothing Bath.

A warm bath in which a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda has been dissolved has a wonderful effect in quieting the nervous irritation of a teething or otherwise cross child. In nine cases out of ten he will go to sleep almost as soon as he is dried and wake up as bright and amiable as one could desire.

A Wise Precaution.

The careful mother always makes several pairs of strings for baby's cap. These she hems at their unfinished ends after their embroidered ends are worked.

The two-year-old child of Thomas Little, a farmer near Blyth, was killed by a train.

CLEVER MANCHESTER BOY.

How Many Grown-Ups Can Take This Exercise In Spelling.

A Manchester schoolmaster the other day gave out the following as a dictation exercise. One of the boys got it all right with only three mistakes. We always had a high opinion of Manchester youngsters, and consider that this dictation feat was something of which both master and boy should be proud. Schoolmasters in other parts of the country please copy.

"A much-maligned cobbler was a skilful gauger, who possessed a poignant disposition and drove a pedlar's wagon, using an alpenstock as an instrument of coercion to tyrannize over his donkey. He was a Galilean and a Sadducee, but phthisical catarrh, diphtheria, and a bilious, intermittent erysipelas occasioned him annoyance.

"The gipsy with the sobriquet of Sibyl went into an ecstasy at seeing him measure some saccharine tomatoes without either dyeing or singeing the ignitable queue that he wore; but he remarked that he would have preferred a woollen surtout.

"His choice was not referable to a vacillating, occasionally recurring, idiosyncrasy. Therefore he woefully gave utterance to the following apophthegm:

"'Life is chequered, but schism, heresy, apostasy, and villainy shall be punished.'

"The sibyl, becoming paralyzed by haemorrhage, lifted her eyes to the cupola of the Capitol to conceal her unparalleled embarrassment, making him a rough curtsy, but not harassing him with mystifying, rarefying, and stupefying innuendoes. She gave him a bouquet of fuchsia, mignonette and dahlias, and a portmanteau containing this heterogeneous collection: a treatise on pneumonics, an Apocrypha, a book of hieroglyphics, a lecture on Mendelssohn, a kaleidoscope, a drachm phial of ipecacuanha, a clarionet, a violoncello, a cornelian of symmetrical proportions, a daguerreotype, and a guitar.

"The gauger, who was, by the by, a trafficking rectifier and a parishioner, thanked her cordially. She, apologizing, answered:

"'There are various degrees of wisdom, all problematically rateable, but none comparable to the syllogism existing between an eligible ellipsis and a trisyllabic diaeresis.'"—Tit Bits.

A Pugilistic Opera Singer.

Mr. John McCormick, the well-known English opera singer, is passionately fond of boxing. "It's the greatest sport in the world," he says. When Sam Hague and Langford met at the National Sporting Club a short time ago, Mr. McCormick was singing in "Rigoletto" at Covent Garden. He was so interested in the fight that he made arrangements with the fireman to let him know how the fight was going. Mr. McCormick was singing when the fireman appeared after the first round and beckoned him to the wings. Mr. McCormick kept on singing, and backed across the stage where he could hear him without the audience knowing. "Hague was knocked down in the first round," whispered the fireman, hoarsely. Then he sped back to the ringside again.

"It so happened," says Mr. McCormick, "that every time he reached the wings I was singing; and we went through the same performance. Hague was knocked down five times in the second, half a dozen times in the third, and so often in the fourth and last round that everybody lost track of the number. All this was whispered to me between the acts, the knock-out coming appropriately enough during the last act, when Rigolette drags the sack containing the body across the stage." Mr. McCormick's sympathies were with Hague.

Ready to Wreck the Tunnel.

Both Italy and Switzerland are fortifying the entrances of the Simplon tunnel, while in the tunnel itself engineers are engaged in constructing mines and strengthening those already in place in order to blow up the tunnel at a moment's notice in the event of war. Near the middle of the tunnel, a few yards from the Swiss frontier, Italian engineers have put in place a double iron door, which can resist the rush of an express train traveling at sixty miles an hour. This iron door is worked by electricity from Iselle, the station at the Italian end of the tunnel, and under ordinary conditions it is hidden in the rocky side of the tunnel. The door is carefully tested once a week. The mines are connected with Briggue and Iselle by electricity also, and by simply pressing a button the Simplon tunnel would be destroyed in a second.

A Will on a Postcard.

The German courts have just had a curious case before them. A trader died at a health resort, and three days before his death he sent a postcard to a lady friend on her birthday deploring that he was ill and so far away from her. He also said, "For a good birthday present I am leaving you my fortune." The lady to whom this postcard was sent claimed that this missive constituted a will in her favor. She claimed the estate, which was valued at about 200,000 marks. In the first court the decision went against her, and on appeal the findings of the court below were upheld. The grounds of the decision were that by German law when a person draws up his own will it is necessary for the document to state where it was written. The trader, although he had duly signed the card, omitted to place his address upon it.

Mr. Jas. In making the return trip Mr. Edgecumbe touched at Chicago, Grand Rapids, Detroit and other American cities. Nanton is not on the main line of the C.P.R. and consequently Mr. Edgecumbe did not meet very many former Peterborough men. In speaking of the crop outlook Mr. Edgecumbe stated that the farmers were at first somewhat handicapped for want of moisture, but the recent rainfall has helped things along wonderfully. YOUNG OFFICER'S TRIP

LT. ETHERTON TELLS OF JOURNEY IN FORBIDDEN LANDS.

He Spent Three Months In Making a Four Thousand Mile Expedition on Behalf of the Government Into the Country Behind the Himalayas—Tells of Kalmuck Women Who Make Love on Horseback.

Lieutenant Etherton, the young officer in the Garhwal Rifles, who has just arrived in England after completing a secret service mission on behalf of the British Government, spent three months in his overland journey from the Himalayas, through Chinese Turkistan, Mongolia, and Siberia, to the Trans-Siberian Railway, a total distance of nearly 4,000 miles.

After suffering almost incredible hardships and privations, Lieutenant Etherton finally carried his mission to a triumphal conclusion. At the end of his journey he received a cable from England announcing the death of his mother.

Some idea of the remarkable nature of Lieutenant Etherton's explorations may be gleaned from the fact that he encountered:

Strange nomad women in Chinese Turkistan who ride bucking horses in thigh-boots with high French heels, and are wooed and won by being captured on horseback. As many as a dozen suitors frequently take part in an exciting "chase of love";

District officials who were completely won over by the gift of a bottle of preserved gooseberries or a box of assorted crystallized fruit;

Mongolian natives who were utterly cowed by the daily "telescoping" of the explorer's collapsible bed;

A mysterious deserted lake, near the Russian frontier, eight hundred miles in extent, but of unknown depth, in which no fish swim and no boats float.

A press representative who visited Lieutenant Etherton at his home in Hampshire, whither the young officer had gone to recuperate for a few days after his trying ordeal of anxiety, hunger and intense cold, found a slim, dark-haired young man of middle height, dressed in service khaki.

Lieutenant Etherton, though only thirty years of age, has already traveled extensively in the United States, in Australia, and in South Africa, where he served with Kitchener's Fighting Scouts, and was awarded the medal with several clasps.

"This is good after Siberia," he observed as he entered his study from the garden, drinking in the warm sunlight and balmy air of a perfect English spring day.

"No one who has not experienced it can realize what it means to travel for months in a desolate country, all rocks and snow, with the thermometer sometimes 46 degrees below zero, in a fierce blizzard.

"I wore on my journey a heavy overcoat of black leather, lined with thick fur, a fur jacket and trousers, a fur waistcoat, and thick felt boots, but the knife-edged wind sometimes cut right through these as if they had been so much paper.

"One such blizzard caught us in the Altai Mountains, and as a result of this experience I was badly frostbitten. My legs suffered the most, but by cutting away dead flesh, by snow-massage, frequent bandaging, and the attention I received at a small Russian military post on the Russo-Chinese frontier, I saved both legs, although I still feel the effects of frostbite.

"We started from Lansdowne, in the Himalayas, on March 15, 1909," said Lieutenant Etherton in describing his journey. "The expedition, in addition to myself, consisted of ten men, all of whom, however, with the exception of my sturdy little Garhwali orderly, who is here with me now, were changed from time to time.

"My presents for officials and others in the territory through which I had planned to travel had been carefully chosen. They included the following:

Twelve one and two-pound boxes of crystallized fruits.
Twelve one and two-pound bottles of preserved fruits.
Six large hunting knives.
Four large bottles of liqueurs.
Four small bottles of liqueurs.
One silver watch.
A plentiful supply of paper money.

"The liqueurs were for the 'Ambans' or high Chinese officials encountered along the line of route, the crystallized and the bottled fruits for the 'Begs,' or smaller officials. I found my gifts most effective.

"A bottle of milk punch which I presented to one official and a bottle of cherry brandy which another received from me, had especially good results.

"Our itinerary, which can be readily followed in outline on any map, was as follows:

"From Lansdowne to Rawalpindi, Kashmir, Gilgit, Honza, over the Pamirs—'the Roof of the World'—and by the little-known Yarkand River into the Kulan Urgu Valley; thence into the Asgar Sai Valley, and on to Yarkand, continuing through Chinese Turkistan, over the Tian Chan Mountains to Mongolia, across the Altai Mountains to Siberia, and so to the Trans-Siberian Railway—which was struck at Novo Nicholaevsk Station, thence by rail to Moscow, Warsaw, and Berlin, and so through Hanover to England.

"The journey, by the route I followed, had never been made before.

"From the time we left Kashmir until we touched the Trans-Siberian Railway it was all marching or riding—except the last 750 miles through Siberia, which were accomplished by sledge.

"During most of the journey our diet was confined to the following articles for every meal of the day: Mutton, rice potatoes.

"I never want to look at mutton again. How I longed for a decent civilized meal and a mug of good Pilsener! What I regretted most of all, however, was the absence of any fellow-being of my own race with whom to talk."

The Wealth of CALIFORNIA OIL FIELDS Greater Than the Yukon

Coalinga, California, the Centre of Operations

ENORMOUS YIELDS---FABULOUS PROFITS. MEN WITH SMALL HOLDINGS BECOME INDEPENDENT

So great is the wealth of the oil fields of Coalinga that in the year 1909 this limited area of country produced 15,324,374 barrels of oil from 551 wells. This at the present price of oil, 65 cents per barrel, at the well, aggregates the grand total of $9,857,343. 1910 promises to be double as much.

When such eminent experts as Messrs. Ralph Arnold and Robert Anderson, for many years in the employ of the Geological Survey Department of the United States Government, in Bulletin No. 398, describe the Coalinga District as an exceptionally rich oil field, and limited in area to 50 miles in length by 15 miles in width. Of this stretch of country but 20 miles in length and 4 miles in width comprises the proven oil zone. These authorities estimate in the underground reservoirs of these proven fields that there are 2,737,000,000 barrels of oil yet to be extracted.

This means that all the present working wells, together with a similar amount of new wells to be brought in, could not pump out this great reservoir of oil inside of a couple of hundred years.

The property controlled by this Company, the Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, is situated in Section 24, Township 21, Range 14 E., and consists of 80 acres, in the very heart of the proven oil zone, and is adjacent to such great oil producing properties as the Lucile, Silver Tip, Amy, Aladdin, The Consolidated, The Boychester, Marian, etc. In fact our property is owned by shareholders, and whose stock is quoted upon the open market at many times par value. Just think of the daily production of the properties that completely surround that controlled by this Company, averages from 400 to 1,000 barrels.

It is safe, therefore, to predict that our property will do at least as much per day as the former figure.

The ground controlled by this corporation is sufficient in extent to accommodate 56 wells. This would be seven wells to each 10 acres.

Figuring, therefore, that we get 400 barrels per day as a maximum, and 200 barrels per day as a minimum, from 56 wells, we would be able to pump 11,200 barrels per day, or 332,000 barrels per month, which at the present price would give the shareholders a gross income of $2,469,600 per year, deducting from this the operating expenses of, say, 10 per cent, $246,960, and the Company, will still have a net income of $2,222,640 to be distributed in dividends. This represents a yearly dividend of $4.44 for each and every share of stock on the whole capitalization (500,000 shares), or a monthly dividend of 37 cents per share.

Such a financial condition would mean that every shareholder, even though he were possessed of but 500 shares, would in the course of a year or so be provided with a competency for life.

Development work on the Company's property is being rushed forward on Well No. 1. It is expected that a rich flow of oil will be struck at from 1,000 to 1,500 feet. This means quick returns on the immediate investment.

The first well should be brought in inside of 90 days. This will raise stock to par, or above par, consequently the Company will not place on sale, after the 28th of May, but a small block of stock, which will be 35 cents per share. The present lot of stock at 25 cents per share is almost all taken up.

We, therefore, urge upon the readers of this publication not to delay in writing and mailing their order for stock until after they have wired their reservation; even then we cannot guarantee a delivery, since the 50,000 shares to be sold at 25 cents will, in all probability, be oversubscribed by Saturday, May 28th.

However, since you are at liberty to send your wire charges collect at this end, don't hesitate to wire your reservation (not less, however, than 100 shares) immediately, after reading this announcement, then send your remittance by the first mail. Have your wire read as follows:

"The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, Selkirk Block, 135 Hastings Street, West, Vancouver, B. C.—"Reserve for me .... shares "in your Company, mailing payment to-day."

We will allot shares in rotation of receipt of applications.

Every Director in our Company has acquired large holdings.

Those who have visited the property have not hesitated to stake their last dollar. All who are acquainted with such men as S. E. Tucker, E. W. Preston and A. C. Elliott, oil experts, have bought heavily of shares of this Company after reading the reports of these gentlemen on our property. In each instance these oil experts have irretrievably and unconditionally endorsed The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company's property as being one of the greatest, one of the most promising oil properties in the Coalinga fields. S. E. Tucker himself says:

"You may strike a gusher in your "first well of several thousand barrels per day. Regarding this I will 'not speak definitely, but I will "stake my reputation as an oil expert, and after many years of acquaintance and knowledge of the "Coalinga Oil fields, that your property will produce wells which will "give up enormous quantities of "high grade oil. Your stock should "be worth, and sell for par when "you bring in your first well, which "should be in about 90 days' time."

Sit down at once and write your telegram and remit by first mail, making your cheque, draft, express order or money order payable to the Trustee of the Company, George L. Taschereau. Where all cash is remitted, a certificate will be issued at once. Remember, the shares of this Company are non-assessable, so that when you pay your 25 cents, you receive a certificate for fully paid-up stock.

We advise our most intimate friends not to buy less than 200 shares when the price is 50 cents, retaining the other 100 shares absolutely free of cost to themselves, since they purchased the whole at 25 cents per share.

Never again will this opportunity present itself to you. You have the assurance of men who know, men who are on the ground, that the stock will be worth par in 90 days, and the par value of each share is $1.00. We have every reason to believe that before this year 1910 comes to a close, Coalinga-Eureka stock will be worth $3 to $4 from the fact we should have three to four wells in operation.

Bear in mind that the price of the shares in this Company will be advanced at six o'clock p. m. May 28th to 35 cents per share.

Prospectus and fuller particulars will be furnished at the office of The Coalinga-Eureka Oil Company, Selkirk Block, 135 Hastings Street West, Vancouver, B. C.

TWO LIVE LEAGUE GAMES TO-MORROW

Strathconas Meet West Ends, in First Contest at Riverside and T.A.S. and P.A.C. Come Together in the Second

Two more games to-morrow afternoon at Riverside Park for fifteen cents, and for excitement. The Strathconas meet the West Ends in the first contest and don't think for a minute that there will be anything tame about this struggle. The Hunter street club nine have a dim recollection of a certain affair pulled off at the ice works last winter and will go on the field determined to square things up. At the same time the Metheral outfit will remember an occasion last season when they were handed out a bad trouncing. Both nines will be strong and the game will be called sharp at two o'clock.

The P.A.C. and T.A.S. will go for the second fixture and Manager Pilling's braves are working for a win, despite the fact that they will have to face Quinlan. Strange things happen in the baseball game, but all the same it wouldn't be anything out of the ordinary to see the P.A.C. win. Last week's games and the practices this week have put the teams in good shape and the fans may look forward to a live programme.

RUNNING

Tom Longboat still refuses to remain sober, and no sooner had he paid his fine for his last burst of gayety induced by firewater, than he proceeded to get drunk again on the 24th of May. This time, however, while walking beside the Humber river, he accidentally slipped and fell in, and had to be assisted out by some companions who were with him at the time. Probably the world might have been minus its one-time greatest runner, as Tom was pretty badly jagged at the time.

KING EDWARDS DID NOT SCORE

St. Peter's Played Good Ball and Won Junior School League Contest

The King Edward school juniors were put away by a 7—0 score at Boswell's field yesterday afternoon by St. Peter's nine and the contest was at times very interesting, despite the goose egg handed out to the southerners. The losers were weak in fielding, the winners supported Johnston, their twirler, in a very creditable manner. Johnston had good control throughout, but Wise was unsteady at times. O'Brien's work at short for St. Peter's was c'assy.

The teams were:

King Edwards.	St. Peter's.
Frost	Murty
Eakins	Johnston
Doughty	Kylie
W. Jackson	Wolfe
E. Wise	Clancy
Billington	O'Brien
Liddell	Eano
Campbell	Lynch
P. Taylor	Conroy

Score by innings—

St. Peter's	301030x	—7
King Edwards	0000000	—0

BASEBALL

The following T.A.S. players are requested to be at Riverside Park at 3.30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon for a game with the P.A.C;—Quinlan, Flaherty, McFadden, Cahill, Callaghan, J. Sharkey, Giroux, O'Brien, Doherty, V. Corkery, Derocher, Clancy, Kenneally.

Woodbine Results.

Toronto, May 27.—Theo Cook, Banives, and Collis Ormsby were the favorites to win Thursday at Woodbine Park, though Bouquet was little worse than split choice with Polls. The Seagram mare furnished the running feature of the day, winning the Hotel Cup in 1.45, a fraction faster than the previous record.

The day was cold and threatening, showers falling during the last three races. The crowd was up to the usual week-day proportions. The same thirty-six books were in the ring.

First race, Rous Purse, six furlongs, three-year-olds and up—1st, Theo Cook; 2nd, Spellbound; 3rd, Vreeland. Time, 1.13.

Second Race, Victoria Stakes, five furlongs, for two-year-olds—1st, Moncrief; 2nd, Scrimmage; 3rd, Picolata. Time, 1.02 1-2.

CHARMING PRESENTATION OF "THE ISLE OF JEWELS"

At the Conservatory Music Hall by 150 Children—Audience Highly Appreciative of the Performers' Commendable Efforts—An Interesting Programme.

A highly pleasing and successful operette, in which the performers were juveniles, was given last night at the Conservatory Music Hall by 150 children. Like all similar offerings at the Conservatory, the operette was charmingly given.

The ensemble grouping for the piece made a most attractive picture, those taking part being seated in ampitheatre arrangement. The different dances and evolutions were given with grace and accuracy, and Miss Ivy Coventry, the directress of these features of the performance, deserves much credit for her skilful training of the young performers.

The first scene of "The Isle of Jewels" is "Pearl Beach," and the inhabitants are rejoicing because it is the Princess Sapphire's birthday. The second scene is the King's Royal Cave, and the reception is in full swing. The characters were dressed to represent different jewels, and the costumes were picturesque and descriptive.

Master Asie Huycke, as King Diamond, sang splendidly, and Miss Florence Scott's sweet soprano voice delighted the audience. Miss Carrie White sang and recited in a captivating manner, and Mr. Stanley Lewis proved himself a remarkably clever dancer. Egbert Kelly, as Lord Topaz, and Herbert Callighan, as Lord Agate, are to be commended for their finished acting.

Norman Seymour, a five-year-old tot, with an excellent treble, completely won the audience by his taking singing of "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly ?" Roy Rankin, of Havelock, a pupil of Miss Choate, of the Conservatory staff, played with fine expression and clear cut technique, Miss Choate taking his accompaniment. Mowet Garrett won great applause by his cornet solo "The Maple Leaf."

The dances of the "Court Beauties and "Maids of the Mist" were also very entertaining features.

Miss Florence Gladman was at the piano and played very effectively the accompaniments and incidental music of the score.

The costumes for the principals were supplied by Messrs. Waring and Gardiner, and their painstaking efforts in the making up of the members of the company and the stage direction contributed largely to the general success of the operette.

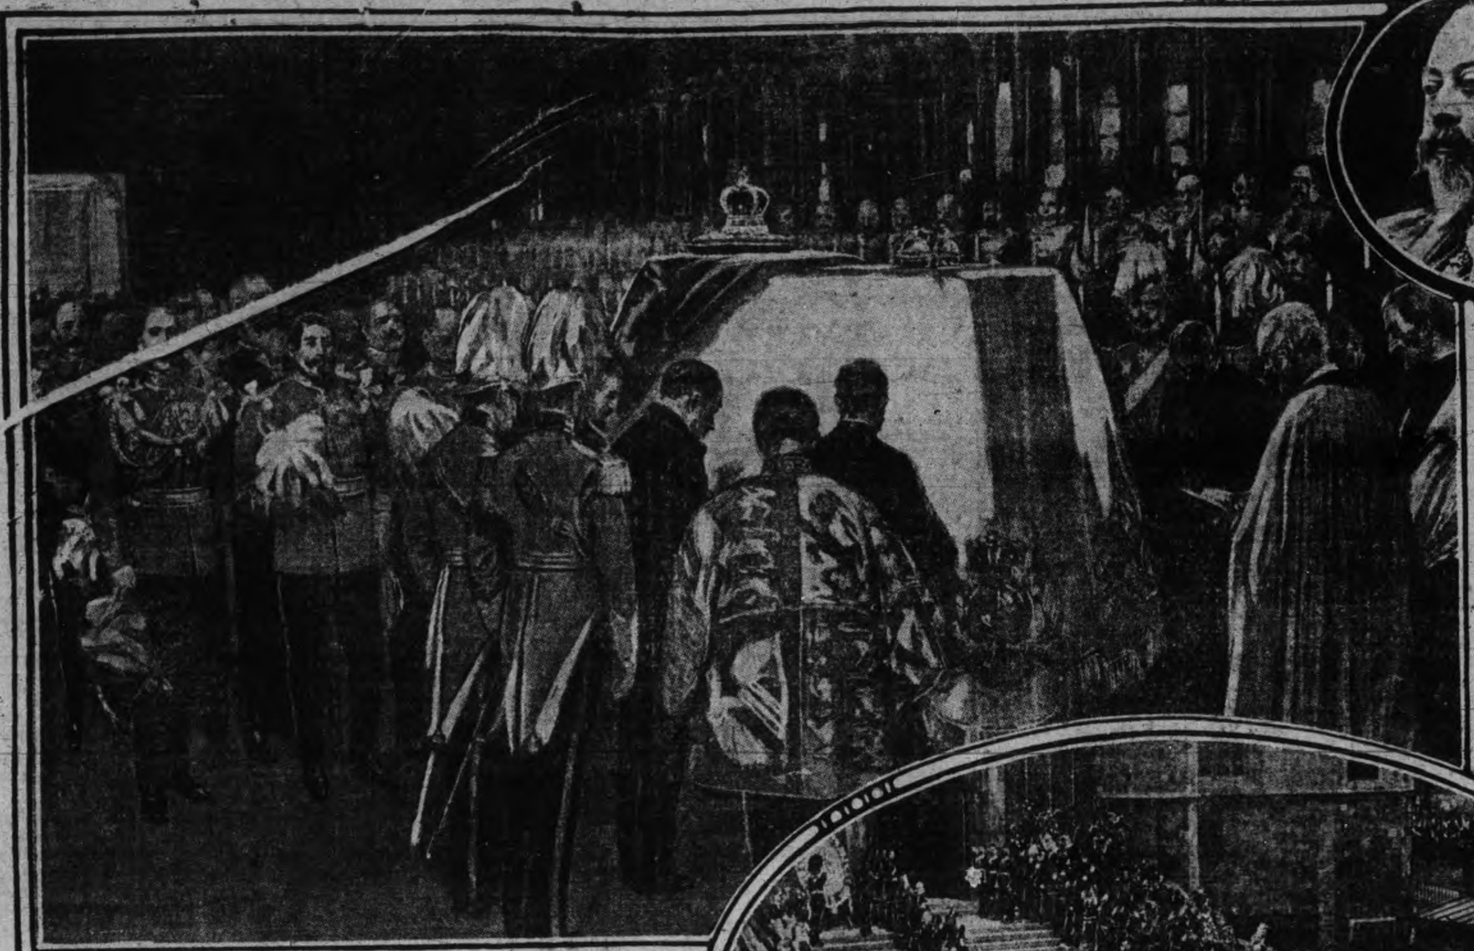
KING EDWARD VII



QUEEN VICTORIA'S FUNERAL: ROYAL MOURNERS AT THE SERVICE IN ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR. FROM THE GRAPHIC.

KING EDWARD, EMPEROR WILLIAM, DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, KING LEOPOLD, AND KING CARLOS OF PORTUGAL, FOLLOWING THE BODY OF QUEEN VICTORIA TO ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL IN 1901. FROM THE KING.

FROM THE KING

QUEEN MOTHER ALEXANDRA

COFFIN CONTAINING THE BODY OF QUEEN VICTORIA BORNE BY THE GRENADIER GUARDS, FOLLOWED BY THE CROWN AND ROYAL INSIGNIA, ENTERING ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

Precedents were closely followed in the arrangements for the funeral of King Edward, and the spectacle of the passing was in all respects similar to that on the occasion of Queen Victoria's funeral, pictures of which are given above. The personnel, of course, was vastly different, but the route followed by the procession through London's streets was the same as on the former occasion and the same order of precedence, as far as it could be carried out, was strictly followed. The present Archbishop of Canterbury, who officiated, is the successor of Archbishop Tait, who conducted the services for Queen Victoria. Approximately two million persons witnessed the passing of the funeral cortege of King Edward VII. through London's streets.

Nine ruling monarchs took part in the procession.

Hundreds of persons were more or less seriously hurt in the crush.

The Queen Mother, Alexandra, is said to be bitterly angry with Messrs. Asquith and Lloyd-George on account of the political worry, which she blames for the King's death.

WERE BURNED BY EXPLOSION; TWO BOYS AND WOMAN VICTIMS

While Carrying Chemicals for Fireworks to be Manufactured by Frank Barsotti, Aged Fourteen, Who Wanted to be Famous.

Toronto, May 28.—The ambition of Frank Barsottie, 14 years of age, who lives with his parents at 85 D'Arcy street, to emulate the example of "Willie Westinghouse Smith," of comic supplement fame, in the manufacture of fireworks, cost that lad his right arm, while two others were badly injured when a quantity of potassium chlorate, sulphur and other ingredients which he had purchased to make the fireworks, accidentally exploded in his pocket on McCaul street, opposite Grange road, at 8.10 last night.

The others injured were Stuart Plank, 11 years of age, 157 Beverley street, who was talking with Barsottie at the time, and was injured about the face and arms and abdomen by particles of glass, and Miss Maud Barnett, 21 years, 249 West Queen street, who had just passed the lads when the explosion occurred. She is severely injured in the back, while the little sister of the Plank boy narrowly escaped injury.

Young Barsottie, who has recently gone to work for P. W. Ellis, wholesale jeweller, with some other boys evolved the idea of the amateur manufacture of fireworks. Thursday night he came home with some part of the ingredients and yesterday noon two boys purchased two ounces of potassium chlorate at Taylor's pharmacy, 295 Spadina avenue. This powder is frequently used for sore throat, so that the purchase was easily made.

Shortly after eight o'clock, Stuart Plank and his sister were bound south on McCaul street to visit a nickel theatre. They met young Barsottie, and the little girl walked ahead while the boys conversed. Just then Miss Barnett was walking north and just as she had passed the boy, she heard a loud report and felt a stabbing pain in her back.

The materials for the manufacture of fireworks had exploded in Barsottie's right hand trousers' pocket, where he had been carrying them, and it was the flying particles of a bottle in which the as yet unascertained ingredients were being carried which wounded the victims.

A great hole was torn in the right thigh of the Barsottie boy. His right arm was mangled up to the elbow, and pieces of glass penetrated his abdomen, legs and chest. Pieces of glass were blown into young Plank's legs, abdomen, chest, right arm and face, while a wound three inches long and of a like depth was torn in Miss Barnett's back just over the kidneys.

At the hospital it was found necessary to amputate Barsottie's arm immediately below the elbow. A number of stitches were taken in various parts of his body to close the gaping wounds. Young Plank was then placed on the operating table and his wounds dressed, requiring a number of stitches.

FRENCH SUBMARINE HAS HAS NOT YET BEEN RAISED

Calais, France, May 28—The French submarine Pluviose, which was sunk by the cross-channel steamer Pas de Calais Thursday, was again located last night after having been driven from her moorings at the bottom of the English Channel yesterday by the swift lower currents.

Last night various craft are moored above a spot where lies the plunger with her dead company of 27 men, sending down divers, in an endeavor to fasten chains about the wreck so that it may be raised to the surface.

That the men in the Pluviose all perished is the belief of the naval officers who are assisting in the wrecking operations. Naphtha on the surface of the water leads them to the belief that the inner shell of the submarine was shattered by the blow of the Pas de Calais, and that all the crew were drowned.

Eye-Witness Gives Graphic Account.

London, May 28.—"I was on deck on the Pas de Calais when she rammed and sank the French submarine and was an eye-witness of the whole awful affair," said A. C. Bowles, foreign representative of the Jos. Dixon Crucible Co. of Jersey City, yesterday.

"The sea was a little choppy," Mr. Bowles continued, "but not rough. We were about three miles out from Calais when I noticed what I took to be a sunken fishing smack about 400 yards straight ahead. Nothing of the boat was visible but the mast and we were steering right for it.

"When we were 100 yards off someone rushed from the pilot house, looked at the mast and rushed back again, but we seemed neither to slacken our speed nor to change our course; we went head on for the mast.

"When we drew close I saw it was not a mast, for its two stays were fastened peculiarly. Apparently it was a steel pole or tube.

"The next moment we struck the pole with such a frightful jolt that I nearly fell. We passed over the pole and over something else," said Mr. Bowles, shuddering. "I could feel it grating on the keel. It was a horrible sensation.

"I knew then that we had hit something heavier than a fishing smack. I looked aft, and as the Pas de Calais slowed down I saw the pole bobbing up in the water.

"It got about 300 yards aft on the starboard side before we stopped. Then we backed toward it and an order was given to lower a lifeboat. All this took more than fifteen minutes.

"Meantime the bow of the craft we had struck gradually rose out of the water and I realized it was a submarine, for I saw the tricolor, painted on blue, fixed to her prow.

"There was a great commotion on the Pas de Calais. Several fashionable women grew very white and seemed about to faint. No one knew how badly our own boat was damaged.

"Finally, when we were about fifty yards off, the submarine's bow gradually sank out of sight. The vessel's oil, oozing up, settled the waves. It was like a wounded water creature shedding its life blood.

"This was twenty-five minutes after we struck the submarine. Nothing had been done to save it, and I heard no order given toward meeting the emergency on our boat, which carried 200 passengers."

WHAT THEY SOLEMNLY PROMISE AND SWEAR THAT THEY WILL FAITHFULLY PERFORM

The Full Texts of the Oaths That Are Now Very Much in the Mind or on the Tongue of the Public—The King's Declaration, the Bishop's Oath and Princess Ena's Renunciation.

The following is the oath that is taken by the Kings who ascend the throne of the British Empire. The oath of Princess Ena, who wedded King Alfonso is also given, and the oath of the Roman Catholic Bishops of the Province of Quebec.

It is only on the accession of a new monarch to the throne that the attention of the public is directed to these things, and on this account the subject matter following is printed:

THE KING'S DECLARATION.

"I, George V., do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous, and I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I do make this declaration, and every part thereof, in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope, or any other authority or person whatsoever, and without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or power whatsoever should dispense or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning."

THE BISHOP'S OATH.

Following is the oath taken by the Roman Catholic Bishops in the Province of Quebec, a part of the British Empire:—

"That the Pope is the true and only head of the Catholic or universal Church throughout the earth, and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosening given to his Holiness by the Saviour Jesus Christ he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths and governments, all being illegal without his sacred affirmation, and that they may be safely destroyed. Therefore, to the utmost of my power I shall and will defend this doctrine and his Holiness' rights and customs against all usurpers, especially against the new pretended authority of the Church of England, and all adherents in regard that they and she be usurpal and heretical opposing the sacred mother Church of Rome. I do further declare that the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and of others of the name Protestants, to be damnable, and they themselves are damned, and to be damned that will not forsake the same. I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of his Holiness' agents in any place in which I shall be in England, Scotland and Ireland, or in any other territory or kingdom, and shall come to and do my utmost to extirpate the heretical Protestant doctrine and to destroy all their pretended power, legal or otherwise."

PRINCESS ENA'S RENUNCIATION.

The Princess Ena was compelled to take the following obligation:—

"I likewise undoubtedly receive and confess all other things delivered, defined and declared by the Sacred Canons and General Councils, and particularly by the Holy Council of Trent; and I condemn, reject and anathematize all things contrary thereto, and all the heresies which the Church condemned, rejected and anathematized."

The Creed—after reciting the leading dogmas of the Papal system, including Transubstantiation, the Propitiatory sacrifice of the Mass, Purgatory, the veneration of Relics, Images of the Virgin, and other Saints, Indulgences, Ecclesiastical Traditions, the Invocation of the Saints, prayers for the dead, and absolute obedience to the Pope—concludes with the following form of oath:—

"I do at this present freely profess and sincerely hold this true Catholic faith, OUT OF WHICH NO ONE CAN BE SAVED; and I promise most constantly to retain and confess the same entire and inviolate, with God's assistance, to the end of my life. And I will take care, as far as in me lies, that it shall be held, taught, and preached by my subjects, or by those the care of whom shall appertain to me in my office; this I vow, promise, and swear, so help me God, and these Holy Gospels of God."

PLUCKY WOMAN CAPTURED THIEF

Hamilton, May 28.—While several hundred passengers on the Macassa cheered her, Mrs. Chas. Carver, holding a thief by the collar, marched him off the boat and up James street to police headquarters yesterday. The prisoner was Wm. Bell, who stole a valuable coat from a boarder at Mrs. Carver's house. When she discovered the theft she made a flying visit to the railway station, and then reached the boat just as it was about to leave for Toronto. The captain held it a few minutes while she made her search. Bell got a four months' sentence.

An Important Work.

Brantford, May 28.—At the annual meeting of the Brantford Evangelical Society, President Frank Cockshutt desired the work of the society should be taken up in every centre of population. The local society has the task of educating 1,200 foreigners of eight different nationalities, the most of whom are adults.

Vessel Lost, Fifteen Drown.

Puntas Aronas, Chile, May 28.—The British bark Swanhilda has been wrecked on Staten Island, the southeast extremity of Tierra del Fuego, and Capt. Pyne, his wife and 13 others have been drowned.

The Swanhilda sailed from Cardiff March 15 for the west coast of South America.

MILLION DOLLAR BLAZE IN WESTERN LUMBER CAMP

Almost Everything Gone—Big Section of Country Devastated—A Fire in Saskatchewan—A Big Blaze in New York With a Loss of $500,000—Ottawa Visited Also.

Mistatim, Sask., May 28.—Without a moment's warning and while a train and the greater part of the men were making superhuman efforts to save Mackenzie and Mann's lumber and their camps west of here. fire swept down on the Cowan Construction Co.'s camps, and in less than thirty minutes from the time the approach of the fire was first noticed, it had destroyed the saw mill, box cars, camp, stables, store and other buildings, and a great quantity of lumber. With the amount of timber destroyed in the bush, and the ties piled along the track ready for shipment, the total loss will probably touch the million-dollar mark. The mill and lumber were insured. The mill will probably be rebuilt, as there is a summer's cut of logs in the pond unburned.

The fire covers a big section of the timber country. For the last eighteen hours Canadian Northern trains have been unable to go through the fire. The telegraph line is burned down in many places. The fire is spreading in front of a northwest wind, with no sign of rain. There seems nothing to prevent it reaching the Shaw-Brown limits east of here. The whole country from near Crooked River to Bannock, nearly thirty miles in length, seems completely fire-swept.

The condition along the railway line last night was considerably improved.

Milling Company Burned Out.

Kinistino, Sask., May 28.—The mill property of the Kinistino Milling Co. was totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is $56,000, with insurance to the extent of $33,400, distributed: Guardian, $18,400; Norwich Union, $2,000; Atlas, $5,000, and General Perth, $8,000.

A carload of flour, worth $1,000, loaded Thursday, was destroyed. There are rumors of incendiary origin. The company is composed of W. T. Johnson, formerly of Austin, Texas, who owns about two-fifths of the stock, and several local merchants and farmers. It has been in operation only six months.

Fire at Ottawa.

Ottawa, May 28.—Another rather bad fire struck the lower town at an early hour yesterday, doing damage to the extent of $40,000, with about $15,000 insurance. A block bounded by Cumberland, Church, St. Patrick and King Edward avenue was badly affected.

Big Fires In United States.

New York, May 28.—New York City had only one fire in 1909 in which the loss exceeded $500,000, according to a report made to the National Board of Fire Underwriters at its annual meeting in this city on Thursday. There were only twenty-three fires in the United States in which the loss exceeded a half million dollars, and only four with a loss of $1,000,000.

HIT BY TRAIN AND KILLED

Hamilton, May 28.—There was a fatal accident on the Grand Trunk Railway between Copetown and Lynden yesterday afternoon. The victim was Joseph Maree, an Italian, employed as a laborer in one of the railway construction gangs. He was working beside the tracks and not noticing the approach of a freight train, was struck. He got a fracture of the skull and a broken arm; was taken to Dundas on the train, and from there to the General Hospital here in an ambulance. He died just as he reached the hospital. Coroner Rykert will open an inquest at Dundas. He is supposed to have a wife and family in Italy, and a brother in this city.

HON. L. P. BRODEUR BACK TO WORK

Ottawa, May 28.—Hon. L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine, was at his office in the western block yesterday for the first time in five months. His desk was decorated with flowers presented by the different branches. The Minister, who looks well, received several callers.

He announced that the ships of the Canadian navy will be built in Canada at whatever points are best suited to the contractors.

The first definite proposition for a subsidy under the drydocks act passed at the recent session has been filed by the Imperial Car, Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. of Vancouver. It seeks a subsidy of the second class.

QUICK RISE IN VALUES

Vancouver, B.C., May 28.—The largest realty deal ever made in Northern British Columbia has just been closed. W. A. Campbell of Winnipeg disposed of 413 acres in the townsite of Fort George, to the Natural Resources Co. of this city for $300,000.

Less than a year ago this property was offered for sale at a very low figure, and a young Englishman, hearing of it, tried to influence local capitalists to put up the $400 he required to make up the purchase price of the land. In this he failed, and W. A. Campbell got in, beating out the Grand Trunk Pacific, who wanted to make the deal, by a few hours.

Less than six months ago there was no one living on the townsite, but today it has a population of over two thousand, with two newspapers, telephone and graded streets.

Police Fired on Rioters.

Newmarket, Ireland, May 28.—One man is dead, a dozen are seriously wounded, while several hundred persons are nursing bruises to-day as the result of the most violent clash that has yet occurred between the Irish followers of Wm. O'Brien, leader of the United Irish League, and John Redmond, head of the Irish Nationalists.

The fight took place Thursday night and resulted from an attempt of a Redmondite to address a meeting here, this town being an O'Brien stronghold. The fight was waged so bitterly that the police finally fired on the mob.

OUR COLLEGIATE ORATORS

He was asked to speak at the banquet, and on rising his knees shook, his face reddened, his heart palpitated, his voice trembled, and his thoughts flew faster than Halley's comet.

They called on him at the public meeting, but he sat down much agitated, because he could not think on his feet.

This thinking on one's feet is no gift from the gods, nothing left from father to son, from mother to daughter.

Public speaking is like swimming or roller skating, one becomes an expert by practice.

The Philomathean Society of Peterborough which is composed of students at the Collegiate Institute enjoyed an oratorical contest on Thursday evening.

The contestants did well.

This is real education. To know that Homer was an epic poet of Greece is fine, and to solve a problem in algebra is finer, but to be able to stand before men and women, and sway them as the wind sways the trees is sublime.

Who knows but that from Peterborough's Philomathean Society may rise a great lawyer, the premier of the nation, or some woman to lead her sex from the bondage of fashion to think on higher things.

BUT WHAT OF THE WIDOW

Everything in the United States is great.

There is to commence with, the Great American Eagle, the Great Steel Trust, which some unkind people say should be spelt "steal." There is also the great oil trust, the great meat trust, the great ice trust, and the war of the great rebellion. There is the great army of veterans, the great list of divorces, the great multimillionaires, the great system of sweatshops and the great strikes, great number of murders, and the great desert.

There is the great system of railways and its great list of killed and wounded. Last year over six per cent. of all the railway employees in the United States were injured and three thousand four hundred and seventy killed. In 1906, eighty-six thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven railway men were killed and wounded. This is great, a great slaughter.

Then there is the great length of time in which the injured or bereaved have to fight it out in court. A widow in 1897 secured a verdict for $4,000 against the Erie Railway Company and the case hung on till 1907.

The costs in this case would be great, but what of the widow.

POETS VS CEMENT

The name of Joseph Aspdin, a workman of Yorkshire, England, is unknown, but the citizens of Peterborough walk over his monument every day. Aspdin discovered Portland cement. He died a poor man, but with a grim resolution he worked on perfecting his discovery. No one else believed in it. They thought him crazy, and the neighbors looked over the fence and ridiculed him as he labored.

Last year over sixty million barrels of cement were used, overtopping the output of the American Steel industry.

To-day fire-proof buildings, skyscrapers, railway bridges, and even railway ties are made possible by cement.

Aspdin was not a poet, he was an inventor, yet like the great host of men impassioned by an idea, he could not think of anything else.

Columbus didn't.

So to-day in every part of the civilized world wherever there is cement, there is unconsciously reared a monument to Joseph Aspdin.

Burns, Pope, Poe and the host of immortals will live long in the hearts of the reading world.

They wrote with ink.

Aspdin, laborer, wrote with plastic cement and his work will live forever.

He was the prose poet of the working men.

THE WET GOODS PROBLEM

"A dollar and costs or thirty days." Daily these words spell a month's retirement behind prison bars in the municipal jails.

Addressed to the arrested section of Toronto's drunks, that's all. And nobody seems to care.

But the fellows care; they weren't always drunks, and when they sober, in the solitude of the cells, many are the good resolutions made.

Prison bars are strong, but the bonds of booze are stronger, and is it any wonder that the lower drunkards of Toronto and Col. Denison, Toronto's magistrate, are very well acquainted.

What can he do for that shivering wretch in front of him?

The prisoner should have medicine, yet there is no medicine but thirty days.

He should have a handshake and a word of good cheer, but its the rattle of the wheels of the black Maria instead.

The drunkard is the victim of a disease, and the Toronto News is speaking with good sense when it advocates the establishment of a public home for the cure of the inebriate.

Dominion Parole Officer Archibald is in favor of this plan and the success attendant upon courses in high-priced private sanitariums should, upon investigation by the Government, prove an incentive to open a public place of enforced retreat for the poor man who is down and out.

THE POINT OF VIEW

Just Like Peterborough

(London Mail.)

The rinking craze has reached the Quirnal in Rome. The throne room has been converted into a rink, which was used by some skaters invited by Queen Elena. The party numbered 30 and included Princess Helena of Servia. The mosaic floor of the throne room lent itself to the pastime, and the skating party was so successful that Queen Elena has arranged another.

How of Peterborough?

(Belleville Ontario.)

"Next to Cairo I consider that Montreal is the worst city in the world for stray dogs," said Controller Lachapelle, of that city. The Controller would revise his opinion as to Montreal's standing as a home for stray dogs were he to visit Belleville.

The Eminent Physician?

(Globe.)

The "eminent New York physician" who advocates the legal killing of all "deficient and degenerate" infants, has not for his suggestion the merit of neither novelty or originality. One reason why it cannot be carried out is the difficulty of deciding whether a child is deficient and degenerate or simply misshapen. It is a curious fact that Aesop, who rendered humanity a great service by his fables, was a victim of malformation.

Church Chimes

Canadian Churchman.

If there be any sound in this discordant sin-stained world that conveys through the human ear a heartfelt message of charity, peace and abiding hope, surely it must be the stirring, softening chime of sweet church bells. Many a wandering, wayward lad in a foreign land has been moved to better thoughts and purer deeds in some peaceful moment as the music of the old church chime, revived by association and memory, has come to him "like the touch of a vanished hand."

LA TUQUE

The railroad towns of rapid growth are not in the West alone. La Tuque, on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, 127 miles from Quebec, is a wonderful example of this. Two years ago there was not a house there. To-day, there is a handsome well laid out, well built town, with two churches, a school, a bank, a sulphite pulp mill, two sawmills, some very fine stores and a resident population of about 2,000. The Quebec Bank opened a branch there a few weeks ago, and in a very few days had $60,000 on deposit. La Tuque is a divisional point on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and will have the shops for that division. It is also the terminus of the Tuque branch of the Lake St. John division of the Canadian Northern Railway, and the head of navigation of the river St. Maurice, which is navigable for steamers for seventy miles from La Tuque southward to Grand Piles.

But the principal advantage of La Tuque is its water power. The river St. Maurice, at this point a magnificent stream half a mile wide, falls ninety feet, making available for industries no less than ninety thousand horse-power. This is only partially developed, but already the Messrs. Brown, of Berlin, N.H., the owners of the power, have built one of the largest sulphite pulp mills in America, and in a few days will be producing sixty tons of sulphite pulp daily and a paper mill will follow in the near future. A large flour mill is spoken of, to grind up the wheat to be brought from Manitoba and Alberta by the Grand Trunk Pacific, and as the level grades (four tenths) of that road will carry grain at rates with which the canal navigation cannot compete, this should be an ideal sport for such an industry on a large scale, as it is also in close proximity to the ocean steamers at Quebec. La Tuque is evidently destined to be one of the most important manufacturing towns in Northern Quebec.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Farnham, Que., will spend $100,000 in developing its municipal electric plant.

The Archbishop of St. Boniface called on the Pope at the Vatican yesterday.

The Hooker Chemical Company at Niagara Falls, N.Y., was burned yesterday; loss $400,000.

A hose wagon was struck by a train at Elmira, N.Y., and both horses killed, but the firemen escaped injury.

Mrs. Annie Fox of Windsor was fatally burned while using coal oil in washing clothes. It ignited from the stove.

The Royal George has sailed from Bristol to Quebec with 400 passengers and the Lake Champlain with 1,200 emigrants, including fifty laceworkers.

Several thousand dollars of the estate of G. N. Hodge, lumberman of Sherbrooke, Que., are bequeathed to Methodist and Congregational Church enterprises.

The emigration conference, under the auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute, next week will make strong representations to Canada regarding the regulations respecting emigrants.

Colonies and Defence.

London, May 28.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Lord Kitchener, speaking at the Australian banquet, said that under his scheme of defence for Australia there would be a continuity of policy, and the Australasians would be able to solve the military problems which gave so much trouble elsewhere.

Sir George Reid, who presided, said that Australia had already made a beginning, with the creation of a fleet and army. Whenever danger to the Empire came, whatever ships and soldiers Australia, Canada and South Africa possessed, would very soon be on the firing line; our future Waterloo or Trafalgar might be anywhere, but wherever it was, the sons of Britain from across the seas would stand by the flag and keep it flying.

Pugsley at Oakville.

Oakville, May 28.—Hon. Wm. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works, accompanied by M. J. Haney, G. T. Somers and Engineer Sing, motored out to Oakville yesterday afternoon to inspect Oakville harbor, where the Government dredge, Sir Richard, is deepening the channel.

Dr. Pugsley said they would put the harbor in first-class condition so that the deepest draft boats could call. He realized that Oakville was becoming the country home for Toronto and Hamilton business men. The Hamilton boats will make daily calls when the harbor improvements are completed.

Salute on Friday Next.

London, May 28.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—By command of the King, the only salute to be fired this year besides the one fired Thursday on the Queen's birthday, will be that for His Majesty's, on Friday, June 3.

A TERRIBLE SUFFERER for THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

Treasurer of Galedonia Township says

"If it were not for "FRUIT-A-TIVES", I am satisfied I could not live."

Practically everybody in Prescott County, Ontario, knows of Mr. James Proudfoot. He was born over 70 years ago on the farm where he lives to-day. He is one of the most prominent farmers and stock raisers in this section of the country, and has been Treasurer of Caledonia Township for years, succeeding his father.

FENAGHVALE, ONT., JAN. 29TH., 1910

JAMES PROUDFOOT, Esq.

"For thirty five years, and I am now a man over seventy, I have been a terrible sufferer from Constipation.

No matter what remedy or physicians I employed, the result was always the same—impossible to get a cure. About 2 years ago I read the testimonial of Hon. John Costigan regarding "Fruit-a-tives" and I decided to give them a trial. I have used "Fruit-a-tives" ever since. They are the first and only medicine that suited my case. If it were not for "Fruit-a-tives", I am satisfied that I could not live."

JAMES PROUDFOOT.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest remedy ever discovered for all forms of Dyspepsia and Indigestion, because "Fruit-a-tives" keeps the blood pure and rich. You may ask, what is the connection between Stomach Trouble and Impure Blood? Because impure blood means an impure disolving fluid in the stomach which cannot digest the food. Digestion depends on the purity and composition of the disolving fluid. If the liver is congested—bowels constipated—kidneys weak—then the blood will be loaded with impurities. These impurities will taint the disolving fluid, which is supplied to the stomach by the blood.

"Fruit-a-tives" cures Indigestion and Dyspepsia because "Fruit-a-tives" makes the liver active, cures Constipation, strengthens and invigorates the kidneys, purifies the blood and keeps the stomach sweet and clean.

50c a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,

Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"But what," the girl asked gently, "have I to be grateful to you for? It seems to me I have much—very much more—to forgive. With $4,000 left to me, why was it not permitted to me to have even the little education that the district school might have given me? But there," she added, "you didn't realize the wrong you did me. And it is all in the past, and I have already turned my back upon my past."

"You're turnin' your back on us now, are you?" said Ollie darkly. "We ain't good enough fur you now, are we, since you're got so wonderful rich all of a suddent? I guess you wouldn't even send me a new dress from town oncet in so often to pay fur all the old ones I gev you a'ready!"

Again that little ripple of laughter from Eunice. "Would you like me to send you my clothes after I have no more use for them, Ollie?" she inquired, a touch of gayety in her voice and a bright color coming into her pale cheeks. "Why, certainly I will."

"If you can't send me a new one now and again, I don't want your old ones!" Ollie retorted.

"You may draw on me, Ollie, for all the silk dresses you can wear," Eunice said recklessly.

Ollie's eyes sparkled. "Look at here, Eunice, do you mean that fur really?"

Upon Eunice reassuring her Ollie's look of complacency proclaimed her resignation to the turn events had taken, since she herself was not altogether shut out from a share in them.

"Eunice, will you come with me now?" Kinross asked, again rising and feeling buoyant in the liberty which the new circumstances gave him to talk with her unrestrainedly and when and where they both would, independently of the government which had made her so inaccessible. "I have some things to discuss with you."

Eunice rose at once, the pensiveness of her countenance momentarily lifting as even his good news for her had not caused it to do.

"You haven't the dare to go; there's supper to make!" interposed Mrs. Morningstar from force of habit, not realizing yet that her reign was over.

Eunice walked to the door which Kinross was holding open for her. "I am afraid you and Ollie will have to get on without me," she said, turning at the threshold. "I have paid my board, you know, for the rest of the time I shall be here—$3,000 up to the end of next week. As a boarder, of course you can't expect me to do any work."

"If you don't work you don't eat!" snapped Mr. Morningstar viciously, the family habit of browbeating the girl getting the better of his prudence, for he knew, of course, that it was unwise to further offend one who had become so rich. "This here $3,000 ain't payin' fur your board, fur it ain't yourn to give—it was mine in the first place—extorted out of me by force! So you just come on here and help mom git supper or you don't eat!"

He emphasized his words by lifting his hand which held the draft, and instantly the valuable strip of paper was drawn out of his fingers. Kinross passed it on to Eunice.

"If I may offer a word of advice, don't pay your board in advance, Eunice. Wait until you are ready to leave."

Eunice, smiling, tucked the paper into the bosom of her calico gown, and in the face of the blank and utter consternation of the family, the two walked away, Kinross calling back over his shoulder, "Give us a good supper when we come in and we will pay accordingly. Poor grub, small pay! We'll be back in an hour probably."

CHAPTER XXIV.

THEY strolled about together in the nearby woodland in the late summer afternoon. There was so much still that had to be gone over and explained; yet Kinross found himself quite neglecting the prosaic details which ought to have been discussed and, dwelling upon the far more absorbing theme of the girl herself, leading her skillfully to those fascinating self revelations which she made with such childlike openness and which, because of her refreshing and unique genuineness, set her apart in his fancy from all the rest of her "false, artificial sex."

Yet just now as she walked at his side there was a vague sense of disappointment in his heart. His explanation, given to her while they walked, of her aunt's noble courage in at once giving up the fortune to her without hesitation or protest and her readiness to return to comparative poverty did not bring the response he had hoped for—an offer to share with the elder woman her quite superfluous thousands. He tried not to blame her in his heart for this, but to attribute it to her ignorance both of money and of what the tie of blood meant. All would come right, he was sure, when she had had a little experience of life if (and it was a large if) the sudden reaction from a life of self abnegation to one of power and luxury did not make her selfish.

He was puzzled at the indifference she manifested when he tried to draw her into any talk of her prospective new life. Not indifference only; it seemed actually to make her sad. One would suppose she would delight in dwelling upon the glories that awaited her. Had she not extolled in her outburst to Abe her freedom to roam at large "o'er all this scene of man?"

"What is it?" he suddenly questioned her. "Does your heart fail you at the strangeness of it all? But a girl that can brave a ghost ought to have courage to cope with mere mortals."

She did not reply.

"Think of it," he urged, "the world is before you, with youth, wealth, freedom, and" (should he put the idea into her unspoiled mind?)—"and you're not bad looking, either, Eunice, and that means a lot to a woman."

She lifted her drooping head and scanned him from head to foot. He, too, was not bad looking.

"Does it mean more to a woman than to a man?"

"It's everything to a woman. A man—only so he hasn't a hump," he shrugged.

"Do you mean that is your opinion, or only the opinion of the world?"

He smiled. "The mere world—as over against me? I fear you exaggerate the importance of my opinions. Well, I never seriously asked myself the question before; but, now that it's put to me, yes, I do think good looks essential to a woman. Why, naturally!"

"Essential? Essential to what?"

"To her being interesting and attractive."

"There was George Eliot, you know. At least I suppose you know."

"Oh, of course when a woman is a genius."

"The Greeks thought manly beauty—not the feminine—the highest type."

She was such a combination, he inwardly smiled, of ignorance and learning.

"Oh, but the Greeks! That was awhile back a'ready, as Pop Morningstar would say."

"Mere prettiness seems to me of little moment."

"It is. That isn't what I mean. But a woman must be interesting looking, not a guy. She must be pleasing."

"You mean in order to attract the male?"

He couldn't help it. He bent back his head and laughed. "You think that of little moment, too?" he asked, quickly sobering as he met her astonishment. "But," he shrugged again, "it seems to be what they're all occupied in doing."

"Are they?" she asked in the wistful way she had of appealing to him.

"It is pitiable, I suppose. But, then," he lifted his eyebrows, "what would you have them be at?"

"Your Georgiana would prefer, she told me, the career of a student and a teacher rather than a domestic life."

"My Georgiana?" he repeated in consternation. "Now, why, may I inquire, do you call her mine?"

"You said you loved her," she answered faintly, her eyes on the ground.

"Oh!" he nodded, enlightened. That frivolous remark of his had evidently given her much food for speculation. Would he better tell her he'd only been fooling? But she wouldn't understand or see the point (what was the point, anyway?), and somehow he felt an awkwardness in explaining to her that he had lied to her. A more pointless joke he had surely never perpetrated.

"Georgiana deceives herself," he said. "Georgiana would like to be fallen in love with, just like Ollie or any other girl. You'll like it yourself some day, Eunice. See if you don't."

"You think Miss Ellery is all those things you admire—'interesting looking,' 'not a guy,' 'pleasing'?"

"Don't you think she is?"

"I think her beautiful and graceful."

"Of course she is."

Her head went a little lower as she walked at his side for a moment without speaking.

"Are you afraid of your future, Eunice?" he persisted.

A faint color came into her face. "One thing I am afraid of," she softly answered. "Of a loneliness worse than I have ever known."

"That may be for a little while. But it will pass. You will find a companion in your aunt. You will make friends too. And after awhile, inevitably, there will be a lover, or, rather, lovers."

"You think my aunt will like me?" she asked uncertainly.

"How can she help it?"

"You think I am, then, likeable?"

"I like you."

"Oh," she caught her breath, "do you?"

He felt himself stirred by the soft thrill in her voice. But in some respects he was the stupidest of even his stupid sex, and he did not realize the emotion her words and tone expressed.

"And if I liked you," he tried to encourage her, "you'll get on with other people. I'm not considered a lamb. So don't you fancy you're going to be lonely."

"But—shall I—ever see you?"

"Surely." He felt touched by her helpless, childlike turning to him, her first and only friend. "I often go to New York and Washington, where your aunt spends her winters usually. But," he added, a touch of pathos in his tone, "you will soon learn to get on without me, though I seem so necessary to you now."

She made no comment, not even a polite protest.

"You afford me many pleasant surprises, Eunice," he suddenly remarked, knocking some brambles from her pathway with his cane. The gallantry, instinctive and unthinking with him, but understandable to her only through books, thrilled her in a way that would have amazed him if he had dreamed of it.

"Pleasant surprises?" she repeated with timid questioning.

"You know I thought all along that you were in love with Abe!"

She did not answer at once as she walked with her eyes on the path before her.

"I was aware that you paid me that compliment," she presently spoke in a low voice.

"For which I owe you an apology. It was stupid of me. And very unflattering to your taste, I admit."

The fact was he realized that his belief in her infatuation for Abe had been the only thing in his knowledge of her that had seemed to put her on a lower plane than the one on which as "Miss Wolcott" she would henceforth move. The discovery of her aversion to the farmer's son had placed her at a bound at his side as his equal in every sense, no longer an ignorant country damsel to be indulgently patronized by him and her aunt.

"Why didn't you tell me you despised the fellow?"

"It did not seem worth while explaining."

"Now, you are complimentary! You did not care if I did think poorly of your taste?"

She hesitated. "It is not that I did not care," she faltered. "But what you couldn't see for yourself it didn't seem useful to tell you."

It occurred to him to wonder whether her slightly unusual use of words, which was a constant source of pleasure and amusement to him, would annoy her aunt. In his opinion when she lost it she would have lost one of her charms.

"Then you did care?" he asked.

"Yes," she said simply.

"Why?"

She turned to him with a little deprecating smile and gesture. "You dissect me so! As though you were a scientist and I a specimen. Sometimes it seems to me cold blooded!"

"And you don't like it?"

"It is rather interesting to hear what you will be asking next—and what the things are which you wish to find out."

"It flatters the egotism of most women if a man asks them to talk about themselves."

"Are women more egotistic than men? Fonder of talking about themselves?"

She asked it so simply, evidently seeking only to be instructed.

"What is your own idea about it?" he asked.

"There it is again—dissecting me until I feel myself in shreds!"

They both laughed and he could not drag his eyes from the sweetness of her face when she smiled.

"Do you know," she said amusingly, "I have often wondered when Abe has protested to me of his 'love,' and when I have read of it, what it is like. I have never loved any one. There seems to be a distinction between love and affection. Affection is said to be much milder. I don't even know what it is to feel affection."

The confession seemed almost appalling.

Suddenly she stopped short in the path and looked at him. "All my life," she said earnestly, "I have had a heart hunger that I have never understood—I did not know what it was I hungered and thirsted for—and what the great 'waste places' in my soul meant. But now—I believe," she hesitated, a troubled light in her eyes, as though she groped in dark confusion; "I believe I begin to understand. This strange feeling I have had toward you—ever since you first came here—even before we had ever spoken together—I believe it is—affection."

"What was it Georgiana said of 'Dr. Kinross?'" he inquired.

Kinross gazed at her spellbound. Was she not diverting?

"You dear child," he said, taking her hand in his as though she were ten years old instead of twenty, "you like me? And you find it a 'strange feeling?'"

"At times I have thought I must be mad. I am thinking about you every minute. I seem to have no other life save in the thought of you. It is like a possession, a frenzy. The time while you were away was a midnight blackness to me. Nothing seems to me worth while except you. Is this," she asked, her voice trembling, "affection?"

The blood surged to Kinross' face. The girl loved him. He was the first man who had crossed the path of her maidenhood, and he had come to her as a friend and benefactor—almost as the fairy godmother—and the result was inevitable. Her fancy was fired, and she was in love. It would not be fair to take her seriously. It was only a case of propinquity. She would outgrow it as soon as she met other men and could form some standards of measurement and comparison. One's first experiences of the divine fire did not last. It was merely a preparation for the more sane and reasonable love of comparative maturity.

"I am the first friend you ever had," he told her, "and naturally your feeling is intensified because all you are at present capable of, is concentrated on one object."

He felt the absurdity of his cold blooded analysis as his eyes met the fire of hers, but he went on:

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Cured

"I think it should be the duty of the schools to teach children how to keep well," writes Miss Nannie E. Naydon, a well-known and highly esteemed resident of Bristol. "Ignorance of the laws of health and the use of improper remedies destroyed my vigor, and led me to the verge of invalidism. I was as a girl ruddy and strong. Nothing seemed to affect me until I was about thirty. Then gas began to form in the stomach. I suffered with bloating and a general failure in strength set in. If I went upstairs my breath hurt. My system was very irregular, and until I grew pretty bad I didn't pay much heed to my condition. Then I got blue, worried all the time, wakened in the night, and couldn't get to sleep again. None of the medicine I took helped me. One day I was reading of a very interesting case like mine cured by Dr. Hamilton's Pills. I took the same treatment. It was just right—didn't physic me to death, but took hold of the weak, sick parts of my system, and set things right. It seems as if Dr. Hamilton's Pills have made me young again, and all my color, spirits, vigor, and health of former days have returned to stay."

Every girl and woman should use Dr. Hamilton's Pills regularly. They help a woman in many ways. Beware of the dealer who asks you to take an inferior pill on which his profit is larger than on Dr. Hamilton's. Sold in yellow boxes, 25c per box, all dealers, or The Catarrhozone, Co., Kingston, Ont.

LITTLE GIRL WAS INSTANTLY KILLED BY EXPRESS TRAIN

7 Year Old Daughter of Frederick Feeley 271 Romaine Street Struck at Corner of Wescott and Park Streets by G.T.R. Noon Train---Leg Amputated and Body Terribly Crushed--Induest This Evening.

When little Mamie Feeley, aged 7 years, the daughter of Mr. Frederick Feeley, 271 Romaine street, tripped on the G.T.R. roadway crossing at about five minutes to 12 to-day noon she stumbled to her death. The little girl was taking home to her mother a parcel of sugar which she had purchased at Henry's store, a few yards from te scene of the accident.

HIT BY EXPRESS.

At the time the G.T.R. express for Port Hope, engine No. 2608, in charge of Conductor Buller and with John Mimms, the driver, was coming along at a high rate of speed and struck the little girl.

CARRIED UNDER ENGINE.

The child was knocked down and carried under the engine for a distance of about fifty or sixty feet before the train could be brought to a stop. The engineer pulled the lifeless body out from under the engine and laid it alongside the wire fence on the west side of Park street.

LEG CUT OFF—BODY CRUSHED.

The child's body was fightfully mangled as it was dragged along under the engine probably being drawn for the creater portion of the distance under the cowcatcher. The right leg was completely severed and the child's face was battered and bathed in blood.

TAKEN TO NEARBY HOUSE.

The body was removed to the residence of Mr. Cavanagh, at the corner of Park and Wescott streets and right opposite the scene of the fatality. The Review was informed by Coroner Gray, who was communicated with immediately after the accident that an inquest would be held. He decided that an inquest was necessary to throw definite light on the fatal happening.

MOTHER NEARLY FRANTIC.

Three boys, including Louis Feeley, a young brother of the little girl, and who soon learned of the fatal accident, hurried to the Feeley home at 271 Wescott street, and notified Mrs. Feeley of the terrible affair. The mother on hearing of the accident, became frantic and acted like an insane woman.

VIEWED THE BODY.

She rushed up to the house where the body lay and every means was used to persuade her not to view the remains until the first shock of her grief had subsided to some extent. However, she was intent on seeing the remains of her little girl and the sight of them gave her more uncontrollable grief than ever. Her nervous system is seriously affected by the accident.

Mr. Feeley, who is dazed by the fatality, arrived at the Cavanagh home, where the body was, shortly before one o'clock.

Tommy Gordon, a 9-year-old boy, and Miss Mattie Hales, eye-witnesses of the accident, will give evidence at the inquest this evening. It will be held at Lane & Kano's' undertaking rooms, where the body has since been removed.

PUTNAM'S PAINLESS CORN EXTRACTOR

CONCERT TO MISS HALLIHAN WAS BRILLIANT SUCCESS

Programme Was of an Exceptionally Interesting Character — Peterboro's Gifted Soprano Given Ovation by Audience—A Review of the Programme.

Peterborough's sincere approbation of the movement to enable Miss Lavina Hallihan to continue her vocal sutdies on a more pretentious scale was shown by the presence of an encouragingly large audience at the complimentary concert to this talented young vocalist at the Grand Opera House last night. The audience was one of the most representative of the season, and the programme was of a superior character, its uniform excellence winning the audience's heartiest approval

There is every reason to congratulate Miss Hallihan on the success of the concert from every standpoint, and the warm appreciation of her own work was but another testimonial to to the high regard of Peterborough's citizens for her vocal attainments and personal qualities.

The programme was probably as brilliant as any ever given in the city, and, in spite of its great length, all the contributors were cordially welcomed on their every appearance, and Mr. Hollinshead and Miss Hallihan, in the concluding numbers of the programme, were both doubly encored. During her numbers Miss Hallihan was presented with a beautiful basket of flowers and a handsome bouquet. she gracefully bowing her acknowledgement of the pretty tributes.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, the secretary of the committee which has worked so faithfully to make the concert a success, and whose efforts were most generously supported by the public, expressed, on behalf of Miss Hallihan, the latter's gratitude to the committee, the artists of the evening, and the citizens of Peterborough for their loyal patronage

The opening number of the programme was "The Forest King" by the 57th band. The march was played with dash and spirit, and met with immediate approval.

Mr. Walter Hughes gave a cornet solo, "Flockonian Polka" very brilliantly, his accurate and masterful technique in the triple tongue moveshowing his playing to remarkably fine advantage. He was encored, and played a passage of the same number.

Miss Lulu McGill, an unusually able pianist and a pupil of Mr. Glidden's, played on the piano Liszt's Hungarion Rhaphsodie No. 11, with fine sympathetic expression and rare technique. Miss McGill's work was one of the features of the performance In the second part of the programme she played Chopin's Polonaise in A Flat Opus 53, in an equally brilliant and authoritative manner.

Miss Helen Davies sang "The Slave Song" in beautiful voice and with deep feeling, giving as an encore a charming little number, "In My Garden There Are Roses."

Mr. P. Redfern Hollinshead, who was flatteringly received on the occasion of his visit to Peterborough recently for St. Paul's choir concert, was reassured in very emphatic fashion of his popularity here. His first number and one most timely, in view of the recent accession of King George V., was "The Veteran's Song," and was received with enthusiastic applause. In encore he sang the aria from Rigoletto (Verdi).

Miss Hallihan, on her appearance, was greeted with a storm of applause which was deservedly renewed after the rendition of her first number, "Teus Animan," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Miss Hallihan, in response to the insistent recall accorded her, sang, with tender interpretation and fine shading, "The Last Rose of Summer."

The audience was favored by the presence of Mr. Racey Kilmer, of New York, who possesses a robust tenor of commanding power and high culture. He gave "Celisti" from Verdi's "Aida" with a warmth of feeling and in such magnificent voice that the audience was heartily responsive and gave the soloist a very generous encore. Mr. Kilmer's recall number was "Because." In part two of the programme he sang "Violets" with delightful effect, and the audience again recalled him.

Miss Carrie Reesor sang the appealing number "Bobolink" in musicianly and captivating style, responding to the audience's plaudits with a sympathetic and expressive song, "Absent."

Mr. Hollinshead was so freely applauded for his rendition of the aria from "Martha" (Flowtow) that he was recalled twice, giving "Mary of Argyle" and "Songs of Araby."

Miss Hallihan was also accorded a similar honor on her singing "Beauty's Sleep," her encore selections being "Annie Laurie" and "Home Sweet Home."

During the interval between part one and part two of the programme the opera house orchestra played very excellently the selection from "The Geisha."

The accompanists for the evening were Miss Doherty and Messrs. Crane and R. J. Devey.

"AT HOME" IN HONOR OF THE GRAND-VICE COUNCILLOR

The Peterborough Council, No. 423, of the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends held an "At Home" last night to Grand Vice-Councillor F. J. Fitzgerald, of London, in the S.O.E. Hall. The proceedings were somewhat late in getting started and the musical part of the programme was omitted on that account. The chief item of importance during the evening was the address given by Councillor Fitzgerald, which dealt mainly with statistics of the order. There are 209 members in the local council and 39 new members joined in 1909, and up to the present 12 have been added this year.

He also spoke of the general progress of the order and its objects.

The attendance numbered about seventy-five, including both ladies and gentlemen, the former serving refreshments at the close of the evening. Selections were given on the phonograph by Mr. Garside. They were much enjoyed.

At the close of Councillor Fitzgerald's address a vote of thanks was moved by Past Councillor Robert Harding. The meeting dispersed about about 10.30.

A REMARKABLE LECTURE BY MR. HERBERT BOOTH

Mr. Herbert Booth, youngest son of General Booth, will lecture in St. Paul's church next Monday night at 8 o'clock. He will deliver his famous lecture on "The Early Christians," which he gave here some months ago. The church was then crowded. When the character of this lecture became known, hundreds in the city expressed disappointment that they had not heard it. For the benefit of those who heard it before, and who expressed a desire to hear it again, as well as for those who did not hear it, Mr. Booth has consented to re-deliver it on Monday night, May 30th. Some idea of this lecture may be gained from the following notices:—Sir Robt. Henderson says of it: "It is educational in the profoundest degree, inspirational in the truest sense, and truly remarkable in the daring of its conception." The pastor of the Metropolitan Temple, New York, says: "It was the greatest we ever had." The Chicago Sun says: "Mr. Herbert Booth is the greatest pictorial preacher of the United States." That this lecture may be within the reach of all, the admission is practically on a free-will offering basis. The fee will be ten cents and upwards.

To-day the comet is 31,000,000 miles distant; to-morrow it will [illegible] this distance by 3,000,000 miles. Look for it in [illegible] western sky after sunset, if the atmospheric conditions are clear.

COMETS AND METEORS

It was once supposed that meteors or "shooting stars," as most of us call them, were inflammable vapors, accidentally kindled in our atmosphere. Halley suspected that they might be fragments of matter flaoting in space and picked up by the earth as it swept through the heavens. It was not until late in the eighteenth century that the cosmical origin of meteors was more or less proved by the computation of their velocities and the discovery that they were comparatively small bodies which were heated to luminosity by the friction of the earth's atmosphere. When the marvellous shower of November 12-13, 1833, pelted the earth with some 240,000 meteors during nine hours, a perfect tempest of falling stars, it was found that they all came from the same part of the sky and that the earth had crossed what was really the track of a swarm of meteors, revolv-revolving about the sun like so many little planets. Further investigation of the subject proved that the earth crossed periodically the tracks of many such swarms.

It has happened that a few of these falling stars have reached the earth and have buried themselves in the ground before their energy was expanded. In these meteorites, as they are called, twenty-nine terrestrial elements have so far been recognized, ten of them being non-metallic. Oxygen, silcion, alumnium, iron, calcium, and magnesium, as well as nickel and sulphur are among these elements. The composition of comets is much the same. Hence we have chemical as well as astronomical evidence that meteorites, in other words, meteors, are the children of comets.

Prof. William H. Pickering, of Harvard University, has sought to classify meteorites into those which are iron in nature and those which are stony in nature. He admits that the iron meteorites are of cometary origin, but the stony ones, because of their similarity to the material of which the earth is composed, he regards as terrestrial in origin. Millions and millions of years ago the earth and the moon were one. Then one day a mighty cataclysm occurred. Five thousand cubic million miles of matter were hurled off by the earth's enormous centrifugal force. In that convulsion our moon was born. The larger flying mass, according to Professor Pickering, must have been followed by smaller masses, which were projected to such distances that they were freed from the attraction of our planet. In these smaller masses Professor Pickering sees our stony meteorites. His theory is so very recent that it has not as yet been subjected to the critical scrutiny of astronomers, for which reason we must accept, for the time being, the older doctrine, that all meteroites are of cometary origin.

WEATHER MARRED THE EXCURSION

Owing to the very inclement weather the Woodmen of the World's excursion from Lindsay yesterday was not as successful as it would have been under more favorable auspices.

When the steamer Otonabee left Lindsay a mixture of snow and rain was descending, which debarred many from taking in the trip. However, about one hour after leaving Lindsay the weather cleared, and those who did go had a very enjoyable trip, arriving in Peterborough about eight o'clock and returning to Lindsay on the nine o'clock G.T.R.

THREE FITTING FAREWELLS

Three presentations took place at the Canada General Electric Co's. works on Saturday noon, when the departing fellow-workmen and friends were suitably remembered by appropriate presents. Lack of space prevents the giving of the addresses in full.

Mr. Matthew Breckenridge has succumbed to the lure of the west and will shortly go to his new home. The presentation was made by Mr. W. A. Brundrette, and the address signed by J. F. Reed, E. R. Shirley, T. M. Somerville and H. Huffman. He received a handsome locket and chain.

FOREMAN REMEMBERED.

W. S. Common, retiring forman of the punch press department, was also remembered. W. Tougas read the address and W. J. Nelson made the presentation.

ALSO WESTWARD HO!

That G. J. Tovey, foreman of the brass finishing department, was well liked by his fellow-men, was also seen by the kindly worded address presented him and the token given. It was signed by Arnold E. Prest, H. W. Watts, F. J. Pope, F. V. Haskill, A. E. Saunders.

Mr. Tovey has been with the company for twenty years.

The Pope saw an aeroplane flight for the first time yesterday, a priest flying over the Vatican gardens in a machine of the latter's invention.

Miss Morrow was a favorite in the office, and just to show her that they had appreciated her services, the staff presented her with an eulogistic address and a gold pendant set with pearls.

Change in Y.M.C.A. Services

In connection with the services in the local churches under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association to-morrow, it has been found advisable to make one alteration. Mr. G. J. Bell will speak in All Saints' in the morning and in St. John's church in the evening. Mr. Bell is from Toronto and has been secured for this special service by the Peterborough Y.M.C.A through the kindness of Ven. Archdeacon Warren, secretary of the Anglican Synod.

Christ and Social Problems

Mr. Herbert Booth, youngest son of General Booth, will lecture in St. on Sunday in our city. He will occupy the pulpit of St. Paul's Presbyterian church in the morning. In the evening he will preach in George street Methodist. Then in the afternoon, at four o'clock, he will address a mass meeting in St. Paul's church, and will take as his subject, "Christ and Social Problems." This subject should prove of great interest to the men of Peterborough, especially as it will be dealt with by a man who has been in close touch with the masses all his life.

A Fine Old Age

One of the oldest residents of Indian river passed away this morning, aged 82, in the person of Martin Guerin. The aged gentleman was taken suddenly ill about three weeks ago.

Mr. Guerin was in religion Roman Catholic and interment will take place in St. Joseph's cemetery, Douro, on Monday morning at 9 o'clock. He is survived by his wife, whose maiden name was Miss Johanna Meade, and eight sons and one daughter namely; Michael of Peterborough; Dennis, and Frank, of East City; Morris, James and William, John and Martin, of British Columbia and Mrs. Harry Stratton, of Rochester.

Try it Before You Buy it

Hundreds of careful piano buyers hesitate to place an order for fear the instrument may disappoint them. There need be no such fear in purchasing from us, because we are quite ready to exchange a piano after a reasonable trial. We have no trouble in satisfying our customers, and spare no trouble to meet their views.

When purchasing a piano, consider the appearance; the style and finish are important, and indicate the thoroughness of the maker. Consider the durability also, which can only be guaranteed by the best woods and workmanship in construction. Most important of all is the TONE. This is the real test; the tone is what distinguishes the piano that will delight you. If you are so discreet as to purchase a

CENTRALS MADE IT TWO OUT OF THREE FROM ST. PETER'S

The "Downey" Brigade Had a Slamming Bee and Counted Ten Times, While St. Peter's Had to Put Up With Four—Winners Gather Five in the Fourth With Two Out

The manner in which the Centrals put the St. Peter's school nine away at the Oval yesterday afternoon was neither lazy or uninteresting. The score was 10—4 and the winners made five of their counters in the fourth after two were gone. The hits were six and eleven, with the Centrals taking the larger number.

The win practically gives Murray street aggregation the championship of the senior school league, and the players and their supporters wore a triumphant smile when "Dan" Mulhern, jr., grabbed a hard drive from Heenan in the St. Peter's last time at bat. The winners contributed errors with a glad hand, but their hitting and base running won the game.

It was the third meeting of the two teams and the second win for the Centrals.

Convicted by Finger-Print.

Paris, May 28.—The two soldiers, Graby and Michel, charged with the murder of Mme. Gouin, widow of Jules Edouard Gouin, a former governor of the Bank of France, were convicted by court-martial yesterday, Graby being sentenced to death and Michel to 20 years' imprisonment.

The imprint of a bloody finger on a military ticket taken up on the train on which Mme. Gouin was traveling on Dec. 16 last led to the solving of the mystery of her death. Mme. Gouin's body was found under a train near Paris on that day.

DEAFNESS OF WHITE CATS.

An Affliction Which Prevents Their Being Good Mouse Catchers.

According to a magazine writer, the acuteness of the average cat's sense of hearing is proverbial, but it is a proverb that needs qualifying. For example, many white cats are absolutely deaf, and though the idea may appear absurd at first sight, I am inclined to believe that the color of the cat is associated with its sense of hearing.

I have several times imported Persians or long haired cats from abroad, but not one white one in the number has been able to hear the slightest sound. Of course I have possessed white cats that could hear, but they have been the exception, and that applies as much to the short hair pet of the fireside as to the aristocratic long hair of the shows. Moreover, I have observed that the white cats dullest of hearing are those with blue eyes.

The cats with orange eyes which I have had could hear quite well, those having odd eyes—that is, one orange and one blue—could hear a little but not well, and those having blue eyes were quite deaf, though all have come from the same litter. All kittens have blue eyes till they are about six weeks old, when the eyes change to their adult or permanent color. But to show how widely the permanently blue eye differs to begin with from other eyes I may say that immediately the eyes of white cats that are to have permanently blue eyes open they will shine bright red in the dark and neither the ephemeral kitten blue nor any other color eye does this.

One peculiarity of deaf cats is that they seem to have an aggravated sense of feeling in their feet pads. It is very difficult for a heavy walking animal such as man to approach a deaf cat from behind without giving it warning, and this I attribute to the extreme sensitiveness of the cat's feet, recording the slightest tremor of the ground and so to a certain extent taking the place of hearing. It is a belief held by some country people that white cats do not make good hunters, good mouse or rat catchers, even if they do hear. I am inclined to think that there is a foundation for this idea, and I would go further and say that dark colored cats make the best mouse and rat catchers because they hear best.

Where Slavery Exists.

Joseph Burtt, of England, who has visited the slavery part of West Africa, and seen how the Portuguese are treating the hapless natives, says:

"The world should unite and stamp out slavery in Africa and everywhere else. The cultivation of the cocoa in the islands of San Thome and Principe, West Africa, employs 50,000 ignorant blacks who are kept in pitiable servitude. In the islands fevers and tropical diseases carry off the people rapidly and 5,000 slaves have to be taken there yearly to maintain the needed labor supply.

"These slaves come principally from the central regions of Africa. Some are sold for debt; some are given up on accusation of witchcraft; some are captured in tribal feuds and village raids, but most are captured by expeditions equipped and sent out for the damnable purpose. They are conveyed to the coast, fastened together with wooden shackles to prevent them escaping. It is a long march, many hundred of miles, nine days of which is over a desert. Approximately 50 per cent. of the slaves die on the march."

The Strength of a Shark.

Given special advantages, such as that of holding the end of a stout rope at the other extremity of which is a hook fixed in a shark's mouth, man may, with the assistance of a number of his fellows, have the best of the shark. But alone and in the water the advantage is wholly and absolutely the other way, and the strongest swimmer and the bravest heart fail when the tyrant of the sea seeks to make his acquaintance. The shark is gifted with great strength, a savage temper, dogged perseverance and exceptional power of jaw. The lion and tiger may mangle, the crocodile may lacerate, the bulldog may hold fast—the shark alone of living creatures possesses the power of nipping off a human limb at a bite.

Making It Simple.

The scholarly looking man with the big eyeglasses had been invited to address the Sunday school and was making a few remarks concerning the lesson.

"I see the word 'line' occurs here," he said. "Will some one give me a definition of 'line'?"

Nobody answered.

"It is very easy," he proceeded encouragingly, "though you may find it a little perplexing to convey the idea in simple terms. Try again. Well, the ordinary signification of the word is longitudinal extension, but here it denotes a predetermined boundary. I am sure, my young friends, you can remember that."

Needed No Help.

The old colored woman ambled into the police court where her son was to be tried on a charge of petit larceny. She had been talking to a police court lawyer the evening before, and, catching sight of her, the limb of the law hustled toward her.

"Well, did you get up that $5 for me?" he inquired eagerly. "They are going to try Hamp's case now."

"Well, now, suh, I didn't git de money, mister. Times is jes so hard I done colluded ter let Hamp go on en be c'nvicted widout de 'sistance ob counsel."

Tomboy.

Verstegan gives the following origin of the word "tomboy" as applied to romping girls: "Tumbe, to dance; Tumbod, danced; hereof we yet call a wench that skippeth or leapeth lyke a boy, a tomboy; our name also of tumbling cometh from hence."

A Born Leader.

"Why are you constantly referring to Bliggins as a leading citizen?"

"I can't help having an admiration for the man," replied Miss Cayenne. He belongs to our whist club and always knows which card to play first."

The two-year-old child of Thomas Little, a farmer near Blyth, was killed by a train.

Government Gives Up.

Berlin, May 28.—The Government yesterday abandoned its efforts to secure the enactment of the Prussian Franchise Bill, popular opposition to which has been expressed in frequent mass meetings.

Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg said that the Government placed no further value on the measure which had lost its effect by giving the wealthy and middle classes a greater influence in the elections.

Heresy Not Shown.

Atlantic City, N.J., May 28.—The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, by a unanimous vote, yesterday adjudged that the heresy complaint brought against the synod of New York had not been sustained. The case involved three students of the Union Theological Seminary who were alleged to have denied, among other things, the virgin birth of Christ.

NEW IRISH NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED IN CAVAN

It Tells a Remarkable Story of Hydrophobia Cures That Should Interest Canadians Just Now.

Mr. Robert Fair has shown the Review a copy of the first number of the "Irish Post and Weekly Telegraph for Cavan and Midlands," published in the town of Cavan, Ireland. It is a very newsy paper and will no doubt be much appreciated by the people of Cavan and the Midlands.

In view of the many cases of hydrophobia in Western Ontario at the present time the following article, which we copy from the Irish Post and Weekly Telegraph, will be of great interest to Canadians:—

A recent fatal case of hydrophobia in a London hospital, where a soldier who had been bitten by a rabid dog on the Continent, developed the symptoms six months afterwards, although he had been treated at the Pasteur Institute, Paris, after the bite, and died in unspeakable agony, has again focussed attention upon this dread disease, which happily for a number of years past, had been practically stamped out in Great Britain and Ireland. The moment is opportune, therefore to note the fact that a remarkable cure for it has been in the possession of a County Cavan family since the time of James I., and has been used with invariable success down to the present day.

In the highlands of Cavan, bordering on Leitrim there is a wild and rugged, but picturesque district called Glangevlin, or shortly Glan. For ages this territory has been peopled by the clan MacGovern, a hardy and stalwart race of men who held their native hills and valleys through all the troubled time of old, and to the present day theirs is by far the most numerous patronymic to be found there.

Mr. Philip McGovern, R.D.C., of Glan, is descended from the former chieftains of this clan. He is known far and wide as the "Hydrophobia Specialist," because he possesses an infallible cure for that dreadful disease, being, as far as is known, the only man who can cure it after the symptoms have made themselves manifest. Contrary to popular opinion, the Pasteur treatment is not so much a cure as a preventive remedy, like vaccination—an inoculation which gradually renders the subject immune from disease. Mr. McGovern, however, claims not only to prevent hydrophobia from developing in a person bitten by a do affected with rabies, but he can also cure the disease up to a certain stage. According to the family traditions the cure was revealed in a dream to an ancestor of Mr. McGovern's, and has since been handed down from father to son. For the last five years or so there were practically no cases of hydrophobia, but previous to that some 150 persons on an average were cured by Mr. McGovern, many of them showing symptoms of the disease before commencing his treatment. In no case has he, or any of his ancestors who possessed the cure, been known to fail; but he does not undertake to treat a patient who has arrived at that stage when he or she is unable to swallow. As long as the patient was at all able to swallow McGovern always succeeded but, of course, he recommends early attention. The cure is perfected in three days, and is not difficult for the patient to undergo.

Mr. McGovern has hundreds of testimonials from the clergy, magistrates, and medical gentlemen who have approved of and adopted his remedy. The late Rev. Philip Treanor, P.P., Glan, wrote to certify that Mr. McGovern possessed an infallible remedy for hydrophobia. He had known him and his father to have successfully combatted hundreds of cases of this fell and terrible disease, the cure of which had been in their family for upwards of 200 years, and had been transmitted from father to son.

Amongst the cases treated by Mr. McGovern the following may be mentioned:—Surgeon J. A. Reynolds, Ballyshannon, formerly of the East India Medical Service, was bitten by a spaniel of his, which had been cut by a rabid dog. The spaniel had been kept locked up, and subsequently developed rabies and died. On being examined by a veterinary surgeon it was proved that the animal was rabid. The cut on Surgeon Reynolds' hand was dressed by Drs. Shield and Condon, Ballyshannon, who advised him to send for Mr. McGovern, which he did, and underwent his treatment, with the usual happy result. He afterwards wrote to Mr. McGovern, saying that he believed the latter's cure was a perfect one. About 18 years ago Mr. Richard Serples, of Kinawley, Co. Fermanagh, had a dog, which, becoming mad, bit his father, child aged four, a cow, poultry, &c. The cow and other animals bitten developed symptoms of rabies and had to be destroyed. The child refused food and was hiding in out-of-the-way places. Mr. McGovern was consulted and found the child very bad, but still able to swallow. His cure was complete, and the child has grown into a fine specimen of Irish manhood. A man named Jack Stuart, and his two sisters, living near Carrigallen, Co. Leitrim, were in an advanced stage of hydrophobia, being actually delerious. They were still able to swallow however, and were cured by Mr. McGovern. Sarah Long, of Culmore, near Derry, was bitten by a mad dog, which also cut a young man who went to the Pasteur Institute, and died six months afterwards. Sarah was treated by Mr. McGoverm, and never developed the disease.

The medicine administered is believed to be purely herbal, but the patient is put on a strict course of diet during the treatment. Mr. McGovern has always expressed his willingness to afford every facility to medical experts to investigate his treatment for the benefit of humanity.

WOES OF WOMANHOOD

Weakness and Suffering Banished by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Dr. Williams Pink Pills are good for men and women and growing boys and girls but they are good in a special way for women. At special times a woman needs a medicine to enrich and regulate her blood supply, or her life will be one round of suffering. That is when Dr. Williams Pink Pills are worth their weight in gold, for they actually make new blood. There is not a month in her life from fifteen to fifty that Dr. Williams Pink Pills are not a boon to every woman. They help the growing girl safely over the critical time when her blood is overtaxed by new demands. To the woman of middle life they bring relief and bring her strength for her time of change. And during the thirty odd years that lie between Dr. Williams Pink Pills fill a womans life with the happiness of health, giving her strength and energy for every function. A womans surest protection against all the ills that come to her because of her sex, is to set her blood right at once by a course of Dr. Williams Pink Pills—and then to keep the blood right by taking the Pills occasionally. Mrs. Eliza Couthier, St. Jerome, Que., is one of the many unfortunate sufferers restored tto health by Dr. Williams Pink Pills. She says: "It would be difficult for me to say how much I suffered. I was tormented by headaches and backaches; my appetite failed and I was wasted away to such an extent that I was unable to do housework. I was constantly taking medicine, but it did not help me any. One day a friend urged me to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills, and I procured a couple of boxes. By the time these were done I felt some improvement and thus encouraged I continued the use of the Pills, gaining strength day by day, until after I had taken six or seven boxes, I was again well and strong, and I have since continued in the best of health. I can strongly recommend these Pills to all weak and ailing women."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DR KOCH IS DEAD.

Great Bacteriologist Passes Away at Baden-Baden.

Baden Baden, May 28.—Prof. Robt. Koch, the famous bacteriologist, died yesterday afternoon from a disease of the heart.

Robert Koch was born at Klausthal, Hanover, in 1843. He became famous as a bacteriologist in 1870, when he isolated the bacillus of anthrax, some years later proposing a method of effective inoculation against that disease. In 1882 he demonstrated the bacillus of tubercle, which bears his name, and in the following year, in Egypt and India, identified the cause of cholera. His remedy, tuberculin, prepared in 1891, proved of value as a diagnostic agent, but as a remedy for phthisis, did not fulfil the high hopes entertained.

In the closing years of his life, Koch occupied the peculiar position of being at variance with the great majority of his pupils. He held that tuberculosis in man was distinct from that in lower animals, and could not be transmitted from the lower animal to man, while the balance of opinion is against this view, including the report of an English royal commission published six years ago.

In 1885 Koch was appointed to a professorship at the University of Berlin, and in 1891 was made director of the Bacteriological Institute at Berlin. He went in 1896 and 1903 to South Africa to study rinderpest, and in 1897 to German East Africa to study malaria. His works include: "On Cholera Bacteria," 1886; "On Bacteriological Investigation," 1891; "Investigation of Pathogenic Organism," 1886.

Precedence at Funeral.

London, May 28.—The Daily Chronicle says in connection with the political wrangles:

"When Parliament meets a fortnight hence, we are likely to hear bitter complaints of the treatment of Privy Councillors and members of Parliament at the funeral of King Edward. It is an open secret that some of the distinguished foreigners present at the funeral were displeased with the order of precedence assigned to them.

"The representative of one great European power left London post haste as soon as the funeral was over as a protest against the place given to him in the procession, after the kings of some of the smaller states.

"Mons. Pichon, the French Foreign Minister, was also profoundly dissatisfied with the position assigned to him in a carriage almost at the end of the funeral cortege—in fact, behind the representatives of China. He was consoled, however, by the companionship of Mr. Roosevelt, the representative of another great republic.

"Court functionaries do not yet realize the place of republics in the scheme of things. Every little foreign princelet was given precedence over the representatives of the United States and France, two of the greatest powers in the world."

Bernier Buys Arctic Land.

Ottawa, May 28.—Commander J. E. Bernier of the Government steamer Arctic, who is to proceed again to northern regions during the present year, has purchased from the Government a parcel of unsurveyed land of 960 acres, at Pond Inlet, Baffin Island, which he has named Berniera.

The Minister of the Interior recommended that in recognition of his services in connection with Arctic expeditions the land be granted to Captain Bernier for one dollar.

The commander of the Arctic has purchased from Robert K. Innes of Dundee, Scotland, the premises known as Pond's Bay fishing station for $500.

Goes to Scotland.

Ottawa, May 28.—John T. Lithgow, formerly comptroller of the Yukon, has been appointed Canadian trade commissioner at Glasgow, Scotland, in succession to W. G. Fischer, who goes to Germany.

Mr. Lithgow is 54 years of age, and entered the civil service in 1880. He was comptroller of the Yukon from 1898 until last year, when there was a reorganization of the officials there.

His appointment to the Yukon is understood to have been at the instance of Hon. W. S. Fielding. He was once employed in the assistant receiver-general's office at Halifax.

A Queer Will.

Toronto, May 28.—The secretary-treasurer of the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives has been advised of the bequest of $500 from an old gentleman who had resided in Simcoe County. He had a favorite pony, and according to the will, this $500 is to be invested and the interest on same paid annually for the keep of the pony. At the pony's death the money is to go to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives. The old gentleman also left $500, invested in the same way, for a favorite dog.

New College for New Brunswick.

Chatham, N.B., May 28.—A new provincial college is to be opened here for English-speaking Catholic students in the province, under the direction of the Basilian Fathers of Toronto, who direct the colleges at St. Michael's, Toronto, and Sandwich, Ontario. The college will provide education for both boarders and day students. It may be affiliated with the University of New Brunswick.

The building here, formerly known as St. Nicholas College, will be the seat of the new institution.

Two Killed In Auto Wreck.

Logan, Ohio, May 28.—While returning from a party at midnight, an automobile, driven by William Snyder, president of a lumber company, ran over an embankment near Young's Bridge, and Miss Lillian Wright and Miss Flossie Herman were instantly killed. Mrs. Don Goss sustained a fractured rib and Mr. Snyder's leg was broken. Miss Wright was to have been married next Wednesday.

Constable Perhaps Fatally Hurt.

Montreal, May 28.—Constable Lauzon may die from blows he received from two tramps, when Chas. Marsh and Geo. McLeod pelted him with bricks.

Unaware of the injuries, Judge Lazon fined the men $10, which they paid, and were released.

Four men were hurt at a barn-raising at Arthur Metler's farm near Welland.

The township of Cavan is mourning over the loss of James Gardiner, auctioneer, at Peterborough, on Saturday last. He was a popular figure at the various sales throughout the township, where his ready wit and geniality was always apparent. His loss has caused a vacancy which will be hard to fill. He was public auctioneer for a great number of years, during which time he has sold out a great number of homes in Cavan. The sympathy of the community is extended to the widow and children. Quite a large number of Cavanville people attended the funeral.

WHAT NEGLECT DID FOR HIM

Jas. E. Brant Suffered Torments From Kidney Diseases.

Then He Used Dodd's Kidney Pills and Became a Well Man—His Experience a Lesson for You.

Athabasca Landing, Alta., May 27.—(Special)—That Kidney Disease, neglected in its earlier stages, leads to the most terrible suffering, if not death itself, and that the one sure cure for it in all stages is Dodd's Kidney Pills, is the experience of Mr. James E. Brant, a farmer residing near here.

Mr. Brant contracted Kidney Disease when a young man, from a strain and, like hosts of others, neglected it, expecting it to go away itself.

But it kept gradually growing worse, till after thirty years of increasing suffering the climax came, and he found himself so crippled that at times he could not turn in bed, and for two weeks at a time it was impossible for him to rise from a chair without putting his hands on his knees.

He could not button his clothes. He was troubled with Lumbago, Gravel and Backache, and tried medicines for each and all of them without getting relief, till good luck turned him to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Dodd's Kidney Pills started at the cause of his troubles and cured his Kidneys. With cured Kidneys his other troubles speedily disappeared, and to-day he is a well man.

If you cure your Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills you will never have Lumbago, Rheumatism, Heart Disease, Dropsy or Bright's Disease.

A bogus cheque for $24.50 was passed on V. J. Bosworth, a Chatham grocer.

POLICE COURT

[The Police Court report begins with the following partial line, which is printed on the page:]
tures of Thomas McDonald, otherwise known as the "Mouse," as he sauntered out of No. 2 and up to His Worship at the police station this morning.

He had been there before and it was fifteen days.

"Where have you been working?" was the query. "Oh, several places," answered Mousie, with the accent on several.

But Sir Thomas was forgetful, or else his definition of work differed from P.C. Adams, who withered him with the statement that the ex-Cobourger had been pulling off a "living picture" stunt in doorways and at corners.

The Magistrate suggested a stay at the Hotel Nesbitt, and "Mousie" thought it a good idea. He opined that ten days would suffice.

It was two weeks.

REASONS WHY THE BY-LAWS SHOULD CARRY ON MONDAY

One of the remarkable features of the growth of Peterborough has been the development of the southwestern part of the city. The establishment of factories in the South Ward has caused that section to be built up rapidly, and the need of sewerage and drainage has been pressed upon the attention of the City Council. One of the by-laws to be voted upon by the electors on Monday is to authorize the council to issue debentures for $30,000, the greater part of this sum to be used for providing sewer accommodation for the section of the city referred to. One of the difficulties of the situation is that the land from Townsend street south to the river is quite flat, and there is not sufficient fall to permit of an outlet being constructed that will, by gravity, carry off the sewage and at a depth that will drain cellars or basements. Mr. Willis Chipman, the sanitary engineer to whom the council submitted the problem, recommending a pumping station at the intersection of George and Romaine streets, which is comparatively inexpensive, and which he reports will provide for the discharge from the southwestern section. The by-law also provides for renewing part of the Rink street drain, which is in a very unsanitary condition, and for a drain on Romaine street that will improve the section and provide an outlet for a district that needs drainage—and often drainage is as necessary as sewerage for the health of the community. There is also provision for some minor improvements in the sewerage system, including valve gates at the overflow on George street at Townsend street.

That provision must be made for sewers for this large, important and growing section of the city cannot be questioned. There are in it a large population, churches, schools and factories, and it is not only the convenience of a population as large as that of a good sized town that is to be considered, but also the health of the district and of the city as a whole, and the by-law should be supported by the ratepayers.

At the same time a vote will be taken on a by-law to fix the assessment of the works of the Wm. Hamilton Co. at $10,000 for ten years. At one time the city was willing to give an outside firm the fixed assessment, and also a large loan, as well as concessions as to the use of parts of certain streets, in order to have these works resuscitated. Now, however, they have been re-established by local gentlemen, largely by men who have been connected with the industry for many years and understand the business, and they do not ask for the loan or other concessions, but have asked for the fixed assessment. At the time the company, which is now operating the works, was formed, this aid was requested, but owing to the stringency of the law, legislation had to be obtained, and the necessary legislation having been secured, the freeholders are now asked to legalize the by-law by voting for it. The concession was not a large one to secure the revival of this important industry—an industry associated with the earlier days of the city and with its growth from a small town to its present important proportions—and it is hoped that the by-law, which the council has passed, and which the Legislature has authorized, will be heartily endorsed by the ratepayers.

There is a provision in the legislation authorizing this by-law that, to become effective it must receive the assent of three-fifths of the electors who vote upon it, and this is an additional reason, if any were needed, why the electors should on Monday next, remember to cast their votes. It would be unfortunate if the enterprise of the gentlemen who have revived the works and their confidence in the city should be checked by the ratepayers not carrying out the arrangements which the council made, and which the company acted upon in good faith. The wheels of industry are again moving in the factory, a large number of men are employed, and the city should carry out its part by passing the by-law with the required number of votes.

DON'T DRUG CHILDREN

When you give your child a so-called "soothing" medicine you are not curing its sickness. You are merely drugging it into temporary insensibility. The so-called soothing medicines contain opiates, and an overdose may kill the child. When you give little ones Baby's Own Tablets you have the guarantee of a government analyst that this medicine is safe. And you have the word of thousands of grateful mothers that this medicine will promptly cure all minor ailments of childhood. Mrs. Alphonse Roy, Scott Junction, Que., says: "My little one was weak and sickly and used to cry day and night, but since giving him Baby's Own Tablets he has thrived splendidly, and is as good-natured and happy as I could wish." Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A TEMPTATION.

How a Young French Girl Undertook a Bit of Diplomacy.

By GWENDOLEN ADAMS.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

A ball was in progress at the Austrian embassy in Paris. The host approached one of his guests, Mlle. Elise de Guillemette, a girl of twenty, offered her his arm and led her to a secluded spot.

"Mademoiselle," he said, "would you like to improve the deplorable financial position of your family?"

"I certainly would, your excellency."

"In my country the government helps those of noble blood who have lost the wherewithal to retain their proper station. A republic does not. It is in my power to help you."

The ambassador paused and looked searchingly at the girl's face as if wondering if he dared propose what he had in his mind. Then, with a plunge, he continued:

"There is a certain state paper that has been left in the keeping of the American minister. It is in the immediate care of Mr. Hugh Hildreth, the secretary of legation. Mr. Hildreth is a bachelor, his mother and sister doing the social honors of his house. It is in my power to secure you an invitation to his house. Go there, find out where he keeps this paper, secure possession of it without his knowledge that you have done so, copy its essential features, replace it, bring the copy to me, and I will give you 500,000 francs."

"Why does your excellency select me for this work?" asked the astonished girl.

"Because you are sufficiently beautiful and attractive to compel any man to love you. Love is the key we diplomats use to unlock state secrets."

Mlle. de Guillemette was as pure a girl as ever lived, but she was young, and the wily Austrian used a process of devil reasoning, which, with a certain fascination such a work had for her, secured her to his purpose. He introduced Hugh Hildreth to her, who spent the rest of the evening in her company, and the next day she received from his mother a formal invitation to visit at her son's country seat.

The Austrian ambassador gave her certain data by which she would know it, the most important of which was that it related to the "open door" in China. Mlle. de Guillemette was received with every attention by her hosts, and young Hildreth was from the first devoted to her. Indeed, so kind were they all that she found it impossible to attempt to extort the secret for which she had come.

Furthermore, she had neither that cold, conscienceless nature required for such a work nor diplomatic experience to enable her to bring it to a successful termination. She felt that any word uttered with a view to lead up to the subject of the state paper would result in a detection of her object. The result was that she spent a week with the Hildreths without having made the slightest progress and announced that she would leave the next day.

But Mr. and Mrs. Hildreth, instructed by Hugh, would not consent to her departure. The poor girl would have been glad to remain, but away from the malign influence of her employer the fact that she had come for a dishonorable purpose oppressed her, and she wished to wash her hands of what she had undertaken. But so pressing was the invitation to remain longer that she consented.

The same evening Hugh Hildreth led her into his library and fell to asking her questions as to her family. She told him what they had been before the revolution—how her mother had struggled to maintain at least a respectable position and how she longed to assist her mother, but was powerless. Then Hildreth began to talk of himself and his aspirations in public life. Shame at the contemptible work she had come to his house to accomplish prompted her to avert her gaze and cast her eyes upon the floor.

Her host turned the subject to literature. For awhile he discussed books and their authors. Then, going to one of the shelves that lined the room, he showed her a book that he said he desired especially she should read. Then after a trifle more of conversation he left her and went upstairs.

As soon as he had gone she took the book he had referred to from the shelf and, sitting down with it, began to read. It interested her, and she continued her perusal of it for some time. Meanwhile Mr. and Mrs. Hildreth bid her good night as they went up to bed, and she was left alone.

Between the leaves of the volume she read was a bit of paper evidently intended for a temporary bookmark. Something was written on the paper in pencil, and a natural curiosity prompted her to read it. The words were, "Behind volume 2, 'Racine.'"

The words seemed to mean something. She went to the shelves, found the works of Racine and removed the second volume. Passing her finger along the wall behind where it had stood, she encountered a raised button. Removing several more books that stood beside the first, she saw what she had felt—something that looked like the button of an electric bell. She was tempted to press it, but dared not, fearing to ring.

While thinking it occurred to her that this might be the entrance to a secret space for keeping valuables—perhaps state papers. Might not the paper she had found in the volume be a memorandum of where the chamber lay. Doubtless Hildreth had inadvertently used the slip as a bookmark and forgotten to remove it. Moved by curiosity alone, she nerved herself to press the button. The door of a little safe a few inches square flew open. Within lay a paper. She took it out and read there in pencil on the outside, "The open door."

What she had come to do and had not tried to do had been done for her. Here was the document she required. On a desk in the same room were pen ink and paper. She alone of the family remained below. She might take the paper to the desk, copy its essential points, which was all her employer required, replace it, put everything back as she found it, and who would be the wiser?

Another plan suggested itself to her. She might take the paper to her room, copy it, steal downstairs, put it back in the safe and replace the books before it.

Mlle. de Guillemette stood with the paper in her hand, thinking of the 500,000 francs that she could gain by taking a copy of its contents to the Austrian ambassador. With the money she could place her family at least beyond want. Her employer had told her that such were the methods in vogue among European diplomats; that he would not scruple himself to obtain the document surreptitiously; that she would be unwise to let pass such a means of re-establishing her family.

Then she thought of the Hildreths—mother, daughter, son. They had with true American warmth taken her to their hearts. They had pitied her for the position she occupied of one born to a station she could not support. Hugh had that very evening told her of his ambition. That ambition she would shatter by stealing the contents of an important paper which had been intrusted to his care. He would never be forgiven for the leak, for he would be considered either a fool or a knave.

She thrust the document back into the safe, closed the door, replaced the books before it and, taking up the volume that had been recommended to her, sat down all of a tremor.

"How do you like it?" said a voice behind her.

Turning, she saw Hugh Hildreth advancing.

"Something is wrong with you," he said sympathetically.

She burst into convulsive sobbing.

"Tell me your trouble, little girl," he added, drawing a chair up before her.

"I am not fit to be in the home of such kind people. Please send me away!"

"On the contrary, you have achieved that which I have never achieved—you have resisted a terrible temptation. I myself have been tempted and usually succumbed. And mine was not half the strain you have borne."

She looked at him through her tears in astonishment. "How do you know that I have been tempted?" she asked.

"That Austrian's methods I know well. He would give millions for the contents of the document you have just handled."

"You saw me!" She was trembling from head to foot.

"Yes; I laid a trap for you. When the Austrian introduced me I knew he had a motive. I saw at once that you were not the girl for such work, and when you were going away without even an attempt I determined to put you to a severe test. I wished to see how you would act with the object in your hands for which you had come. I called your attention to the volume I wished you to read and purposely left a guide in it to my safe and left the safe unlocked. Then I went upstairs by the main staircase and came down by a rear one. I have been behind that curtain, where I could see and not be seen. I have witnessed your temptation and your triumph."

"You mean my degradation at having listened to such a temptation."

"Not at all. That Austrian fiend could start an angel on a downward course. You are excusable for the starting and to be commended for the ending. I confess I have been under the rack myself lest you should yield. If you had yielded it would have broken my heart and I should have regretted tempting you. As it is, I rejoice that I did."

The De Guillemettes, at least that branch of the family consisting of Mlle. Elise de Guillemette and her mother, were benefited some time after this occurrence by a marriage between Mlle. Elise de Guillemette and the wealthy American diplomat, Hugh Hildreth.

RUINS OF CHURCH OF SAN NICOLAS

CHURCH TOWER ACROSS RAILROAD TRACKS

New York, May 30.—That the earthquake which destroyed Cartago and left a large part of Costa Rico in ruins was one of a series of siesmic disturbances, and the worst that science has recorded in years, was confirmed with the arrival of the Hamburg-American liner, Prince Joachim, with the first survivors, who told a story of death and desolation in the Central American State.

It was from the Prince Joachim that the first assistance went to the stricken city. She was in the harbor of Port Limon on Wednesday, May 4, the day of the greatest shock, and it could be felt plainly, a though there was no great tidal wave that sometimes accompanies earthquakes. In a short time the smoke above the burning houses in the interior could be seen.

It was learned that Cartago had been destroyed, and Captain von Leitner asked Dr. Walpole Brewer, the ship's surgeon, a resident of New York, who had been attached to Riverdale Hospital, North Brothers' Island, to take six men who had been army nurses at one time, and start for the interior.

A special train was provided and was hurried to Cartago, sixty miles away. There was a ruined city, wholly leveled. Men, women and children were lying in the debris of the houses and stores, and buried under tons of stone and timbers.

"It was a scene that one never can forget," said one of the party. "In the ride across the country we saw men and women running about wildly, shrieking in their terror, for even then there were rumblings. When we arrived at Cartago we found a deserted city. Those who had not been killed had left the city and were seeking safety outside. Every church was down, and at the entrance of what had been the magnificent cathedral five women and men were lying dead. The spire stuck in the ground.

PREMIER ASQUITH HOLIDAYING RADICALS LAMENT HIS ABSENCE

Programme of House of Commons When it Meets Again on June 8 Will Include all the Contentious Issues in Addition to Several Other Matters.

New York, May 30.—The London correspondent of The Tribune cables:

Carping Radicals are lamenting the absence of the Prime Minister on a yachting cruise, by which the Government is left without leadership until the reassembling of Parliament next month. They assert that a strong hand is needed at the helm to keep the ship off the rocks, and that there are already signs of a mutinous temper among the coalition groups. This is true, but the Prime Minister is only mortal, and his health has been impaired by the racking anxieties of the last six months. He needs as long a holiday as possible.

The immediate duties of the British Parliament when it meets on June 8, will, it is understood, be the consideration of: A civil list, a regency bill, the King's declaration, the budget, the pledge that after Jan. 1, 1911, the receipt of poor relief shall not disqualify for a pension.

Moreover, the first business before Parliament will be more or less perfunctory, since it is required by the opening of the new reign. The civil list and the regency bills will be non-controversible, and, while the King's declaration regarding the Protestant belief can be deferred until the coronation, there is a general agreement among men of all parties that the oath ought to be modified as soon as possible and what is offensive to Catholics and the Vatican be deleted. What can now be done with little resistance in response to the King's wishes may become a matter of bitter controversy if allowed to drag along with coronation year.

The real cause of depression among Liberal members of Parliament is the conviction that the situation has changed for the worse since King Edward's death. A well-informed Radical has told The Tribune's correspondent:

"King George, if approached on the question of guarantees, will refuse to entertain the idea of creating 500 peers. When Mr. Asquith resigns office the nation will understand what has happened, and when Mr. Balfour appeals to the country there will be a great wave of loyalty and the Unionists will have a decisive majority."

Apprehension of coming defeat has taken the place of Liberal confidence that a general election could not materially alter the relations of the parties. There is now a disposition to allow the Government to arrange a truce with the Conservatives for the remainder of the year, but John Redmond's consent must first be obtained to the postponement of the veto issue.

One thing is fairly certain — there will be no crisis over the veto until the civil list and the regency bills are enacted and a new finance bill is produced. The budget is expected to remove pauper disqualification for old-age pensions, and this will require the readjustment of burdens between the treasury and the local Government Board. Revision of the spirit duties is also bound up with the finance bill, and the coalition groups are likely to wrangle over it and may drag the Government down.

THE BRIBERY CHARGES ARE DENIED

Washington, May 30.—For just two hours Saturday Senator Lorimer of Illinois stood in the Senate and in vigorous language denounced as untrue the charges of bribery made against him in connection with his election to the Senate. Upon leaving the chamber at the end of his speech, Mr. Lorimer hurriedly put his affairs in order and caught a late afternoon train for Chicago.

In his address Mr. Lorimer emphatically denied all the allegations of corruption, and attacked The Chicago Tribune, in which newspaper the charges first were published, charging it with sinister motives in its attacks, and saying that it had been fighting him ever since 1884, and said that it was inspired because of its failure to control his course as a public man.

At the close of his speech Mr. Lorimer offered a resolution directing that an enquiry into the charges be made by the committee on privileges and elections.

MAN FELL IN BOILING WATER

New York, May 30.—Into a coffer-dam filled with boiling water on the top of an immense caisson in the excavation for the new municipal building, near the entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge, early Saturday, Louis Stratt, 27 years old, of 2,746 Morris avenue, the Bronx, accidentally fell while walking up a runway to the street and was boiled to death.

For six minutes the unfortunate man swam around in the water shrieking for help, finally saving himself from drowning by throwing an arm over a sizzling steam pipe. In his flounderings in the water he swam directly under the flooring of a house for the caisson workers. Some men inside heard his screams, ripped up the floor and rescued him.

Throughout the ordeal and after his rescue Stratt did not lose consciousness.

CROPS WILL NOT SUFFER

Winnipeg, May 30.—Throughout the west rain has fallen at irregular intervals during the past week, but the weather has frequently been cold and unseasonable, rain turning to sleet and even snow at times. Some anxiety has been expressed that the cold weather will retard the growth, which, however, is fairly vigorous, all wheat and oats being above ground, and the sowing of barley well advanced.

There, however, does not seem to be any real danger. The undergraund growth will probably be more vigorous for retarding of the plant above and that moisture now being stored, will later prove valuable in a warm dry spell. The general crop throughout Manitoba and Saskatchewan is favorably reported on from all larger centres, including Regina, Saskatoon, Portage La Prairie and Brandon.

Toronto members of the 1866 Veterans' Association yesterday decorated with flowers the graves of the men who fell in the raid 44 years ago this week.

A. H. Porte, a third year arts student at Toronto University, who had been fire-ranging in the Mississauga region in New Ontario, was accidentally shot and killed.

At the trial of Mrs. Murphy, at Bryson, Que., on a charge of complicity in her husband's alleged shooting of two boys, it is said, attempt will be made to show that other parties did the shooting.

The three-year-old son of William Nicholson, a Toronto freight handler, who was taken to the Isolation Hospital ten weeks ago with scarlet fever, has since had chickenpox, measles and diphtheria while in the institution.

That seventy-five per cent. of the students of Toronto University in preparing for their examinations "dope" themselves, is a statement made, which other information seems to bear out. Cigarettes, whisky, strychnine, caffein and theo bromide, and morphine, are means employed.

TO TAKE OFF EMBARGO

British Restrictions on Canadian Cattle Are Doomed.

Ottawa, May 30.—According to a report received by the Department of Trade and Commerce from Canadian Trade Commissioner F. A. C. Bickerdike of Belfast, there is a probability of an early removal of the British embargo against Canadian cattle. Mr. Bickerdike reports that there is a growing feeling in Ireland that the embargo cannot be much longer maintained, and that cattle dealers in Belfast and Dublin are already considering the question of meeting the consequent increased competition from Canada by going into the dead meat trade.

For years the Canadian Government has endeavored to have the embargo removed, and it has been over and over again conclusively demonstrated to the Imperial authorities that the ostensible reason for its continuance—namely, the danger of infection to British herds from the presence of diseased Canadian cattle—is not justifiable, inasmuch as Canadian cattle are, and have been for years, free from infectious disease. It has been tacitly admitted by the British Government that the real reason for the continuance of the embargo is the desire to protect the home cattle industry against Canadian and American competition.

The increasing price of meats to the British consumer is now operating to secure the removal of the embargo. If, as seems likely from Mr. Bickerdike's report, the embargo is lifted in the case of Canadian cattle, exporters in this country will be placed on a much superior footing to cattle-raisers in the United States, in being able to fatten cattle after landing in Great Britain.

DOCTORS TO MEET

Toronto, May 30.—This week some 500 or more members of the Canadian Medical Association will gather in convocation hall for the 43rd annual meeting, which takes place from Wednesday till Saturday. A pathological museum will be arranged in the foyer.

On Tuesday evening the city members will entertain visitors at a smoking concert in St. George's Hall, and the convention opens next morning at 9 o'clock. There are sections in medicine, surgery, obstetrics and pathology, which will hold sectional meetings in the mornings and be addressed on topics of especial interest.

Was Run Over by Train.

Niagara Falls, Ont., May 30.—The woman instantly killed at the Welland avenue crossing by a Michigan Central passenger train Friday afternoon has been identified as Mrs. Mary Johnson of Stamford. Coroner Kellman yesterday decided that no inquest was necessary.

MUST NOT GIVE INFORMATION

Winnipeg, May 30.—Some surprise is manifested here owing to Col. Steel, D.O.C., forbidding officers or other members of militia, writing on military subjects to give any information to the press without his approval, with the threat of dealing severely with any offenders. While this is the regular thing in war, there is no apparent reason or known scandal to justify such high-flown and arbitrary orders.

Speculation is getting busy, however, with the colonel's motives. Nobody believes that the slight and intermittent rain that fell on Decoration Day was sufficient reason for dismissing the troops without permitting them to perform their annual pilgrimmage to the graves of those who fell in harness during and since the rebellion.

It is whispered that there is some other cause, and memories of the reputed friction between the veteran 90th Regiment are being revived. It is understood that the Highlanders, whose officers are all society favorites, aspire to precedence, on the strength of their lower regimental number, 79th.

ALBERTA COMMISSION ADJOURNS

Winnipeg, May 30.—The royal commission investigating the A. and G.W. deal with the Alberta Government, which deal has already shattered the administration, has adjourned indefinitely, but will probably resume hearings early in July after the Supreme Court sittings.

R. B. Bennett completed the cross-examination and O. M. Biggar re-examined for C. W. Cross. To him Mr. Goddard said he had learned from Mr. Margach that the G.T.P. had already used 800,000 spruce ties. Mr. Clarke had used every effort available to persuade Hon. Frank Oliver to let them cut only tamarac and jackpine, but he was told he must clear the ground as he went.

Reluctantly F. C. Goddard, assistant chief engineer of the A. and G.W. on Saturday morning told the commission that an engineer from Kansas City, working under instructions from Dr. Waddell, came here to locate terminals. This engineer's name was Rowher, and he went under the assumed name of Schmitz. He was here from February to April last and finally had a difference with Waddell and quit. Mr. Goddard now has the terminal plans.

Clarkes and Waddell always seemed to believe that the road would be taken over by the Government when completed.

Comet Disappoints the Pope.

Rome, May 30.—Under the guidance of Father John C. Hagen, director of the Vatican Observatory, the Pope has made an observation of the comet. His Holiness seemed to be rather disillusioned, and he remarked that what he saw scarcely warranted the commotion which the comet has caused throughout the world.

GLENN CURTISS MAKES RECORD TRIP ON HIS AEROPLANE

American Aviator Makes 150 Mile Journey Winning the New York World Prize of $10,000—Does the Distance From Albany to New York Two Hours and Thirty-Seven Minutes.

New York, May 30.—Glenn H. Curtiss flew from Albany to New York City in an aeroplane, winning the $10,000 prize offered by The New York World. He covered the distance of 137 miles in two hours and 32 minutes, and came to earth as lightly as a pigeon. His average speed for the distance, 54.06 miles an hour, surpasses any record ever made by an aeroplane in long-distance flight, and in its entirety his feat perhaps eclipses anything man has accomplished in an heavier-than-air machine.

The start was made from Albany at 7.03 o'clock yesterday morning, under weather conditions as near perfect as the most fastidious aviator could demand. One hour and twenty-three minutes later he made his stopping-place near Poughkeepsie, where there was an hour's intermission. Resuming his flight at 9.26, he sped southward and landed within the boundary of Manhattan Island at 10.35. Only one hundred yards north of the point on which his craft settled stretched Spuyton Duyvil Creek, separating Manhattan Island from the mainland. Had he failed to cross this his flight would have been in vain, but as he swept over it, the prize was his. Thence he sailed to Government Island, a whim of triumph and the concluding lap of a race already won.

Paulhan's flight from London to Manchester, 182 miles, exceeded the Curtiss feat of yesterday in distance, but not in speed and danger. The Frenchman's average was only 44.3 miles an hour, and below him lay English meadow land. Curtiss followed the winding course of the Hudson, with jutting headland, wooded slopes and treacherous palisades. He swung high over the great bridge at Poughkeepsie, dipped at times within 50 feet of the river's broad surface, and jockeyed like a falcon at the turns.

Only once did his craft show signs of rebellion. This was off Stormking, near West Point, where, at a height of nearly 1,000 feet, a treacherous gust struck his planes. The machine dropped like a rock for 40 feet and titled perilously, but Curtiss kept both his head and his seat and by adroit manipulation of his levers, renewed his equilibrium.

Curtiss was up before down yesterday, greeted with favorable weather conditions. With eyes and brain cleared of the cobwebs of sleep, he went with his mechanic and a handful of spectators to Van Rensselaer Island, in the Hudson, three miles south of Albany, from where he was to make the start. Waiting at the river brink was a special New York Central train for Mrs. Curtiss and party, who had not accompanied the aviator to the island. From the train they could not see the actual start, but those on the island witnessed a remarkable scene.

Curtiss arose from the ground like a rocket. There were no preliminary manoeuvrings, there was no trial flights. The aeroplane ran hurriedly over the surface of the island and darted straight for its goal to the southward, turning only for a moment to the westward so that Curtiss might comply with the terms of the competition under which he was flying, and technically cross the Albany city line.

Straight up soared the aeroplane into the distance. When it reached a height estimated at 500 feet, it seemed for a moment to hold a level pace and then to rise again to further levels. Perhaps 700 feet would be a conservative estimate. Certainly Curtis was flying at a height he had never attempted before in his life. In three minutes he was a spec in the distance. In seven minutes he vanished from sight.

Found Dead In Bed.

Berlin, May 30.—One of Ontario's oldest and best known educationists, Jeremiah Suddaby, was found dead in bed yesterday morning by his wife. He had been looking over examination papers until 11 o'clock Friday night, and did not make any complaint of being ill, but he has been poorly for about a year.

The late Mr. Suddaby was in his 67th year, and has been principal of Berlin's public schools since 1871. Up to a few years ago he was county instructor of the model school here.

Tag Day a Success.

Berlin, May 30.—Tag Day was an unqualified success in Berlin, Waterloo and surrounding villages Friday, when nearly $2,100 was raised by the workers of the ladies' auxiliaries of the Berlin-Waterloo Hospital in aid of the institution. The sum of $1,455 was realized from collections in Berlin, $475 from Waterloo and $150 in Elmire, St. Jacobs and other villages. This was the third annual tag day and was the most successful of the three.

Forest Fires Out.

Dauphin, May 30.—Heavy rains in the northern country on the line of the C.N.R., in the Mistatim and Swan River districts, have practically extinguished the forest-fires which have been raging for the past few days. The Great West Lumber Co. lost three million logs.

Emigration to Canada.

London, May 30.—Statistic shows that 113,318 persons went to Canada during the year 1909, an increase of 17,890 over the previous year.

Match Factory Burned.

Selkirk, Man., May 30.—Fire Saturday night destroyed the plant of the Selkirk Match Co. The loss is $25,000 with $2,000 insurance.

FOR THE YOUNG MAN

Could those men who surrounded Mr. Williams in that little room across the sea in the long ago, only know the vast and far-reaching influence of the Young Men's Christian Association, which was founded by them, they would feel that they had not lived in vain.

Into every civilized land this organization has entered. A sound mind in a sound body is one of its axioms, and so religion and exercise, religion and races, religion and dumb bells, bar bells, religion and wrestling go hand and hand.

Eugene C. Foster, of Detroit, at the World's Sunday School Convention in Washington, the other day, stated that 75 per cent of all the boys over thirteen years of age, left the Sunday school and never made professions of faith. The same will doubtless apply to Canada.

Walk the streets of Peterborough on Sunday afternoon. On every principal corner you will find a group of men young or old, whose Sunday school days are over. They are talking baseball, horse races, the coming Jeffries-Johnson fight, or something of every-day interest.

It is for these men that the Y.M.C.A. reaches, and it is for this reason that the pulpits of the evangelical churches of Peterborough were yesterday free to speakers whose message was in the interest of that splendid organization.

Mr. Copeland, the Provincial Secretary, spoke twice. He depreciated the fact that so much attention was given by city papers to sport and so little to religion. But newspapers, the world over are to print news rather than to educate the people. There are many graves cold and deep where papers lie buried whose aim was solely to educate and to keep out news that was not tinged with the uplift.

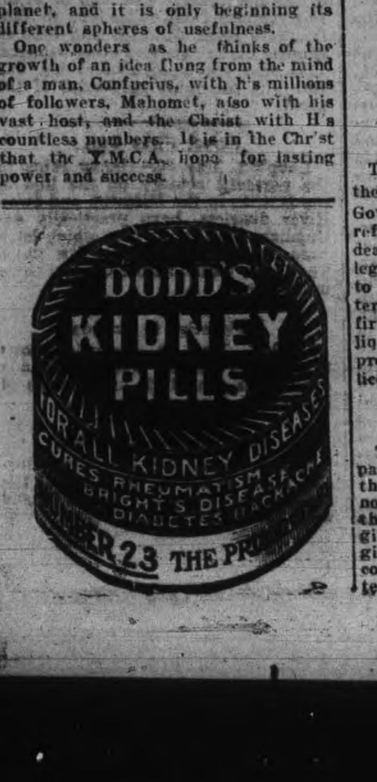
The Globe, the destinies of which are presided over by Rev. J. A. Macdonald, D.D., has a live staff of sporting writers, and that well-known and most excellent paper, the Witness, of Montreal, which was once almost Sunday school-like in its teaching, has enlarged its sporting columns and is giving other Montreal papers keen competition in featuring sports and pastimes. The newspapers reflect the doings of the day. They are the mirrors of the times.

The great unwashed had rather read of a murder than a sermon, of a scandal than an anniversary of a church, of a wedding than a sinner saved. They would, in season, hail with more delight, the arrival of a star hockey player in Peterborough than a world-famous evangelist coming to conduct revival meetings. And it is the average man that buys the papers and the average man who has the average wife who reads the advertisements.

The aim of the Y.M.C.A. is to raise the average standard of young manhood and in this aim they have the good will of all fair-minded citizens.

It is a marvelous organization, grown from a small room to encompass a planet, and it is only beginning its different spheres of usefulness.

One wonders as he thinks of the growth of an idea flung from the mind of a man, Confucius, with his millions of followers, Mahomet, also with his vast host, and the Christ with His countless numbers. It is in the Christ that the Y.M.C.A. hope for lasting power and success.



TO WASH MONEY

The United States is going to laundry its paper money. Only silver certificates will be washed, however, as the ink on the yellow backs and national bank notes will not stand it.

Machines will be established in the sub-treasuries costing about $1,000 each, yet saving the American Government about $1,000,000 a year.

While no one will refuse a dollar bill because it is dirty, yet clean bills are much more acceptable, and it would be a good idea for the Dominion to go into the laundry business also. Some of the Canadian one and two dollar bills look as if they had been in very dirty hands very very often, and could tell a very gruesome story.

THE BAND WAGON

Rev. Dr. John Hunter, the famous pastor of the Trinity Congregational church, Glasgow, Scotland, and Rev. Dr. Maurice Penfield Fike, of the Woodward avenue Baptist church, Detroit, do not agree. It is all on account of a bit of advertising done to bring the evening church services held by the Detroit clergyman, before the public.

Dr. Fike issued circulars printed in blood red, which were couched in the following language;—"Are you happy? No? Drive your trouble waggon to the Woodward avenue Baptist church and hear the Sunday evening talk. Bring all your friends." On the back of the circular, as a clincher, was the following classic taken from the advertising matter of a well-known whiskey firm;—"Smile awhile, and while you smile another smile; soon there are miles of smiles, and life is worth while because you smile. TRY It."

Dr. Hunter says that he would rather preach to empty pews than draw crowds by such methods.

Dr. Fike frankly admits that he is a believer in advertising, and defends his position by these trite remarks;—"While the church should not, by tone, method and temper of its advertising class itself with the vendor of say—for example's sake—fake mining stocks, still, it is the biggest business in the world, and should be wide-awake in advertising itself in all legitimate ways. The church is here to help men to Christ and men should be told about it. The light of the church should not be hid under a bushel, but should be set on a hill."

Dr. Fike has on his side St. Paul and General Booth, the former the greatest and most enthusiastic worker of Bible history, who said, "I am become all things to all men that by all means I might win some." While General Booth, the greatest missioner of modern times, believes in the red shirt, the cornet and drum, the appropriating of popular music to sacred song, anything to catch the man and woman and lead them to the fold he advocates.

The day once was when the church organ, "that kist o' whistles," was not allowed in the house of God, while the violin would be sacrilige. But it's all changed now, and there is no church that does not seek the good offices of the press, no church society that does not appreciate the power of the notices if there is a social or gathering under its auspices.

The fine organ is an advertisement that gifted singer, the splendid quartette these in every day parlance may be called excellent "adds."

THE POINT OF VIEW

A Heritic

(Kingston Standard.)

Mr. Emmerson is certainly a political heretic—but an intelligent one.

Push

(Bowmanville Statesman.)

Every town has its advantages and should make the most of them. Every town is peculiarly fitted for some one enterprise more than another, and as soon as it is ascertained what would be most conducive to the growth and prosperity of the place the citizens should take hold of the matter and push it for all there is in it.

Germany	556,612
France	481,612
Japan	337,658

Law Enforcement

(Stirling News Argus.)

There will be general approval of the policy adopted by the Provincial Government, in the determination to refuse licenses to wholesale liquor dealers who have abused their privileges by supplying intoxicating liquor to unlicensed persons in prohibited territory. Already, a wholesale liquor firm in Toronto, convicted of sending liquor unlawfully into a place under prohibition, has had renewal of its license refused.

Milady's Mirror

The girl who from motives of economy or convenience prefers to do her own shampooing will save herself much time and weariness if she invests in several appliances used by professionals.

One of these is a spray with a long rubber tubing and fine nozzle. This can be bought to fasten to any spigot and is a great convenience in rinsing the hair. It is almost impossible to get the hair entirely clean by oneself. With the greatest care, some of the soap or shampoo mixture will cling unless forced out by the strong current of a spray.

Another convenience is an electrical drier. These can be found in a number of different styles—some that can be attached to any electric fixture in the house, others that are not dependent upon an electrically lighted room, but have their own storage batteries.

Where the hair is heavy enough time is saved in drying to more than make the drier an advisable purchase. Where one is sensitive to draft and usually catches cold after a shampoo the drier is invaluable, as the current of air can be regulated to any desired temperature. The shorter time that damp hair hangs around shoulders is also a preventive of colds.

A drier that sends the current out into the room is better for the hair than those on which the hair rests to dry.

The Falling Hair of Convalescents.

When hair falls after a fever or other weakening disease it is for the reason that the parts near the roots have undergone decay. It is always a mistake to arrest any such fall. One should rather try to quicken it and so give the roots a chance of sending out new, healthy hair. Free combing, brushing and scalp massaging will soon get rid of the diseased hair. When the patient's strength allows the head must be washed and rinsed. Now comes the time for nourishing and stimulating the growth. If money is not very scarce it is intense folly to sacrifice utility to economy. In these cases one should always make an effort to purchase the best things obtainable, preparations ordered to meet the special needs of the patient. However, some excellent results have followed this simple treatment: Make a mixture of tincture of capsicum, ten parts; liquefied phenol, four parts; glycerin, ten parts, and water to complete the hundred parts. Shake and repeat the shaking before pouring out. Apply a dessertspoonful daily, thoroughly combing the hair both before and after the application. After treating the hair thus during seven days use the lotion only four times weekly and on the other days apply a small quantity of oil of rosemary mixed with three times its bulk of olive oil. As the weeks go by lessen the frequency of the capsicum mixture and weaken the rosemary mixture by adding more olive oil.

To Make Arms Pretty.

Girls whose arms are not round and smooth should begin at once to use a bath brush, for there is no doubt that constant daily application of such a toilet article scatters many a group of pimples and other skin disfigurements, while it stimulates circulation and clears the skin.

After scrubbing the arms with a bath brush and any pure soap for a week the roughness should disappear. The unevenness of the flesh is simply old skin that a cloth is too smooth to remove. But when there is irritation, such as sometimes appears on the face, more treatment will be needed.

Before using the formula about to be given the skin should be brushed with green soap, washing it off and drying carefully afterward. Then apply the ointment made from one dram of sublimed sulphur, five drops of oil of eucalyptus and one ounce each of ointment of oxide of zinc and ointment of rosewater. These should be smoothly blended. This mixture should be put on daily or at night. Twice a week only should scrubbing with green soap be given. The bath brush is to be used daily, however, with simple soap.

Finger Nails.

The nails should be cared for every day. If you follow this practice it will take but a few minutes at any one time. Soak your nails in warm water in which there is a little tincture of benzoin or aromatic vinegar. Lather them well with soap and then file the ends to the same shape as the little half moon at the base. Trim off all rough edges. Press the skin away from the half moon so that it will show distinctly. This ought to be done with the towel every time you wash your hands. Do not use a nail file for this purpose, but an orange wood stick. After the nails are shaped by this treatment at both ends polish them with a chamois polisher, being careful not to heat them by too brisk rubbing. Before polishing you may rub a little vaseline or olive oil on them, with a little nail powder dusted over. This will give a high polish which will last longer than the simple friction with the chamois. Be careful to wash the powder all of. The finishing touch is given by rubbing with a plain chamois.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"Wait until you have learned to know your aunt and others and have met with many people who are kind to you, and then no one person will so entirely fill your mind."

They walked on in silence and thoughtfulness. Kinross felt himself stirred to the depths of him, and yet what his own feelings toward her might be he did not even stop to consider, so accustomed he was to thinking of himself as invulnerable.

This, then, was why she had so fastened upon his flippant declaration that he "loved" Georgiana! Well, better that she should think so. The sooner would she get over this exaggerated state of feeling toward him. Though perhaps she must suffer a bit, for a few weeks, in the process, poor little girl! His heart softened to her with a wonderful tenderness.

"Will you tell me something?" she broke in upon his musings. "Did you and Miss Ellery ever see each other before you met here?"

"No, Eunice."

"But she spoke of you when you were away, calling you 'Dr. Kinross.'"

"She knows of me."

"Are you, then, a man of fame?" she inquired with interest, though her voice had a note of melancholy deeper than her habitual pensiveness.

"Not outside the village in which I live, Eunice."

He saw that she was looking deeply perplexed.

"What was it Georgiana said of 'Dr. Kinross?'" he inquired, not without a sneaking feeling that he was taking a mean advantage of Georgiana.

"Miss Parks, in that picturesque way she has of speaking, said to Miss Ellery, 'You will do him brown.' And, 'You are as good as engaged to him.' But Miss Ellery seemed to have some doubts about it. She said, 'I am not so sure.'"

Her seriousness in repeating their absurdities was too much for Kinross—he grinned his enjoyment. "That was a mere figure of speech on Georgiana's part—she is quite confident of 'doing me brown.'"

"She seemed to have doubts. But I—I reassured her"—

"Oh, you did! What did you tell her, Eunice?"

"That you had told me you loved her."

He shouted a laugh. "You gave me away, then—told them 'Pete' was Dr. Kinross?"

"No. I thought they must know it. I couldn't understand."

"What did Georgiana say when you told her I loved her?"

"I didn't wait to hear. I—I came away."

"Leaving them as puzzled no doubt as they left you," he said, growing sober with the realization of the pain in the white, drawn face of the girl at his side. How strong her feeling for him must be when it could so overshadow the great news he had brought her and the brilliant future before her! His brain swam for a moment as he felt all the fascination of her sweet maidenhood, but he took himself in hand. "I won't undeceive her," he said to himself. "I'll explain nothing. Even if I were in love with her it wouldn't be fair to take advantage of her inexperience. Let her think I'm engaged to Georgiana."

He abruptly changed the subject and forced her to talk prosaically of her life with her aunt, though his pulses were bounding with the excitement of his discovery, in her naive baring of her heart.

And so at length they strolled back to the farmhouse.

CHAPTER XXV.

GEORGIANA, robed in an exquisite gown of white cashmere, whose long graceful lines gave her a quite regal figure, was thoughtfully pacing the drawing room of her home. It was just a week after the opening of the fall term of the college, and President Ellery was going to hold his annual reception tonight for the members of the faculty and their wives. Georgiana, now at home and at the head of her father's household, was ready to receive with him and do the honors as hostess.

As she paced the floor, her long skirts sweeping about her, her thoughts—serious, as usual—were occasionally broken in upon by the flippant remarks of Daisy, who, also in gala attire, was ready to assist her this evening to receive her father's guests.

"Hadn't I better go and tell uncle to hurry up, Georgiana? They will begin to come soon," Daisy suggested from her place on an old davenport which stood against the wall.

"He will be down in time, I suppose. He has a watch," Georgiana answered absently.

"But can he tell the time?"

Georgiana ignored her.

"Because I've always suspected he couldn't he's so invariably late to everything."

Georgiana's gaze was far away.

"You look stunning, Georgiana. That's a scrum gown."

"What adjectives, Daisy!"

"If the combination of you and that robe of snowy white doesn't roast Kinross, then he is fireproof, as they all say he is."

Georgiana laughed indulgently.

"I do hope, Georgie, that you'll be quite cruel to him to avenge the rest of them."

"Daisy," Georgiana gently chided her, "you put it on such a low plane!"

"'It?' What's 'it?'"

"My prospective acquaintance with Dr. Kinross."

"Oh, Georgiana! Why, I'm expecting it's going to be most inspiring and uplifting—to see you jilt him, you know."

"I'm not even sure that he's going to be here tonight."

"Oh!" said Daisy blankly. "Gracious! And here I'm standing on my hind legs in glad expectation!"

"He wrote me that he had an engagement for part of the evening with a Miss Wolcott, who was passing through town on her way to New York, but that if he might come early and leave early he would be delighted to do so. The tone of his note," she added critically, "was manly."

"Dear me! How did he manage to be manly in a note like that?"

"There was an atmosphere about it," Georgiana insisted.

"Why do you keep walking about, Georgie? Are you nervous?"

Georgiana came and stood in front of the davenport.

"Daisy," she said earnestly, "he will probably be the first one to arrive, and"—

"Meaning Kinross?" Daisy inquired sympathetically.

"Dr. Kinross, yes. I fancy he will be here before any one else comes. Tell me, if you were I, would you be in the room when he comes or would you enter after he is here?"

"Which do I think would impress him more?"

"I merely mean," Georgiana explained, "would it seem more easy and—graceful—to be already in the room or to come in after he is here—or perhaps to enter from the piazza? Which would seem more—well"—

"Effective? Suppose you advance from under the piano, Georgie!" Daisy flippantly advised, growing hilarious.

"Daisy, why can't you look at the serious side of life sometimes?"

"Well, then, to be really serious, Georgiana, I don't think Kinross will be here first. That poor poodle, Gateshead, will present himself at the earliest possible moment and stay until you will have to hint to him to flee, as a bird to his mountain, that he may not lose one second of the time permitted to the faculty to gaze upon your charms. And you, Georgiana, dear, will be meaner than ever to the poor suffering wretch now that you have this Kinross on the brain so"—

"Absurd! Why, I've not even met Dr. Kinross!"

"But, Georgiana," said Daisy, with unwonted earnestness, "it seriously does wound me (I am speaking quite in earnest) to see the way you handle that long suffering Gateshead. Be nicer to him tonight than you were at the Gardners' dinner, won't you? Or I shall be tempted to console him by catching his heart on the rebound and allowing him to fall in love with me. And think of such a fate—to see a man console himself with simple me after having loved the complicated Georgiana! 'Twould be an awful strain on me. He couldn't help realizing constantly the lofty height from which he had tumbled and how he had stooped! You know, really, Georgiana, you are cruel, I might say brutal, to Gateshead."

"His plane of life is so commonplace!" said Georgiana impatiently. "He does not stimulate me. He is not even receptive."

"He's a dear, honest, big hearted fellow and loves you devotedly, and you snub him and sneer at him until my blood boils!"

"It is not I he loves, for the real I he does not know or comprehend."

"I suspect that isn't grammatical, Georgiana, is it?" said Daisy doubtfully. "He does not know or comprehend I? To be sure, you ought to know—you went through Wellesley."

"What it is he thinks he loves I'm sure I don't know," said Georgiana.

"I'm sure I don't either, since you say it isn't 'the real I.'"

"I wish, Daisy," said Georgiana sadly, "that the higher life appealed to you."

"And to think that you may commit Gateshead to spending his on my low plane, Georgiana!"

"He is certainly quite incapable of living on mine."

"I acknowledge he is weak, or he would have cut you long ago for the way you treat him. With his students, with every one but you, he is strong. With you he is nothing but a penny dog. But now, to change the subject, I'm worried. Who is this Miss Wolcott—is that the name you said?—to see whom Kinross is leaving your radiant presence tonight?"

"I don't know," Georgiana answered, with dignity.

"You look worried too."

Georgiana shrugged her shapely shoulders.

"I wonder whether that man would do such an underhand thing as that!" Daisy speculated, not without indignation.

"As what? You are rather indefinite, Daisy."

"I don't know how to be more definite, I'm sure."

Georgiana had to let it rest at that, for at this moment Mr. Gateshead was announced.

It was with more than her usual indifference that Georgiana received his obsequious greeting. Daisy, who looked on sympathetically, could not be sure that the deep flush which mounted to his forehead was due to the shock of ecstasy he received from Georgiana's beauty, so enhanced tonight by her extraordinarily becoming gown, or to his pain and embarrassment at her manner.

As she turned halfway from him to a chair in the bay window he awkwardly sat down on the davenport beside Daisy. To relieve the situation, at least for the sake of her own feelings and Mr. Gateshead's, Daisy chatted vivaciously, but she met with a discouraging lack of response, for Mr. Gateshead was crushed and Georgiana quite unable to force an interest in anything but the theme which just now absorbed her highest contemplation.

The announcement of another guest was very welcome to Daisy. The name "Dr. Kinross" sent a thrill of expectancy through the two feminine hearts in the room, but it gave to the lovesick man on the davenport a sharp pang of jealous apprehension, for Dr. Kinross' popularity with girls and woman was so notorious as to be a source of mortification to himself.

It was still early, and President Ellery had not yet come into the parlor, so Mr. Gateshead had to perform the ceremony of introduction.

Dr. Kinross in evening dress bore very slight resemblance on a first glance to Peter the farmhand. Miss Ellery came forward across the floor, holding out her beautiful hand, and met him in the middle of the room. Tall as she was, he stood head and shoulders above her as he clasped her offered hand. His face was quite grave as their hands and glances met.

Mr. Gateshead, looking on as the two girls greeted Kinross, felt something electric in the air, something strange in the expectant, tentative look of Dr. Kinross' eyes upon Georgiana's upturned face.

"We have heard a great deal about Dr. Kinross," Georgiana said, with gracious condescension, speaking like a royal personage in the plural. "His fame followed us even into our rural retreat this summer to a Pennsylvania Dutch farm, our letters from home discussing him as if"— She stopped short, her eyes fixed upon his face, her self consciousness suddenly dropping from her like a cloak.

"Was it only his fame which followed you?" Kinross spoke. "Or was it you who followed him? I think he was there first, wasn't he?"

Georgiana stood transfixed, her eyes growing wider and wider with wonder and amazement. The shock of recognition had startled her out of herself, and for the first time in his acquaintance with her Kinross saw her before him unaffected, natural, herself, and for the first time her face in its freedom from self consciousness seemed to him unqualifiedly beautiful. As for Daisy, she forgot herself so far as to grip Gateshead by the arm to keep herself from tottering.

"Yes," acknowledged Kinross in an apologetic tone, replying to Georgiana's speechless stare, "you're right. I'm Pete. Reproach me as much as you want to—I deserve a roasting, I know."

"But," she breathed, "how can you be? What—what are you?"

"Gracious!" gasped Daisy. "Good gracious!"

"So many things," gulped Georgiana, her face colorless, "come to my mind to confirm it—that you are Pete—I mean that Pete was you!"

"Oh," cried Daisy, staring wildly, "Georgiana and I called you Pete all summer! You!"

"That's my classic name."

"And all the while you were Dr. Kinross!" breathed Georgiana.

"And I lent you 'The Story of the Great Back Boned Family!' Oh!" shrieked Daisy hysterically.

"And didn't think me a shining success as a farmhand, did you?"

"I can't grasp it!" half whispered Georgiana.

"It will come to you gradually no doubt," he consoled her.

"That we were under the same roof with you for four weeks and never dreamed of it—of who you were," she amended her remark. "How did you manage it?"

"It wasn't very difficult," he answered, not intending an aspersion on their intelligence.

"I never dreamed of suspecting anything. How could I," she said, looking dazed, "when you used bad English and washed at the pump, though I remember you always had a separate towel, but you ate with your knife?"

"One can rise superior to a mere prejudice like a fork, Miss Ellery, in a good cause."

"'Miss Ellery?' Why don't you call her Georgie? She calls you Pete," madly suggested Daisy.

Georgiana, flushing, glanced haughtily at Daisy. "A good cause?" she quickly repeated. "That's just the point. What was the cause? Why did you deceive us?"

"It's up to you, Peter, to explain satisfactorily your gay deception," said Daisy. "If you aren't the limit! Of all the foxy tricks I ever heard of! Didn't I always say there was something foxy about you? I did! Well, talk it out with Georgie, and I'll receive your apologies later—alone in the conservatory. Come, Mr. Gateshead, we'll leave them alone in this sacred moment of their coming to an understanding. Let's console each other."

She drew him away, scarcely heeded by Georgiana, though Kinross' glance followed them for an instant.

He laughed as his eyes returned to Georgiana's fixed gaze. "She's a jolly little fellow, isn't she? I mean Daisy," he explained as Georgiana looked blank. "Shall we sit down and talk it out?"

Daisy had taken Gateshead to the bay window, so Georgiana led the way across the room to the davenport.

As they sat down together Kinross realized at once that her self forgetfulness had passed and that she was again intensely conscious of herself from the graceful poise of her head and the sweep of her skirts on the floor to every tone of her voice and curve of her lips.

"Now that she knows who I am," he thought, "she'll recall the fact that Eunice told her I loved her. What the devil's to pay?"

"Why," she inquired, "did you conceal your identity? If you chose to hire yourself out as a farmhand for the summer you need not have been ashamed of it—I would only have honored you for it. Your laboring in conjunction with nature—I can quite understand how it satisfied a want in your soul. How little you understood me when you thought I would look down upon you for it!"

Kinross mentally sighed. She was being superior again, and patting him on the head for hiring out to old Morningstar and consorting with nature!

"It was so original of you!" she smiled, "quite idyllic, really! A farmhand who read the 'Vedanta Philosophy' of Swami Vivekananda, who took a half day off when he pleased, was treated by his employers like a privileged boarder, smoked fine cigars and had occasional relapses into good English!"

She was certainly carrying it off very easily, all things considered—more easily than he was, in fact. He was relieved at her interpretation of his escapade, for he would have found it rather difficult explaining his disguise if she had not done it for him.

"But how did we both happen to get to the Morningstar farm?" she suddenly asked. "You could not have known that I was going there, for I did not know it myself until the very day I went."

"Your supposing that I would have pursued you thither, if I had known, is you want to see me?" came her wistful question.

"Did I? Here I am!" was his answer.

"But," her eagerness suddenly dropped, and she spoke mournfully, "it can't last, you know."

"No. Your aunt is going to take you to Europe!"

"Yes."

"She says you are wild to go!"

"Oh!" She lifted her head and flung back a lock of hair from her eyes. "In spite of all the delights that wealth can give, what is it all when it can't feed the soul, when the heart is always longing—for just one thing that"— She checked herself, and again her head drooped.

"And that one thing, Eunice?"

She raised her eyes to his. "It is you I have wanted! Rather than go to Europe—so far away from you—I would bring back those days of last summer on the farm—yes, even those days before we had spoken together at all—for at least I then could see you every day face to face."

He suddenly caught her hand.

"Eunice! It's no use! We can't be 'wise,' you and I—we can't struggle against the inevitable! The power that draws you and me together is stronger than our wills—we must yield to it!"

She drew her hand away from his. "No, no! If you mean we must yield to it at the expense of another girl's happiness, I will not!"

"Georgiana, you mean?"

"You are betrothed to her."

"The devil I am!"

"But you are 'as good as.'"

"That's her idea, not mine. I never originated it. And if I have any influence with myself"—

"You told me you loved her!"

"I spoke figuratively. I mean I loved youth, beauty, grace."

"Oh!"

"Don't you see?"

"Please to label your remarks to me, 'literal' or 'figurative.'" She was speaking quite seriously, with a look of bewilderment; "or I may misunderstand you painfully!"

"No, Eunice, you and I will not misunderstand each other again. For we shall speak the same language—the language of our hearts!"

"But if it was not Miss Ellery, what was it that kept you from me when you wanted to come?"

"I will tell you."

EXTENTIONS ARE LIKELY

The Review was to-day informed by Mr. J. H. Larmonth, manager of the Radial Street Railway Co., that there was nothing of a definite nature to give out in regard to the Park street line being extended south of its present terminus. Mr. Larmonth intimated, however, that the company intended taking steps with a view of making extensions.

IT WASN'T HALLEY'S COMET

Just a Liberal Mixture of Thunder, Lightning and Rain During the Night

No Halley's comet did not connect with the earth last night, as some citizens supposed on being awakened about 11.30. It was just an outbreak of lightning and thunder, but mostly thunder and there was nothing gentle about the claps. The lights went out for a few minutes and the rain came down in torrents. No damage is reported.

A GREAT NATIONAL SONG

Katherine Hale, Miss Amelia B. Warnock and J. W. Garvin Are Winning Distinction as Composers of "Canadian Flag Song"

Probably no other national song has spread so rapidly over the Dominion as the "Canadian Flag-Song." On Empire Day it was sung in many of the schools of every province.

In Massey Hall, Toronto, one thousand picked voices from the city schools sang it splendidly while in each right hand fluttered a small Union Jack.

On Victoria Day, the massed bands played the melody at the grand military review in Toronto, before General French.

On the 26th inst. a chorus of children from the Hamilton Public schools sang the song with thrilling effect at Stoney Creek, at the laying of the corner-stone, by General French, of the beautiful commemorative monument, and Miss Warnock, who was present, was almost as much honored as the general.

Mr. Garvin, who was unable to get there until after the ceremony, but on his arrival he was shown every courtesy.

Three hearty cheers were given for the Flag-Song and its composers.

The Educational Departments of Manitoba and Ontario have each asked permission to print the words and the melody in their Empire Day pamphlets for distribution in all the schools of the provinces.

Mrs Clementina Fessenden, of Hamilton, originator of Empire Day, is using her strongest influence to have the song sung, next Empire Day, in every school of the Empire and it probably will be.

Mr. Armstrong states that a point is made not to take any members who are not good citizens.

LOCAL FIRM TO GET FULL AMOUNT

Saturday's Port Hope Guide, in reporting a session of the Division Court says:—

Just to keep up the interest the old case of J. J. Turner vs. W. C. Brown came up again. It will be remembered that in the first suit Brown was ordered to pay one month's rent, $20, for the Turner house on Mill street, he having left this place before his lease expired. At the next court Mr. Turner claimed another month's rent and was given judgment, his Honor suggesting that Brown pay $30 and costs as a full settlement. Mr Brown tendered the $30 and court costs, but objected to paying the witness' fees Yesterday he was sued for the amount of gas and water accounts while in the Turner house. The judge ordered these to be paid, as well as the previous judgment of $30 and all costs. Half of this amount is to be paid by June 25th.

Look for the comet in the western sky after sunset to-night Its distance is 41,000,000 miles from the earth.

THE CHEMIST AND THE COMET'S TAIL

Shortly before it disappeared from the eastern sky in order to glow more conspicuously in the west, the tail of Halley's comet split into three parts.

Perhaps the profoundest study of the subject was made by the Russian astronomer, Bredichin, whose views are now adopted by most of the world's scientists.

Bredichin divided comets' tails into three broad classes In the first he placed those which had long, straight rays; in the second, those with curved plumes; and in the third, those which are merely short, stubby, sharply curved brushes of light. Halley's comet has passed through all of these stages at some time of its history.

A straight tail is probably composed of hydrogen, the gas with which balloons are filled.

When the sun's repulsive action is somewhat less than that required to form a long, straight tail, the curved, plume-like train, which falls in the second class, is formed. Such tails are composed of hydrocarbons, which, as the names indicates, are compounds of hydrogen and carbon, and which are chemically related to the gas burned in our kitchen stoves.

When the tail is short and brushlike, the material composing the tail must be heavier than either hydrogen or hydrogen combined with carbon. Hence, Bredichin conceives such tails to be composed of iron vapors and other metallic emanations.

This classification of Bredichin's is based on a long and painstaking study of many comets and is supported by not a little spectroscopic evidence.

However, electricity alone seems competent to explain most of the vagaries of a comet's tail, and electricity is supplemented by the pressure of the sun's own light, in the manner explained in an earlier article.

TWO PLACES WERE BROKEN INTO

Millard's Bicycle Shop Entered—Fishing Tackle Taken.

H. T. Millard's bicycle and sporting goods store, Hunter street, was broken into last night and some small bits of fishing tackle stolen. The robbery was discovered about twenty minutes to eleven by Nightwatchman Rose, who at once communicated with the police station, P.C. Meagher responding to the call.

The rear door of the premises was broken open, an iron bar on the inside being dislodged by the door being forcibly shoved against it.

To the Review this morning Mr. Millard stated he suspected the robbery was the work of boys, and that they were evidently familiar with the shop, as they knew where to locate the tackle. As not much was missing they were apparently either disturbed or became alarmed lest they should be caught.

The thieves gained an entrance by means of a window on the south side of the building.

The police have the matter in hand.

THE Y.M.C.A. AN INSTITUTION OF FAR REACHING INFLUENCE

In the National Upbuilding of Christian Young Manhood—Pulpits in City Churche Were Occupied by Association Workers Yesterday—Timely and Convincing Addresses.

The right arm of the church received a warm handshake from all the evangelical bodies of the city of Peterborough on Sunday, when their splendid cause was ably enlarged upon by speakers who knew their subject, and who illuminated the minds of the congregations with facts of the great work done.

The right arm of the church is the Y.M.C.A.—the Young Men's Christian Association—a body so widely known as to need no compliment, no eulogy.

Sir George Williams was not Sir George when many years ago he founded the Y.M.C.A.

He organized it in a little room in a city over the sea.

He had never a thought that his work would grow; never an idea that it would number in its membership millions of men.

He wanted to help the immediate vicinity.

He did not know that he was to bless the world.

So the King honored him, and he bowed the knee to rise titled.

The Y.M.C.A. in Peterborough has been erected because of that meeting in the little room.

That $650,000 raised for Y.M.C.A. work in Toronto was raised because of that meeting.

It is because of this little meeting that the churches on Sunday listened to the addresses which follow.

Mr. Copeland, provincial secretary of the Y.M.C.A., spoke in the Murray street Baptist church in the morning, and at St. Andrew's Presbyterian church at the evening service.

Mr. Copeland is not a preacher and his talks had no earmarks of a sermon.

He was terse. His sentences were to the point. He left no uncertain sound.

Mr. Copeland's parish is a wide one, the Province of Ontario. He knows no color, creed or class.

The speaker was introduced by Mr. Webb and, following are a few of his thoughts:

"Christ not only has power to heal the sick and raise the dead, but here and now, young man, young woman, He has authority over your life. He once said, "follow me," and that was to a man immersed in business.

"Our city papers do not appear to have religious editors, but the sporting editors give whole pages to sport. Is there a baseball match, a basketball game, or any other game in the category of sport, it finds a prominent place in the daily paper. No doubt the editor does not think that the average man takes any interest in religious matters, and perhaps he is right. However, 3,000,000 men in the Y.M.C.A. attended religious meetings last year in connection with the association.

"Getting into church is not only that one may get out of hell, but that he get into service.

"There are 100,000 young boys in the Y.M.C.A. in North America, and the number is growing."

"The church seems largely to have forgotten the original commission of Christ when He was in the world, the command to go out into the highway and byway and compel them to come in."

"It is not in advertising, no matter how startling and modern, that the world will be brought to Christ and the church. It is the spirit of God that will draw men."

"The Y.M.C.A. is looking after the industrial classes. It is looking after the foreigners on the Grand Trunk Pacfiic. It is extending its branches all through the U.S. navy and into Yukon.

"We speak in contempt of the immigrant. Still, I would like to know how we got here. We can't stop the foreigners from coming in, and they will marry our children. The only thing for us to do is for us to win them for Christ."

"Last year the Y.M.C.A. raised 7 million, and the year before 10 million dollars."

"The railways are taking a great interest in our work and have handed over buildings to the Y.M.C.A. for Y.M.C.A purposes, which cost all the way from $3,000 to $100,000."

"We raised $650,000 for Y.M.C.A. work, and $150,000 for Y.W.C.A. work on Toronto in 12 days."

"It is not the five or six million acres of land that are cultivated in the Northwest, but the one hundred and sixty million uncultivated. It is not the membership of the Y.M.C.A. in Peterborough or the church membership here, or throughout the world. What of the thousands outside the pale of the church and the thousands coming in every year?"

"There is always a tendency for a man to be satisfied with himself if there is the slightest reason."

"I don't know when I have been in such a crowd outside of Chicago or New York as I was last Saturday night when I walked up to the Y.M.C.A in Peterborough about half-past eight. There were hundreds and hundreds of young men on the street."

"I was going by a hotel in Toronto the other day when the bar-room door opened, and there they were lined up three deep in a bar as long as this church is wide."

"Some Christians are like rivers in the north. They freeze up at the mouth and then all over."

THE RIGHT ARM OF THE CHURCH.

"And who shall ever compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain."—Mathew 5, 41, was the text appropriate to an eloquent and convincing discourse on the necessity of self-sacrifice, that was delivered in the George street Methodist church in the morning by Mr. R. B. Nelles, general secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Ottawa.

Mr. Nelles emphasized the fact that the Christian is required to do more than simply suits his own convenience, and in carrying out his obligations to his fellow-man as God intended to him, self-sacrifice and self-denial would constantly fall to his lot.

The speaker reviewed the important offices of the Y.M.C.A. and spoke of the great number of earnest men engaged in its work. He made a strong plea for the whole-hearted co-operation of Christian men.

The Y.M.C.A. was the right arm of the church. It was an institution that offered great educational, social and physical advantages, but all of these were subservient to the essential purpose of the Y.M.C.A.—spiritual growth and development.

Mr. Nelles also spoke in St. Paul's at night.

A PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.

Ald. Turner, in an interesting address at the evening service at St. Luke's, dealt largely with the usefulness of the railroad Y.M.C.A.'s, and of the energetic and able conduct of by the railway officials.

He took his text from Matt. 25, 15: "Unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability."

The most profitable investment of the talents given us was the theme of the first part of the address. In financial investments everyone asked, "What will the profit be: how much am I to get out of it?" On that same principle municipal investments were made for fire protection, for administration of justice, for educational purposes.

These investments were wisely made. The first was for the protection of property, the second for the protection of life and the enforcement of the laws of the country, and the third for laying the foundation of the careers of the men and women of to-morrow.

The investment in the Y.M.C.A. was a particularly profitable one, as that splendid institution offered the men and youths splendid opportunities in mental, bodily and spiritual training. In striking illustration of this were the splendid results obtained in the railway Y.M.C.A.'s. The railway recognized that these institutions were the means of developing clear-minded, useful and temperate men, so essential for its special work.

A NATIONAL CHARACTER MOULDER.

Mr. G. J. Bell, a Toronto Y.M.C.A. worker, gave two broad and masterly addresses, speaking in the morning in All Saints', and in St. John's in the evening.

Mr. Bell, who spoke without a text, set forward the national influence of the Y.M.C.A., with its sister institution, the Y.W.C.A., in the building up of the manhood and womanhood of the country.

It was a matter of supreme importance that the development of the characters of young men and young women should be looked after in a critical stage of their lives.

The speaker said he had heard a great deal of St. John's in Toronto and was very glad of the opportunity of speaking in the church and of meeting the congregation, and hoped St. John's would direct its earnest attention to the promotion of the Y.M.C.A.'s work and interests.

Previous to the addresses Canon Davidson spoke eulogistically of the Y.M.C.A. and its work, and said it was a handmaiden to the church, giving facilities which the church itself did not provide.

THE IDEAL MANHOOD.

The physical director of the local association, Mr. J. J. Thompson, occupied the pulpit of Mark street Methodist in the morning, and Park street Baptist in the evening. He took as his text David's last words to his son, Solomon, 1st Kings, 2, 2: "Be thou strong, therefore and show thyself a man."

He dealt with the call of the country to every young man to be strong spiritually, mentally and physically, which is the Bible type of manhood. This the association is thoroughly equipped to develop. He went on to relate instances to show how young men are won for Christ through the physical department of the Association. He concluded by asking the men to show their practical sympathy in a practical way.

A MIGHTY AGENCY.

Mr. J. J. MacLeod, who spoke in the interests of the association in St. Andrew's church in the morning, is no stranger to Peterborough. He was the popular physical director of the local Y.M.C.A. until about six years ago. He was proud to represent the Y.M.C.A., as he believed it to be the mightiest agency in the world to-day for the development of efficient Christian manhood.

He proved by numerous facts the adaptability of the methods of the are directed to meet the needs of all classes of men. The Y.M.C.A. was not only for all men, but its efforts are directed to meet th eneeds of all the men. He referred to the recent wonderful campaign for $600,000 in Toronto, and told how willingly people responded to the call for funds. The business men of Toronto had been aroused as never before to meet the needs of their city. It would be necessary, he thought, that the citizens of Peterborough should awake as these men had done to appreciate the needs of this city before a great work could be accomplished.

This fact alone assures the public that nothing vulgar will be presented. The grand programme for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday include such artists as Conger and Odin in comedy sketch; the great Weber, impersonator and musical expert; Nelson, the well-known comedian, in clever sketch; little Long sisters in new song; songs and duets by musical vocalists; 2,000 feet of latest talking pictures. In short a carnival of fun and amusement. Prices, ground floor, 10 cents; gallery 5 cents. Don't miss the opening night. The Crystal will still give its usual programme. 3d

THE FARMERS ARE MUCH INTERESTED

Great interest is being manifested amongst the farmers in these districts adjacent to Peterborough, where it is proposed to organize the Fresh Egg Circle. The organization as commenced at the Central Smith town hall on Thursday evening now numbers 24 members. Several more have signified their intention of joining, and they have asked for another meeting to be held next Friday evening. So enthusiastic are the farmers of Central Smith over the project that they have promised the Farm and Dairy representatives, and Mr. Brown, of Montreal, to fill the hall, if they will come back for another meeting next Friday evening.

In addition to the meeting called for Pine Grove Monday evening, meetings will be held at North Monaghan Town Hall, Tuesday evening; Stewart's Union Hall, Wednesday evening; Zion, Thursday evening. Ladies are especially invited.

JURY DECIDED POSTMORTEM WOULDN'T BE NECESSARY

As Injuries Sustained by Little Mamie Feeley Were Sufficient to Cause Death—Inquest into Death of Little Girl Killed by G. T. R. Train.

The inquest into the death of Mamie Feeley the seven-year-old daughter of James Feeley, 271 Romaine street, and the victim of the fatality at the Wescott and Park street crossing of the G.T.R on Saturday noon was opened at Lang and Eano's undertaking rooms on Saturday evening at seven o'clock.

The jury was empanelled as follows:—William White, foreman; Robt. Carney, James O'Brien, John Kelleher, Richard Milburn, Frank Reynolds, John Killingbeck, Robert Watt, William O'Neill Mark Pengally, C. H. Campbell, Joseph Cairns and Joseph Collins.

The jury made an examination of the body and came to the conclusion that a post mortem wasn't necessary as the injuries sustained were sufficient to cause death. The right leg was cut off a short distance above the ankle and the wound was of such a character that it would cause death from bleeding and the fracture of the skull would also be a fatal injury.

The inquest was adjourned until Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock when it will be resumed in the city council chamber.

At this session Conductor Buller, Engine Driver Mimms and Tommy Gordon and Miss Mattie Hares, both of the latter two being eye witnesses to the fatality, will testify.

THE WOODMEN OF THE WORLD HOLD PARADE SUNDAY EVENING

That the Woodmen of the World are a thoughtful, earnest body of men was evidenced last evening at Murray St. Baptist church by the large number that turned out to listen to a decidedly elevating and instructive address delivered for their benefit by the Rev. J. R. Webb.

The reverend gentleman was listened to with close attention.

Those who were absent missed a helpful, intellectual treat.

The Woodmen paraded in a body, numbering about seventy-five, from the S.O.E. Hall, Hunter street, and occupied the front seats of the church, which were reserved for them.

Mr. Webb's text was from II. King's 6th chapter, 2nd verse: "Let us go we pray thee, into Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there where we may dwell."

There were three characteristics that every Woodman should possess, namely, ambition, co-operation and prudence.

In regard to the first-mentioned trait he said no man who has the proper matter in his cranium is satisfied to remain forever in the present. To stand still is to die. Every man should have ambition for his children, for better privileges for their advancement in life. The man who does not feel this is selfish, and it is selfishness which makes them satisfied with the present.

There is no temple that can be erected that is too good to worship in, and there is no good thing God would not have annexed by His children for the benefit of His race. Is it not a fact that the liberation of stagnant capital will be a benefit to the human race, if directed in right channels. Men should be generous. The spendthrift is more to be respected than the miser.

Man is, and should consider himself under obligation to leave this world better than when he entered it.

In dealing with co-operation, the speaker said that we are all inter-dependent. There are some things we can never do alone. The man who boasts of his independence is not a genius but a fool, and the wealthy man who undertakes a great enterprise is utterly helpless until he has the co-operation of humbler men.

The hod-carrier, as he mounts the ladder with his hundred and twenty-five pounds upon his shoulder, may have just as much sense of regality as the wealthy man who is erecting a great structure.

The onward march of civilization has demanded a co-operation in this age as never before. In closing this part of the address, Mr. Webb emphasized the need of it, and congratulated the Woodmen of the World on the promulgation of this Christian characteristic in their society.

In concluding, the speaker referred to the time that will assuredly enter into every home when troubles come, and not even fraternal societies or any earthly help is sufficient. Then is the time that we feel the need of God. If God is in our hearts we can stand against the fierce blasts of sorrow that come in the storms and stresses of life.

After the sermon Mrs. Miller gave a solo in a very acceptable manner.

STRATHS WON AND THEN LOST T.A.S. COLLECTED EIGHTEEN

West Ends Were Four Behind in Seventh of First Game But Made Winning Finish--P.A.C. Always Fighting in the Second Affair--Saturday's Programme.

'Twas the second of the schedule and the fans were almost in, almost everyone expected that the Straths would almost win. And they almost thought that Park Street would almost stave off defeat.

Almost each one in the grandstand, almost wished they had a gun when the Straths' nine kicked the bucket, after they had almost won.

Almost every West End player had almost lost heart and died, Oldham almost thought he'd beat it—it was said he almost cried.

Corkery almost made a homer; "Bat" almost annex the "steak." Thompson almost touched the comet. You could almost hear the grate.

When the game was almost over, Quinlan almost sent them straight; P.A.C. almost slam-banged them, but 'twas almost—yes, too late.

Halley's Comet, May 30, 1910.

Dear Lizzie,—Am up here with the rest of the bunch, but we expect to leave shortly and never again take another upward trip.

You will by this time have received the few particulars of Saturday's programme, but to-day I heard something which will be interesting to you.

Last evening it looked as though it might rain, and that young gent whom I was telling you about in my last note went out calling, and this is what happened:

A CLEAN PUT-OUT.

They were seated in the parlor, the light was burning dim, F. D. C. he gave his name as, and the maiden signed hers Min. She had journeyed to the ball field and had seen the play "drop," she had also seen the "blow up" and the West Ends take the top.

O, You West Enders

Now the two were strangely silent, minutes, hours passed on by; footsteps overhead resounded, both looked up, she said "Oh, my!"

He had told her how it happened—she had heard it once before; frightened glances she directed—something moved outside the door.

This fair fan could dope out ball games; she knew when good plays were made, but had not seen any bouquets thrown at her friend's brigade.

He had longed to make a home run, stab a drive just like his mates, but the fates had been against him—he opened up the gates.

If perchance with Minnie watching he could figure in an "out," she would give to him the glad mit. Hark! what was the noise about?

Angry voices came distinctly; Minnie led him to the door. Both gazed upward at the twinklers; they forgot to think of more.

Curtains moved and "pop" got closer; size nine was the boot he wore, then he stood and guessed his distance from the target at the door.

Another step and things connected, F. D. C. had gone the route; like a flash it dawned upon him, he had figured in an "out."

"Come, boys, get the game agoing," went the call across the green, everybody looked and rubbered, for the stranger could be seen. He was short and stout and husky, wouldn't touch the six-foot mark; but he nodded at the grand-stand, some one shouted, "Tommy Darke." He was spotted by an old fan, who remembered way far back, how this same short gent had won games—cleared the cushions to a sack.

He knew that the new umpire had seen twenty summers go, working sometimes with the big mit, sometimes on the infield row.

"Batter up," he bawled out loudly, West Ends scored right off the reel, Straths came in, took four off Kirnie—looked as though they might be re[illegible]

In the fourth Young Sam Ray singled; romped around and o'er the plate. In the sixth he drove in Kendrey. Then the West Ends tumbled straight.

Something happened in the seventh, Heaslip grounded, Geale, he fanned, Kirn was handed out a free pass, Gibson's hit woke up the stand. Dickie hit and two crossed over; Happy smashed one down to roam, Craig threw wild and Dickie counted; Laing hit safe and "Bryd" went home.

With the figures standing even, Kirn was jerked and Cres. went in, Straths were handed out a new brand—something like a lemon skin.

Then the Greys kept up their good work, Guerin walked and three men crossed. Then the smile from Willie's features bid farewell—his team had lost.

Strange things happen in one innings, and the Straths still had a try; Mac, the pinch, hit out a single, galloped home, the pitch went by. This was all, the game was over; aviating stunts were through; West Ends have the laugh till next time, when they'll get just what is due.

HAVELOCK JUNIORS TOOK ONLY GOAL OF LEAGUE GAME

From Our Own Correspondent.

Havelock, May 27.—'Twas on the Norwood football grounds, the same old crowd was there to see the same old Norwood team go upward in the air. Bill Hitchins was the referee, and made them keep their place, he handed out to everyone satisfaction each case. At two past seven the whistle blew, and both teams started in to do their duty, every man, and try and make a win. The game was fast, the play was clean, and each man worked real hard to make a showing for his team upon the old score card. The rooters on the outside line continually kept roaring, and called upon their favorite team to start and do some scoring. And when the Norwood team would rush and crowd up to the stakes, but forth there comes a Havelock man and through the crowd he breaks. And down along the field again the pigskin takes its way, and Norwood rooters ask their men to start and earn their pay. Then up and down along the line, the ball goes here and there, and now it ploughs along the ground, then soars into the air. Then up into the Norwood goal the ball goes swift and fast, and both teams break into the fight—there is a mighty clash. The ball goes back and forward quick, the Havelock forwards pass, they score upon a mighty drive, and you may guess the rest. Once more the ball starts on its way, and Norwood start again, determined that they'll do or die to bust or win the game. The Norwood team they rush again, the rooters yell some more, and fast against the Havelock goal the many shots do pour. But now there's just three minutes left, in which to do the trick, and if they want to win the game they must be fast and quick. With might and main they try again, but Havelock play them hard; they fail to make a mark at all upon the old score card.

This is the third game in the junior series between Norwood and Havelock. No goals were scored in the other games, but this time Havelock managed to put one between the stakes.

The teams were—

Norwood—Goal, Hawthorne; backs, Kidd, Shepherdson; halves, Dewart, Lamey, Andrews; forwards, Johnston, Graham, Lapp, Richardson, Rogers.

Havelock — Goal, Stewart; backs, Brooks, Copp; halves, Seabrooks, Easton, Kitchen; forwards, Beaver, Wicky, Watson, Warner.

The return game will take place at Havelock next Wednesday.

LEATHERLETS

The following P.A.C. players are requested to be at their ball grounds at 6.45 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for team practice:—Jack Pilling, Thompson, Gordon, Jim Pilling, Halpin, Dusty, Ted Pilling, Price, Ryan, R. Pilling, Mahoney, Simmons, Johnston and any others wishing to join in the game.

The new league umpire got in right with the fans and players alike. That little bundle has galloped around ball lots for the last twenty years or so, and his decisions were such that he will be sure of the glad hand throughout the season.

The attendance was encouraging and the ball magnates will get together to-night and arrange for the second game being called at 3.45 in the future.

The Straths certainly are handed out a liberal share of hard luck. The team worked well and the backstopping of Jack Patterson was gingery and classy. McDonald had the Westerners guessing up to the sixth, and then he was touched up just like any other pitcher will be, no matter how good he is.

Jimmy Pilling had a big day. He hit safely three times and was walked twice.

Vince Corkery's triple to left was a pretty one.

The error column shows a bunch of ovals for the T.A.S. The team played great ball.

Dyment's Horse Carries Off the King Edward Gold Cup.

Toronto, May 30.—A crowd that was almost up to the proportions of that on the opening holiday attended at Woodbine Park on Saturday, when seven races, including the King Edward Hotel Gold Cup, were decided. Though J. E. Seagram's Bouquet was held at almost prohibitive odds, John Dyment's Chief Kee romped off with the feature in easy style, the favorite getting bumped about soon after leaving the chute, but the Barrie horse finished so impressively that little doubt was left as to the best in the race.

First Race, Alexandra Purse, six furlongs, for three-year-olds and up—1st, Lovetie; 2nd, Red River; 3rd, Elfin Beau. Time 1.13.

Second Race, Hopeful Purse, 5 furlongs, for two-year-olds—1st, Planutess; 2nd, M. W. Littleton; 3rd, Rosey Posey. Time 1.01 3-5.

Third Race, Victorious Purse, one mile, for three-year-olds—1st, Merman; 2nd, Col. Ashmeade; 3rd, Responseful. Time, 1.41 3-5.

Fourth Race, King Edward Hotel Gold Cup, 1 1-4 miles, for three-year-olds and up—1st, Chief Kee; 2nd Bouquet; 3rd, Detective. Time, 2.09 1-5.

Fifth Race, Aintree Steeplechase, about two miles, for four-year-olds and up—1st, Ballacalla; 2nd Byzantine; 3rd, Lizzie Flat. Time, 4.07 1-5.

VOILE DE SOIE and Crepe de Chine Gowns for the Summer Season

BY A. T. ASHMORE.

IN planning for the summer outfit it would seem that it would be far easier to decide upon what gowns were necessary if it were definitely settled where the season was to be spent. Fashionable life at the fashionable watering places demands, for instance, an absolutely different order of gowns from the life at some fashionable summer country home locality, where, in spite of the usual routine of luncheons and dinners, there are many hours and days that really are spent quietly and where only at the end of the week is there any formal entertaining that requires elaborate toilettes.

But the American woman does not spend the summer in any one place; on the contrary, seashore and inland, mountains and plains, and, incidentally, Europe and America are, as a rule, included in the summer itinerary, requiring, as can readily be understood, an endless variety of gowns for day and evening. To carry out such a scheme implies the possession of such an income that the dress question is considered on quite a different basis from the selection of the customary summer wardrobe. The woman of to-day has no stated season of the year when she selects new gowns; she soon tires of any she buys and straightway hies herself to lay in a fresh supply, and there are always, all the year round, at the leading establishments smart gowns to be found, even at the between times, when the head of the house is abroad studying the very latest creations of the designers in Europe.

In spite of the great wealth in America and the fact that many American women buy without counting the cost, there are few among the smartest gowned who do not find it essential to select carefully and purchase prudently the summer outfit. They do not wish to be gowned too conspicuously; they insist upon being gowned correctly, pride themselves upon always having just the right gown for each and every occasion, and contend the desired result cannot be obtained by ordering recklessly.

What are the most popular fabrics of the season, is always a question of deep interest. The soft, clinging materials are so fascinatingly attractive, so peculiarly well adapted to all this season's models that naturally they challenge attention, but there are also heavier materials more closely woven that are fashionable as well and that cannot be ignored.

Voile de soie and cashmere de soie, chiffon broadcloth, liberty satin, satin charmeuse, satin crêpe de Chine—all these and many more are shown as suitable for the summer gowns. Foulard, tussah, royal pongee, rajah, in such an endless selection of color, weave and weight, are shown that it is terribly difficult to select understandingly and in order to exercise calm judgment there must be called to mind for what purpose the gown is to be worn; then it is far simpler to decide on the material. The afternoon reception gown, suitable for luncheon or card party, is this season elaborate in design, and the transparent materials are the best for it, so that voile de soie is gladly chosen.

Veiling in Varied Tones.

The veiling of one material with another, and one color with another, produces most charming effects and dressmakers vie with one another to be original in this manner. A most charming gown of figured chiffon or crêpe is veiled with a loose tunic coat or drapery of black; a fascinating snuff brown chiffon, with border of yellow roses, is veiled with a loose coat tunic of the more transparent voile de soie of the same shade, and the effect obtained by these two transparent materials, for chiffon is classed among the transparent, is fascinating to a degree.

A more elaborate style of gown or rather a gown for a more formal occasion, a dinner or the theatre is of liberty satin in a charming shade of gray. This is veiled in voile de soie a shade lighter or darker, the voile put on to form long flat pleats. The effect gained is far softer than if the entire gown were of the satin and besides is more up to date. Just here may a word of comfort be given to the forced-to-be-economical woman with a love for good clothes. Last year's gowns can be most satisfactorily remodelled this year provided they fit and hang well, for they can be literally transformed by being covered with voile de soie, or in some instances be made to look like new with the addition of a loose coat or tunic of the thin material.

The liberty satin, crêpe de Chine and the cachemire de soie gowns made on the absolutely simple draped designs are most attractive and becoming and are conspicuous for their almost exaggerated simplicity in contrast with the over-elaboration, intricate and exaggerated fashions that so challenge attention this season.

A perfect figure has every detail of its perfection exhibited in the draped gown, with long skirt and surplice-draped waist. The girdle of striped silk or satin, with its long ends finished with tassels, is not essential, but is rather a novel touch that some like and some dislike. It is not a gown suitable to every figure, and yet it is astonishing how in the hands of an expert this model can be so carried out that instead of revealing defects it conceals them and makes even a short, thick waist look well. It cannot be turned out to good advantage in any too heavy or thick goods, however, for their folds and draperies are clumsy and ungraceful.

Exquisite Draping Materials.

Cachemire de soie is a most exquisite material that is becoming more and more fashionable of late. It has been made up in three piece costumes, skirt, waist and coat to match, and for that purpose has been proved without a rival for summer wear. It comes in all grades, all designs and colors and the shades of colors are endless. In black it has a sheen and finish that make it appear like the softest satin, but with a body that the softest satin lacks and which makes it most impossible for street wear.

Just as with the cashmere of olden time is it easy to make gowns fit well when made of it, and for the half fitting coats it hangs loose and at the same time follows the lines and not the curves in a most delightfully fashionable manner.

Bands of trimming, folds, rosettes and buckles are all to be noticed in the newest gowns when not made on the plain draped lines just described. Just where shall be placed the band or fold that holds the skirt in around the ankles is most carefully studied by every dressmaker who is successful in her profession, and it is most remarkable what a different effect is at once obtained by an inch or two in the placing. To enable the wearer of the skirt to take a long step, not too long, and at the same time not to look as though she were hobbled, certainly requires artistic (?) talent and rare skill, but the wonderful feat is accomplished sometimes and the fashion still reigns. Unfortunately—or is it fortunately?—there are so many who fail dismally in the attempt that the fashion will undoubtedly come to a violent end before long.

PRACTICAL IDEAS FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER.

IS the one piece or the two piece gown the more fashionable is a vital question of the moment, and especially for the woman who cannot order recklessly the clothes she wants but who must plan carefully and direct the less expensive dressmaker or seamstress in the way she should go. Both styles are fashionable this season, but when the two piece model is chosen it must be so made that it will look as though it were one piece, even when the skirt is separate from the waist. First must the lining at the waist be most carefully fitted, then must the material be draped, for that is how the waist of to-day is made; then must the skirt be fitted and hung, sewed upon the waist lining, and where it joins the material of the waist there must be folds of the material or a satin or velvet belt be put on to hide the joining. It is quite possible for a clever seamstress to finish the skirt where it joins the waist so neatly that it will look as though there were just the smallest edge of a fold.

Cloth jackets and coats are almost too difficult for home dressmaking, but the rule does not apply to pongee, satin or linen. None of these materials require the pressing and finishing that only the tailor understands how to bestow upon the heavier fabrics, and this season there are so many smart models in outer garments that can be copied that even a small allowance for dress will permit of more than one attractive pongee, linen or even crêpe de Chine gown with coat to match.

THE BISHOP'S OATH PRONOUNCED A FORGERY

In Saturday's issue of the Daily Review was printed a copy of the King's coronation oath, the oath said to be taken by the bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec, and a copy of the Princess Ena's renunciation. These were printed as a matter of general news, it being now ten years since these matters were before the people on the occasion of the crowning of King Edward. Rev. Dr. O'Brien, of the Church of the Sacred Heart, has handed the Review a letter, which we print below, and stating that the form of oath ascribed as used by bishops of his church, to be a forgery. These oaths, as printed, have been circulated over the province, in newspapers, and with a form of petition attached, praying that the form of the King's oath be not altered. Rev. Dr. O'Brien says that it is not fair to those of the Catholic faith to ascribe to them even an implied assent that the form of oath of the bishops is a true form, but that on the contrary, it is a forgery, and in any event utterly disowned by his church.

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—In your issue of Saturday last you printed on your first page what purports to be the oath taken by the "Roman Catholic Bishops in the Province of Quebec, a part of the British Empire."

You did not state that you clipped this from any yellow journal; you gave it as a news item of your own, and hence you must take the responsibility of it.

Will you therefore be good enough to answer the following in to-night's Review?—

In what Roman Catholic ceremonial or Pontifical did you find such an oath?

On what page and by whom printed?

What Roman Catholic Bishop authorized the printing or publication of such ceremonial or Pontifical?

If you can prove that the Roman Catholic Bishops in Quebec or any where else, subscribe to an oath such as you published, I shall pay one hundred dollars to any charity in Peterborough you name.

Awaiting your reply,
I am, respectfully yours,
M. J. O'BRIEN.

Below we print a copy of the oath taken by the bishops of the Catholic Church at their consecration, and which is copied from an authorized text of the Roman Pontifical, which is in general use throughout the Catholic world, and certainly in use in the Province of Quebec:

OATH TAKEN BY A BISHOP OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

J. N——, elected to the Church of N——, from this hour hence forward will be obedient to Blessed Peter the Apostle, and to the Holy Roman Church, and to our Holy Father Pope N—— and to his successors canonically elected. I will assist them to retain and to defend the Roman Papacy without detriment to my order. I shall take care to preserve, to defend, increase and promote the rights, honors, privileges and authority of the holy Roman Church, of our lord the Pope, and of his aforesaid successors. I shall observe with all my strength and shall cause to be observed by others, the rules of the holy fathers, the apostolical decrees, ordinances or dispositions, reservations, provisions and mandates. I shall come when called to a Synod, unless prevented by a canonical impediment. I shall make personally the visit ad limina apostolorum every three years and I shall render to our Holy Father Pope N——, and to his aforesaid successors an account of my whole pastoral office, and of all things pertaining in any manner whatsoever to the state of my church, to the discipline of the clergy and the people, and finally to the salvation of the souls which are entrusted to me; and in turn I shall receive humbly the apostolic mandates and execute them as diligently as possible. But if I shall be detained by legitimate impediment, I shall fulfil all the aforesaid things through a designated delegate having a special mandate for this purpose, a priest of my diocese, or through some other secular or regular priest of known probity and religion, fully informed concerning the above named things. I shall not sell nor give nor mortgage the possessions belonging to my mensa, nor shall I enfeoff them anew or alienate them in any manner, even with the consent of the chapter of my church without consulting the Roman Pontiff. And if through me any such alienation shall occur, I wish by the very fact, to incur the punishments contained in the constitution published concerning this matter. So help me God and these Holy Gospels of God.

THE DOG WAS TOO UNEASY

Two men in a boat, to say nothing of the dog, which should be given recognition, however, as it was the moving force in the accident. That's the synopsis of an interesting and original deluge on the Otonabee on Saturday.

The actors in this little serio-comedy were Messrs. Max Dobbin, assistant sporting editor of the Mail and Empire; Mr. Stanley Madill and "Pat," Mr. Dobbin's dog. "Pat," who is essentially a launch dog, by reason of his bringing up, indulged in runabout liberties in the tippy canoe that he would have taken in the family tug with the result that the boat capsized and everybody had to take a bath.

Neither the dog nor the paddlers suffered anything more serious than the inconvenience that would naturally result from such a calamity.

RADIANT HAIR

New York Society Women's Hair Matched Only by Parisians

While much attention is given to choicest gowns by New York society women, the prevalent fad just now is the care of the hair.

For many years the clever women of Paris have been famed for the magnificent beauty of their hair.

"Glorious hair," a Virginian calls it; radiant and luxuriant that it not only attracts, but fascinates and compels unstinted attention.

But now that the elite of New York ever anxious to improve their beauty, have learned that Parisian Sage, a remarkable and almost marvellous hair nourisher and beautifier, is almost entirely responsible for the charming hair of the ladies of France, the demand for it has become enormous.

Parisian Sage is now sold all over Canada and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill, who is glad to guarantee it to eradicate dandruff, stop falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back. Large bottle 50 cents.

IS A SPEAKER OF MAGNETIC ADDRESS

Mr. Herbert Booth, son of General Booth, spoke in the George street Methodist church on Sunday night.

His text was taken from the last verse in the Bible, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

The sermon was a striking one. Had Mr. Booth been an actor he would have been a powerful figure on the stage.

He is a powerful preacher instead, Magnetic, humorous, swaying his audience at will.

State Senator Indicted.

Springfield, Ill., May 30.—Within a few hours after U. S. Senator Lorimer's speech at Washington, State Senator John Broderick, a leading Chicago Democrat, was indicted on a bribery charge by the grand jury.

Broderick's indictment was the direct result of a confession made to the grand jury by State Senator D. W. Holtslaw of Iuka, Ill., who says Broderick paid him $2,500 to vote for Lorimer for Senator.

Stole Brass From Arsenal.

Quebec, May 30.—For some time past pieces of brass have been disappearing from the shops of the Dominion arsenal, and no account made of their disposition. Two employes named Bedard and Rainville were arrested yesterday morning and brought before Judge Langelier, when they pleaded guilty to the theft of the brass and were given eight days in jail.

Deckhand Terribly Injured.

St. Catharines, May 30.—As the steamer City of Ottawa was tying up to the dock at Port Dalhousie Saturday afternoon, a young man, J. Murray, of Brockton, Mass., was attending to the snubbing line on the steamer, when his leg was caught in a twist of the line and terribly crushed. His leg was amputated at the knee.

Alleges Masonic Conspiracy.

Montreal, May 30.—There is a good deal of excitement here among the French Masonic fraternity over an alleged exposure by a strong clerical champion, A. J. Lemieux, who is a contributor to La Croix, an advanced anti-Masonic sheet.

There is a branch of the Grand Orient here, called The Emancipation, the membership being 125. It appears that the anti-Masonic adherents gained access to the ante-room of the lodge and La Croix publication gives a report of what took place at six meetings in question, the details being highly interesting.

Mr. Lemieux, who, by the way, is a Quebec man and bears no relationship to the Postmaster-General, invites judicial proceedings, saying that a greater amount of interest will be worthcoming.

Amongst those named are members of the Legislature and the House of Commons. One of the latter, however, was struck from the list because he had failed to pay his dues. There are high officials, and, in fact, French-Canadians belonging to all classes of society, chiefly, however, drawn from the better classes. The reports of the several meetings go to show that The Emancipation had already gained a foothold in the City Council, and was attempting to secure control of the legislative bodies and the newspapers of the city and province.

C.P.R. Telegraph Earnings.

Montreal, May 30.—The gross earnings of the C.P.R. Telegraph Co. for April were $7,985,250, the working expenses $5,004,119, and the net profits were $2,143,508, and for the ten months ended April 30, 1910, the figures are as follows: Gross earnings $77,803,553, working expenses $49,237,782, net profits $28,565,776.

The increase in net profits over the same period last year for April, is $837,504, and for the ten months ended April 30, $9,425,489.

Dropped Dead.

Berlin, May 30.—Friday evening, Thomas Tracey, turnkey at the county jail, was returning from Berlin-Guelph baseball game and had gone into a cigar store. He spoke a few words with the clerk and dropped to the floor, death being instantaneous. Heart failure was the cause. He was one of the oldest turnkeys in the province, being appointed in August, 1886. He was in his 55th year. He is survived by a widow and an adopted daughter.

Child Killed.

Peterboro, May 30.—An inquest into the death of two-year-old Mamie Fealy, killed by the G.T.R. train at the Park and Wessett streets crossing on Saturday, was opened before Coroner Dr. Gray. A fracture of the skull and the amputation of the right leg by the train caused death. The inquest was adjourned until Tuesday night.

Canadian Salmon In Britain.

London, May 30.—Twenty thousand tons of British Columbia salmon are now in London. It is anticipated that the present enterprise, engineered by the Fishing Syndicate, Ltd., of British Columbia, will create a revolution of the salman trade in this country.

To Do Business In Calgary.

London, May 30.—The Price Jones Canada, Limited, has been formed, with a capital of $500,000. It will open for business at Calgary; 70,000 six per cent. preference shares are offered.

The C.P.R. will reconstruct the Lachine bridge, which was finished in 1884 and cost nearly $3,000,000.

CRAWFORD IN KILTS.

The Novelist's Remark When He Saw Himself as a Child.

One of the best known guides in the capitol at Washington used to be Colonel Jasper E. Snow, formerly a Kansas City lawyer, who always sat in Republican conventions and voted for Blaine as long as there was a Blaine to vote for.

Colonel Snow used to tell this little story of the late Marion Crawford.

He had met Mr. Crawford in Florence, Italy, and when the novelist came to Washington Colonel Snow was the first person who showed him the doors made by the novelist's father, Thomas Crawford.

These are the senate bronze doors on the eastern portico. They represent scenes connected with the Revolution and the founding of the government.

The panel representing Washington's reception at Trenton when on his way to his inauguration in New York contains among the populace portrait figures of the sculptor, his wife, his three children and Randolph Rogers, the sculptor of the main doors of the capitol.

The novelist, who had never seen the doors before, quickly identified his mother and father.

"Yes," said he, "mother used to wear her hair just like that."

Then, gazing at the largest child, a Fauntleroyish figure in kilt, with long, flowing hair, he added speculatively:

"But I wonder if I ever really did look like that."

A DUCK HARD TO KILL.

The Screaming Walloon Is Something of a Diver Too.

The screaming walloon is a hard duck to kill. Its hide is very tough and is thickly covered with feathers and down. Besides, the bird is a great diver, one of the kind that used to "dive at the flash" when hunted with the old arm that flashed when fired. It is of very little value for table use, being so tough. The only way to manage it at all is to skin it and parboil it in a big pot with plenty of water. The negroes make caps of walloon skins.

"They are great ducks for diving," says a well known Tred Avon river progger. "They can dive quicker, go down deeper, remain under water longer and come up farther away than any other duck that frequents our waters. I remember once I succeeded in killing a walloon, and, being short of game for the table, I determined to cook my bird. I got a negro to skin it, giving him the hide for his trouble. After being cleaned we put it in a great pot full of water and under it kindled a hot fire. After awhile I wanted to see how the cooking of my duck progressed and lifted the top off the boiling pot, but there was so much steam escaping I could not see into the pot and struck a match over it. The blamed walloon, sir, dived at the flash of the match. It disappeared and has never been seen since."

Found Favorable Route.

Port Arthur, May 30.—The C.N.R. survey party locating the proposed connecting link between the lake head and the clay belt, north of Nepigon, through which the line is to continue to Sudbury, have worked back to Current River. From all accounts the engineers found a very satisfactory route, with a grade of four-tenths, which is regarded as very favorable, considering the character of the country, and will allow of heavy hauls. Between Port Arthur and the head of Thunder Bay the line is located quite near the shore.

Burglars at Kingston.

Kingston, May 30.—Local residences have been entered by house-breakers. In one house money was taken; in another the burglar was interrupted in his search and escaped empty-handed. In both places clues were left behind, on which the police are working. The man of the house in one case jumped from bed and gave chase, but the man escaped. In making his exit from the house the burglar left behind him a number seven kid boot, which would indicate that he was of rather small stature.

Ambulance Driver Killed.

Buffalo, May 30.—Harvey Bradden, 45 years old, driver of the homeopathic ambulance, was killed Saturday night in a collision between his vehicle and a street car. Bradden was on his way from the barn to the hospital to get surgeons in response to a hurry call when the accident occurred.

He had been ill recently with bronchitis and la grippe. He leaves a widow. No inquest will be held.

Broke Up Cocking-Main.

Ottawa, May 30.—The Dominion police yesterday broke up a big cocking-main near Chelsea, Que., on the Gatineau River. When the police arrived on the scene there were some hundreds of men present, and the birds were busy executing one another. The names of a number of the spectators were secured, and the birds which remained alive were taken to Hull, where the court proceedings will be held.

Two Killed.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., May 30.—Two passengers were killed and ten injured when an accommodation train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad jumped a switch at Stull, Pa.

It is a Real Pleasure

To us to hear the many kindly appreciative remarks which come to us daily from wearers of the modern glasses which we are now supplying. They are certainly the finest ever produced, and they recommend themselves by whomsoever used. Mr. Browett, Optical Specialist, makes a most thorough examination of the eyes, and is most careful of the adjustment, so that in every particular they are made to suit the exact needs of each eye, and the facial features of the wearer. In fact these glasses are useless unless the examiner has had sufficient experience in refracting and adapting. Accuracy, Suitability and Best Value are foundation principles upon which our Optical Business grows.

SOUTH AFRICA UNITED; THIS IS NATAL DAY OF NEW CONFEDERATION

Premier Louis Botha Chooses His Cabinet From Various Provinces Making up the New Imperial Dominion Botha Sends Out a Message.

Cape Town, May 31—(C.A.P. Cable.)—To-day the eighth anniversary of the conclusion of peace at Vereeniging, has been chosen for South Africa's Natal Day. Royal proclamation will be made; the Act of Union will come into force, and the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, the Transvaal and the Orange River Colony will be united in legislative union under one Government.

Premier Botha's Cabinet for the Confederation of South Africa is as follows: Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture, Rt. Hon. Louis Botha; Minister of Railways, Hon. J. W. Sauer; Minister of Education, Hon. S. Malan; Minister of Finance, Hon. H. C. Hull; Minister of Native Affairs, Hon. H. Burton; Minister of Lands and Irrigation, Hon. A. Fischer; Minister of Public Works, Posts and Telegraphs, Hon. W. P. Graaff; Minister of Trade and Commerce, Hon. F. R. Moore; Minister of Justice, Hon. J. B. Hertzog; Minister without portfolio, Hon. Mr. Gubbins; Minister of Internal Affairs and Defence, Hon. Mr. South.

Botha was formerly Premier of the Transvaal; Sauer was Commissioner of Public Works in Cape Colony; Graaff was in the Cape Colony Cabinet without portfolio; Hull was Treasurer in the Transvaal; Moore was Premier of Natal; Gubbins was Colonial Secretary and Minister of Education for Natal; Fischer was Premier of Orange River Colony; Burton was Attorney-General in Cape Colony; Hertzog was Attorney-General in Orange River Colony; Malan was Secretary of Agriculture in Cape Colony.

Gen. Botha has sent the following natal day message to The Cape Times: "We rejoice that the union has become an acomplished fact. May we be a united people, with hearts united as well as lands, as a peaceful and progressive portion of the Empire."

The Duke of Connaught will open the union Parliament. The Johannesburg Despatch states that great preparations have been made to celebrate the union day all along the reef. There will be a united service of thanksgiving in the market square, the English and Dutch churches of all denominations participating.

This sympathetic attitude of the people throughout the union augurs well for the success of the Botha Cabinet, which expects a majority in the 20 elections, which will be completed in October.

MRS. B. C. HYDE.

COLONEL THOMAS H. SWOPE.

DR. B. C. HYDE.

A despatch from Kansas City says: Dr. B. C. Hyde, who was convicted of the murder of Colonel Thomas H. Swope and sentenced to death, will appeal his case and seek a new trial. His wife is prostrated over her husband's conviction and swears that her husband is innocent of any crime. Dr. Hyde is confident that he will be granted a second trial and is also sure that he will be acquitted.

CURTISS PLANS LONGER FLIGHT NEW YORK TO WASHINGTON

Aviator Who Won The New York World Prize on Sunday by Going 150 Miles, Now Wants to Fly to the Capital and Back.

New York, May 31.—Glenn H. Curtiss, who steered his areoplane from Albany to this city Sunday morning, suggested yesterday that an ideal route for another test would be from here to Washington, a distance of 235 miles, or possibly there and back again, with only enough stops to replenish the store of gasoline.

Such a course, he said, would be more difficult than the trip from Albany to New York, though the air currents would probably be less dangerous. The difficulties that he anticipates are in the heavily-wooded land and the low-lying rivers with high banks, from which he would expect sudden and varying currents, which would try the skill of an aviator.

"If someone offered a prize for the trip to Washington, it might afford a good chance for a race," he said.

"Between here and Washington there are many towns and cities. The route should be chosen along the line of the railroad. In considering a route, one is immediately struck with the many excellent landing places. There are several race tracks, for instance, between here and there, the old Pimlico race track, just outside of Baltimore, is a broad space, enclosed so as to keep the crowds back should an aviator land there, and, of course, there is the Binnings race track, just outside of Washington, or I might land on the White House grounds."

Mr. Curtiss was asked what, in his opinion, would be a fair number of stops between here and Washington, should that course be chosen for a flight or a race.

"Well, at a rough guess, I should say that three stops would not be unreasonable," he replied.

GUILTY OF CONSPIRACY

Toronto, May 31.—"We find the prisoners guilty with a strong recommendation to mercy for Robertson," reported the foreman of the jury in the sessions yesterday afternoon, in returning the verdict in the case of Joseph Gurofsky, Athol G. Robertson and Milton W. De Lhorbe, charged with conspiracy to defraud in connection with the flotation of the Canadian Eatables Co.

Immediately on the return of the verdict, Mr. Hodgins, partner of Mr. Dewart, counsel for De Lhorbe, and W. A. Henderson, counsel for Gurofsky, asked for a polling of the jury on the seven different counts in the indictment, and every juror answered "guilty" to each. Bail was refused the prisoners.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN CANADA

London, May 31.—At the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland Dr. Norman Macleod claimed that no finer work was being done than by the Presbyterian Church in Canada in the far west. He appealed for further help from Scotland.

Lord Balfour of Burleigh agreed, and said that the work of Presbyterian Church in Canada was worthy of the Scottish race. What was now spent in Canada would be repaid a thousandfold by the loyalty of a great people, who would become one of the greatest nations of the world.

CONFERENCE ON EMIGRATION

London, May 31.—The conference convened by the Royal Colonial Institute opened yesterday.

Among the subjects submitted by the institute for discussion was the possibility of some measure of co-operation among the emigration societies, the possibility of utilizing the labor exchanges for emigration, and the suggestion that the Government call a subsidiary conference for the formulation of proposals for submission to the Imperial Conference in 1911.

HUGE ROCK IN THE CHANNEL

Montreal, May 31.—The steamship Crown of Castile, inward bound from the West Indies, came slowly into port last night and reported having struck a huge rock in the Cap a la Roche channel on Saturday night. The shock made the ship tremble from stem to stern, and the pumps were immediately started.

The boat will be surveyed and a strict investigation held, as the accident occurred at the point where the passenger liner Grampian grounded three weeks ago.

Thomas Robb, manager of the Shipping Federation, left for Ottawa last night to urge upon Mr. Brodeur the necessity of making this portion of the channel absolutely safe.

Cap a la Roche is thirty miles above Quebec, and has always been the most dangerous spot in the St. Lawrence.

Maybe It's a Present.

Montreal, May 31.—With respect to the report that the C.P.R. has bought the Washington County Railway in Maine, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy says this is a case of some one buying a railway for the C.P.R. without consulting the company.

Neck Broken by Fall.

Kingston, May 31.—William McAdoo, a farmer living at Dufferin, was killed last evening at Barriefield, while driving home from the city. He was thrown off his wagon while racing his horses. His neck was broken by the fall.

NOTE IN AN ASH BARREL

Hamilton, May 31.—The finding of a note in an ash barrel in front of Alf. Wright's hardware store on North James street yesterday afternoon has given the police reason to believe that there was a suicide in the bay. The note was signed "E.M.C.L." and read: "To whom it may concern: You will find my body in the bay near the ferry dock." On the back of the note was written: "My name you will find on me." The police received the note at 7 o'clock, and it was too late to do anything last night. They have no idea who the writer of the note was, but they are dragging the bay near the ferry dock this morning.

PLUVIOSE'S HULL WAS CRUSHED

Calais, May 31.—Inspection of the sunken Pluviose, which went down in collision with the channel steamer Pas de Calais last Thursday, shows conclusively that the hull of the submarine was crushed, and that all the members of the crew, which totalled 27 men, were drowned.

The heavy undertow and the great depth at which the wreck lies are retarding the operations of the divers, who are only able to work two hours each tide. It has been found impossible to raise the sunken craft to the surface, so the submarine will be attached by chains, after which, at high tide, she will be towed in near shore until shallow water is reached. The work of getting her in shore will probably take ten days.

GIRL'S BODY WAS FOUND

Louisville, Ky., May 31.—With the finding yesterday of her mutilated and decomposed body in an old cistern under one of the parish houses of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, part of the mystery surrounding the disappearance on Dec. 8, 1909, of Alma Kellifer, eight years old, daughter of Fred L. Kellifer, was solved.

To clear the identity of the slayer, the police are searching for Joseph Wendling, formerly janitor of St. John's Church. He has been missing since Jan. 14.

BODY IDENTIFIED BY TATTOO MARKS

Port Arthur, May 31.—Identified by a wife's description of tattoo marks, the body of a man found a few days ago beside the track at Nipigon, has been shown to be that of Thomas Johnson of Montreal. Upon the finding of the body there was nothing on it by which it could be identified, but a letter of enquiry to the town clerk of Nipigon, from Mrs. Johnson, in Montreal, established identity. The man's back was broken, his foot crushed and scalp torn off. He is believed to have fallen off a train.

COOK IS NOW IN SCOTLAND

New York, May 31.—The American says: The mystery of the whereabouts of Dr. Fred. A. Cook was solved Monday night. He is in Scotland, preparing for a trip to Etah, whence he plans to bring back his records of the discovery of the North Pole and his instruments which are cached there. He also intends to bring back the two Eskimos who accompanied him on his dash to the Pole, and with them an interpreter in the person of the Eskimo boy, Mene, who recently returned to Etah from New York.

FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED

Calgary, May 31.—That Thomas White, whose body was found on the trail near the Sarcee reservation on Monday, met with foul play, was the opinion of Coroner Dr. Sanson. A telephone message was received at the mounted police barracks on Saturday night, stating that there was a dead body on the reservation trail, but the man who telephoned would not give his name. Dr. Sanson went to the place designated and could not find the corpse. He went back Sunday afternoon and located it and brought it to the city.

FOUR ARRESTS HAVE BEEN MADE

St. Thomas, May 31.—James Kelburn, George Force, Mrs. Sarah Allen and Mrs. Irene Johnson, four of the companions of Richard Rock on the night preceding the finding of Rock's body beneath the Wabash Railway bridge, Friday, May 20, were arrested yesterday.

At the inquest they admitted participating in a row, following a drunken carousal, and it is alleged that Rock was struck by Kelburn and afterwards left by the rest of the party while hunting for his cap.

CANADA CABLED CONGRATULATIONS

Ottawa, May 31.—The following cablegram was yesterday despatched by F. C. T. O'Hara, Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce. H. R. Pousette, Canadian trade commissioner to Natal:

"The school children of the Dominion of Canada, of all classes and creeds, of British and French extraction, will unite to-morrow, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, a distance of over 3,000 miles, in honoring the school children of British South Africa by flying the flag in celebration of the first natal day of United South Africa. It is hoped that the school children of South Africa, both Boer and Briton, will accede this as a mark of love and affection from their brothers and sisters across the seas."

AN ENGINEER WITH A RECORD

Cornwall, May 31.—One of the oldest locomotive engineers in Canada, Robert Witherspoon, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, died here yesterday, aged 77 years. Mr. Witherspoon has had the privilege of holding the throttle of two royal trains, one carrying the late Queen Victoria from London to Cambridge, England, and the other when the late King Edward, then Prince of Wales, traveled from Montreal to Sherbrooke in 1860. He was also in charge of the first passenger train that pulled out of Montreal for Toronto on Oct. 6, 1856, and was engineer of the first train to carry headlights.

SHOT WIFE AND PRIEST

St. Paul, Minn., May 31.—P. J. Gibbons, the commission man, Monday night, shot and killed his wife in their home in St. Paul, and later shot Father A. J. Walsh, the young pastor of St. Augustine's Catholic Church.

"I knew her treachery for more than a year, but said nothing," he said yesterday. "She suspected I knew. We lived that way until to-day—for me a hell on earth, for her I don't know, and she can't tell. It is all over now."

A Fatal Mistake.

Atwood, May 31.—Mrs. Samuel Love, living on the 12th concession of Elma, a short distance from Atwood, died suddenly in bed early yesterday morning, caused by medicine which was given by her husband while she was suffering from rheumatism, supposed to be the same as the doctor gave her.

Dr. James Bertillon, of Paris, now argues that marriage not only promotes longevity but is a preventative of crime.

IS AFRAID OF TROUBLE

Chief Constable Hurries to Superior Junction With Men.

Port Arthur, May 31.—Fearing riot and bloodshed among the men employed at the railway construction camp, near Superior Junction, Dominion Commission Police Commissioner Quibble arranged last night to leave for there to-day, together with four regular constables, and eight other men, who will be sworn in as specials.

The trouble is a continuation of the quarrel that broke out Sunday, and which included the shooting of the young Italian laborer, Frank Duptiglires, for which Leon Dobbs, cook at the camp, is now in Port Arthur jail awaiting hearing. Upon the shooting of the young Italian, his fellow-countrymen in the camp because very angry and made an attempt to administer punishment themselves upon Dobbs, but with the use of revolver and the aid of others he succeeded in keeping them off until he surrendered to Constable Hubert, who arrived shortly after.

As Hubert was taking Dobbs on to the train the Italians made a demonstration, throwing rocks and gravel through the windows. It is expected that they will attempt to vent their anger upon the men who protected Dobbs, and that open war may break out any moment, if not done so already. The shooting Sunday, which is charged against Dobbs, is said to have been caused by a quarrel which started when Dobbs, as cook, told the Italian he was at his wrong table. The victim was shot in the groin and died that evening in the hospital at the junction.

FRACTURED HER SKULL

Wingham, May 31.—While driving into this town on their way to church Miss Killpatrick, school teacher, and Miss Beecroft of East Wawanosh, sustained very serious injuries in a runaway accident, caused by the breaking of the horse's bit in going down a hill. The former jumped, alighting on her head, sustaining a fracture of the skull, while the latter suffered a broken limb and dislocated ankle.

Iron Works Gutted.

Amherst, N.S., May 31.—Fire broke out at midnight last night in the works of the Malleable Iron Co., Ltd., this city. The building, which is of brick, was badly gutted. The loss will be in the vicinity of $1,000. About six months ago this concern was taken over by the Canadian Car Co. and since then work has been very brisk, 100 men being steadily employed.

OBJECT TO BEER ADS

Calgary, May 31.—On Calgary's street car tickets is an advertisement for a certain brand of beer. At a meeting of Hillcrest Presbyterian Church, the congregation passed a resolution asking the city commissioners to burn the whole issue. The Y.M.C.A. also deprecated the plan of the city to make money and asks the commissioners not to do it again.

Mayor Jamieson and Commissioner Charles are not opposed to this method of raising money for the city, but the third, Commissioner Graves, is most antagonistic to it.

PROCURED YOUNG GIRLS

Philadelphia, Pa., May 31.—Two young girls were the principal witnesses here yesterday against Henry Northstein, aged 35 years, who was committed to prison without bail by a magistrate charged with harboring minors for improper purposes. The girls, Lena Stewart, 14 years old, and Ruth Morris, 15 years, testified that they had been accosted by a woman on the streets, who told them they would have a good home if they went to Northstein's house. The girls said they saw the prisoner give $2 to the woman, who took them to the man's place.

BUILT ON DISCIPLINE.

Big Department Stores Are Managed Like an Army.

"This is like an army," the manager explained when I went to him to ascertain by what system he handled the big department store. "The assistant managers are the generals, the department heads the colonels, the floorwalkers majors, and so on down the line. Only matters which are out of the ordinary routine are brought to the commander in chief.

"The organization is built on discipline. Each individual knows what work he has to do, and if he fails the failure reacts directly upon him. Thus each in turn is responsible to the one above him until the responsibility reaches this office. In the final analysis I am responsible to the firm. If a girl ties a bundle wrong or there is a dispute with a customer I am directly responsible, although I have probably known nothing of the incident. I pass the actual administration of authority and responsibility right down the line until the person who is at fault feels it personally. Doubtless hundreds of things happen in this store every day of which I have no knowledge, and I don't need to know about them. So long as the man to whom I have delegated the authority delegates it in turn to some one who knows how to use it properly there is no reason why I should interfere.

"This is the way it should be. I should not consider that we had an effective system if it were otherwise. A system must be so perfectly organized and every man must know and live up to his responsibilities so sincerely that I could walk out of this office today and not return for six months."—Interview With Manager of New York Store in Bookkeeper.

Eating Away an Island.

Strength is not a thing usually connected with maidenhair fern, yet if its roots have not sufficient room they will break the pot in which the plant grows. Blades of grass will force the curbstones between which they spring up out of their place, and in a single night a crop of small mushrooms have lifted a large stone. Indeed, plants have been known to break the hardest rocks. The island of Aldabra, to the northwest of Madagascar, is becoming smaller and smaller through the action of the mangroves that grow along the foot of the cliffs. They eat their way into the rock in all directions, and into the gaps thus formed the waves force their way. In time they will probably reduce the island to pieces.—London Globe.

Hamburg, Germany, has an eating house made of paper. Its walls are composed of a double layer of paper stretched on frames and impregnated with a fire and water proof solution.

BOTH THE BY-LAWS WERE CARRIED

Vote Was Decidedly Favorable to Hamilton Assessment and South End Sewage By-law for $30000—Former Measure Had Majority in Every Division—How the Vote Stood.

A solid expression of opinion in favor of the by-law to sanction the expenditure of $30,000 for sewage facilities in the south-western portion of the city and for the annual taxation of the Wm Hamilton Mfg. Co. for a period of ten years on a fixed assessment of $10,000 a year was given yesterday by the freeholders of the city of Peterborough when both measures were carried by substantial majorities. The vote in favor of the Hamilton by-law was a particularly heavy one, the by-law being carried by a majority of 451. The company had twenty-five or thirty men actively engaged in the interests of getting a large vote, naturally seeing that nothing was left undone towards having the measure carried 567 votes were cast for it and 116 against it. In all polling divisions it received a majority. The total vote on the Hamilton by-law was 683.

On the sewage by-law there was a vote of 669, fourteen fewer voters marking their ballots for or against it than in the case of the other measure.

In divisions 13 and 14, Ashburnham town hall, the vote was 31 to 59 against the by-law and in division 9, Routley's store, Park street, the vote was an even break—31 for and 31 against.

The voting was not very heavy, but was as large as it usually is when bylaws are before the ratepayers.

The vote on both by-laws in the various divisions was as follows;

FIRST TRIP PASSENGER ON THE ROYAL GEORGE

Mr. W. McIlroy, with a party of like officials, were given a great treat last Wednesday, when they went to Montreal on a special car of the Canadian Northern Railway, which was attached to the local C.P.R. passenger. Reaching there, the party inspected the "Royal George," one of the two new steamships which the Canadian Northern has had built, and are now giving a service between Montreal and Liverpool. The other boat is "Royal Edward." The party went on board the "Royal George," it being the initial trip, and sailed to Quebec, making the return trip home in their special car.

An attractive booklet with information regarding the Atlantic Royals may be obtained from Mr. McIlroy, and it will provide interesting reading. The two Royals are triple-screw turbine steamers, and fitted up in a luxurious manner.

The booklet says: "Imagine the most complete, the most nobly furnished hotel you have ever seen. Apply the conditions of its splendor to the limitations imposed on the cleverest ship-builder, and you have still fallen short of the charm which fits the "Royal George" and the "Royal Edward" like a garment."

Ottawa, May 31.—In view of the adverse report on the ozone water purification system, as tried at Lindsay, it is improbable that Ottawa will now have anything to do with the system. THE VOTE YESTERDAY

It is gratifying to all those interested in the upbuilding of the city that the by-laws submitted yesterday carried. As is well known one by-law was to fix the assessment on the William Hamilton Company's property at $10,000 for ten years and the other to spend $30,000 for the construction of a sewage and drainage system for the south-western part of the city.

Both objects are worthy of the commendation they received. Factories are necessary if a city is to be a prosperous one and the William Hamilton Company is a going concern that has a bright outlook, and at the present time is employing about 100 men, most of whom are skilled mechanics. That the city voted to spend $30,000 for sewage and drainage construction is an acknowledgement that there is need for this work, and a mark of confidence in the discretion of the Board of Works.

Factories spell prosperity and correct sanitary conditions go a long way towards abounding health so necessary in these strenuous times.

HEROES EVERYWHERE

A few days ago, in Lake Huron, the Frank H. Goodyear, a grain carrying craft, was rammed by another boat and sank in a few minutes. Most of the crew made a mad rush for the life boats and life preservers. There was one man, however, that stuck to his post, an engineer. He died like the rest, but he died a hero—unknown, unsung.

There are heroes in every city, great or small, and there are few hamlets so obscure as to be without them.

He is a hero who rises early, goes to work quietly day after day, keeping up the home, paying off the mortgage, educating the family and taking the part of a good citizen, shouldering his responsibility like a man. He may not be polished, he may not know history, ancient or modern, but he is a hero just the same. His work may be arduous, he may be an engineer, a fireman, brakeman, a conductor, he may be a moulder or mechanic in the shop. We seldom read his name unless there is a collision or an accident and then we know it, and all the particulars.

And what heroine more noble would one wish than the mother, the queen of the home, whose vision is bounded by the next house, whose routine is the washing of the dishes, the cooking the meals, the scrubbing and ironing and sweeping, day in day out, week in and out, month after month, ever the same old task? So she rears her children without public notice, a quiet heroine.

WHO GOT THE MONEY?

One of the scandals unearthed during the session was the way in which the St. Peter's Indian band was despoiled for the benefit of a group of speculators.

For nearly forty years the Indians lived on a reserve of about 55,000 acres, about 20 miles from Winnipeg. From 1906 onwards the Indian Department was seeking to buy the Indians out and remove them to a wilder reserve far to the north. The process would be, if the Indians consented, to sell the land and use the proceeds for the benefit of the band. Owing to the situation, the land should have brought a very high figure. One critic in Parliament put it at $50.00 an acre, or upwards of $2,500,000. The Government to-day is buying land near Regina for $56.00 an acre. If we reduce this to $20.00, the price frequently paid for unimproved prairie lands in a good situation, it would have been worth at least a million. What did the Indians get? $50,000.

Again, the Indian Act surrounds the sale of an Indian reserve with safeguards, one of which is that a band may not surrender its lands except by a clear majority vote of its male members. How was this observed?

The St. Peter's band has 289 male members. One day's notice was given. The meeting was attended by 205. The majority was only 7 of this 205. Moreover, the proposal was incompletely explained, in English not in their native tongue; and a representative of the Department produced a bag, said that it contained $5,000, and offered to distribute it among them if they voted for the sale. There is evidence that some of the Chiefs and Councillors were bribed to help on the agitation. That is how the safeguards were observed.

A sale of the lands was held in midwinter, on slight notice. Low prices obtained, about $5 or $6 an acre. Small allotments of land to be held—or sold—in individual proprietorship were given to the Indians, and these at once found their way into the hands of speculators. The upshot was that for this magnificent property the Indians have realized perhaps $50,000, together with the privilege of being moved to a new reserve in the northland.

That is how the Laurier Government protected the Indians. The white farmers who will come in will pay high prices to the speculators.

THE FORGETTING

The crepe is off the drum, the mourning is taken from the building, the world has turned from the grave of that mighty atom, the King, the flag is at the masthead. We will soon forget. No man is indispensable, and, though head of the mightiest empire that the world has ever known King Edward is gone to swell the great list of those who are now but a pleasant memory, a name.

It is well that we forget so easily.

Who desires to be forever kneeling at the grave, to be always bringing up the past, with its mistakes, opportunities gone.

There are few homes that do not have the vacant chair, few who have not known some supreme sorrow, and it is in proportion to the power we possess to shake off the bitter memories of the past, and live glad in this lively present, our being animated with a strong hope of the golden future, that we will be a success among our fellow men.

Nations, provinces, cities, towns, hamlets and human beings are much the same. It is not what we once were but what we are to-day.

Then his son made him try "Fruit-a-tives" and now Mr. Speers is entirely well. LIVE BABY FOR BAIT.

Bakutus of the Congo Have Successfully Resisted White Man.

To bait spring guns and man traps with live babies seems to be a regular device with the simple Congo forest tribes, who know that the white man cannot bear to hear an infant cry. This peculiarity was discussed recently before the Royal Geographical Society in London by Mr. E. Torday, who with Mr. Hilton Simpson and Mr. Norman Hardy, made an expedition between October, 1907, and September, 1909, to investigate the native tribes in the Kasai Basin, in the centre of the Belgian Congo.

The Bakutu, said he, were almost the only tribe of this region who had been successful up to the present in resisting the advance of the white man. This was due to their skill in forest warfare. The way leading to their village was defended by poisoned spikes hidden by leaves.

They used bows and arrows set like traps in the form of primitive spring guns, and they used the baby bait because they knew the European would be unable to resist the temptation to pick up an apparently abandoned child. The poison they used was absolutely deadly.

When Mr. Torday, after the expedition had been saved from death by a toy elephant, tried an old-fashioned conjuring trick, and so got the tribe to volunteer to carry their loads to the next village in safety, he threatened to set fire to the river, and, as a beginning, lit up a little spare whiskey. This convinced the natives that the white men were able to destroy anything, and they were naturally very keen to get rid of the magician.

The clockwork elephant came into play through a difficulty in respect of currency. The territory of the Bakongo had never before been crossed by white men. The coinage of the tribe takes the form of bars of iron weighing two pounds, and valued in English money at exactly sevenpence.

When the people heard that the travelers' stock of iron was nearly finished, they began to show hostility. Mr. Torday explained that

The chief brought about the climax by ostentatiously stealing our chickens, and this was, of course, a declaration of war. We were not in an easy situation, for though we could have held our own in the event of a breach of the peace, we should have had to fight our way back to civilization.

At length a less important chief gave them the means of an escape from the difficulties. After the theft of the chickens, he came and explained that he had no bad intentions himself, but that the great chief had decided to kill them. Said the lecturer:

"I replied that if he wanted war he could have it, and I would slay all his people with my elephant. Fortunately, among the many objects which we carried about with us was a clockwork elephant, which was capable of waving its trunk and humming and walking along."

Relying on the imagination of the negro, I proposed to show him my elephant. Mr. Hilton Simpson accordingly took him before my tent, which I entered. I wound up the elephant, and made it walk on some boxes, and then the tent door was thrown open; our friend, seeing the uncanny beast, wanted to run away.

Mr. Simpson insisted that he should have another look, but this was too much for the chief, for, shouting "I am going to fetch those chickens which I have been stolen," he ran back into the village, and in a few minutes our property was restored to us.

Mr. Torday said that amongst the Basongo Meno tribes belief in transmigration was found.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, May 30.—(Special.)—There has been no important change in the condition of the export live stock trade during the past two weeks. The demand for ocean freight space continues to be limited, and rates in consequence rule steady, at 20s to Liverpool and London, 25s to Glasgow and 17s 6d to Manchester. The exports of cattle for the month of May amounted to 6962 head, as against 14,173 for the corresponding month in 1909, showing a decrease of 7211 head, or over 50 per cent.

At the Montreal Stock Yards West End Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending May 28 were 2000 cattle, 210 sheep and lambs, 1625 hogs and 1550 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 825 cattle, 100 sheep and lambs, 1100 hogs and 100 calves. There was no important change in the condition of the market for cattle, prices being firmly maintained at the advance noted a week ago.

A feature of the trade was the fairly large number of bulls offered. One lot of three choice ones, weighing 5855 lbs., sold at 6½c per lb.; one lot of five, weighing 9125 lbs., at 6¼c, and another lot of 12, weighing 18,100 lbs., at 6c; while the smaller and commoner grades brought from 5¼c to 5¾c per lb. The demand for steers and cows was also good, and on the whole a fairly active trade was done. Choice steers sold at 7¼c to 7½c; good at 6¾c to 7c; fairly good at 6¼c to 6½c; fair at 5¾c to 6c, and common at 5c to 5½c per lb. Choice fat cows brought as high as 6¼c to 6½c, and the lower grades from 5¼c to 6c per lb.

The condition of the market for hogs was unchanged from last week. Supplies were only fair, and sales of selected lots were made at $10.25 to $10.50 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars, but some were received on contracts made last week at $10.60.

The market for small meats was without any new features, supplies being small, and prices for all lines steady under a fairly good demand.

Sales of yearling sheep were made at 6c per lb., and old sheep at 5c to 5½c, while spring lambs brought from $3 to $6 each, and calves from $3 to $10 each.

Cool Kitchen—Perfect Cooking

The housewife with years of experience—the woman who knows how to cook—finds, after practical tests and hard trials, the New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove is her idea of what a good cook-stove really ought to be.

She finds it requires less attention, costs less to operate, and cooks all food better than any other stove she has ever tried.

She finds the New Perfection oven bakes and roasts perfectly. The has a Cabinet Top with a shelf for keeping plates and food hot. There are drop shelves for coffee pot or saucepans, and nickeled towel racks. It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

CAUTIONARY NOTE: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "NEW PERFECTION."

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,

Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT, 1907, By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"But how did we both happen to get to the Morningstar farm?" she suddenly asked. "You could not have known that I was going there, for I did not know it myself until the very day I went."

"Your supposing that I would have pursued you thither, if I had known, is certainly a compliment to my taste," he bowed.

She looked at him with a slight suspicion in her eyes, and a faint color came into her cheeks. But her native egotism blinded her to irony directed against herself.

"It was a strange coincidence, wasn't it?" she said; "but hardly fair," she added archly, "that you should have been taking me in—if you will pardon the slang—for four weeks without my knowing it."

"On the whole, you behaved very well, Miss Ellery."

She looked so complacently sure of it that he could not help adding, "It remains now for us to discover whether or not we are 'on the same line of march,' whether we are 'at one' and can 'clasp hands.'"

She was not in the least discomposed by the allusion. The bright color in her face was manifestly a glow of delight.

"You must necessarily be far in advance of me," she answered. "You know me as I do not as yet know you, but give me time, and I will catch up with you, and it is my belief that we shall find each other and meet very vitally."

"Heaven forfend!" was his mental comment as they both rose now upon the entrance of the venerable president.

Other guests began to arrive, and Kinross was obliged to leave her to her duties as hostess. He found Daisy and took her out to the campus for a stroll.

It was not until the supper hour gave Georgiana her first bit of respite from her obligations that he again found himself alone with her. She took advantage of her momentary leisure to invite him to her father's study, where they could be by themselves to finish their talk.

He found himself eager to tell her all the wonderful story of Eunice, and no sooner were they alone than he began to relate it. To his surprise, he had a hard time to get her attention upon it, so bent was she upon talking of herself, upon learning what his impressions of her had been during those four weeks at the farm and upon drinking in the admiration which evidently she was sure she had inspired all unconsciously. If he led the talk away from these themes, her answers were vague and her countenance absent. There was nothing in the world so interesting to her as herself, and she was too self absorbed to see or feel the mental attitude of another and to sense when she was being tiresome. In short, like all egotists, she lacked tact.

But Kinross politely persisted and at last succeeded in holding her attention upon his story long enough to excite her mild interest. She was very much surprised of course. She expressed, in conventional terms, some good wishes for the fortunate girl, moralized a bit about the situation, and then returned to the more important subject of herself.

When, after a half hour that had been all too short to satisfy Georgiana, they were obliged to come forth from their retreat in Dr. Ellery's study, her face was so beaming that Gateshead, when he saw her, was in despair, and as she moved through the rooms, her girl friends all decided that Kinross had certainly proposed on sight.

CHAPTER XXVI.

FROM the senior Miss Wolcott to Dr. Peter Kinross:

"Newport, Sept. —

"She has been with me here at Newport for nearly three weeks, and this is my first opportunity, Peter, for writing to you. You must, of course, be curious to hear how things have gone with each of us since the girl came to me.

"Of course after your noncommittal account of her, I was prepared for the worst and had braced myself to meet the shock which my own niece's manners and appearance must give me. The bracing served me in good stead when she arrived, for the shock was even greater than I had counted on; though as it came from an unexpected direction, my being prepared to meet it did not count for so much as it would otherwise have done. Of course I knew Mrs. Kenyon would do all she could to soften the blow by fixing her up as to clothes. But from what you had told me of my niece's life, I could not reasonably have expected to see the graceful, exquisite looking girl who walked into my drawing room last Friday night. You know it is the expression of a face and not merely perfection of coloring and feature which saves it from being common.

"I thought she would look vacant and awkward or else vulgarly loud and self assertive. I was not prepared to see a face of extraordinary refinement and intelligence and to meet a manner of dignity and gentleness. Do you acknowledge now that blood will tell? At first I was inclined to be angry with you for not having spared me the suffering I endured in anticipating her coming. I thought you might have told me what she was like, how she had educated herself, and so forth. But on second thoughts I knew you had done wisely in leaving me to find it out for myself.

"The child is touchingly grateful to me for the motherly care—so new to her—which I confess I delight in lavishing upon her, and I need not tell you that two lonely, love hungry hearts have found comfort in this newly discovered tie of blood.

"When we came to talk of finances I was surprised at her quickness to understand business problems which were so entirely new to her. A trained intelligence, even when the training has been as one sided as hers has been, helps so much in every direction. Against my protest she has insisted upon an equal division between us of her father's wealth. I have absolutely refused to accept this until she has had at least one year's experience of life in the world, when she will understand something of the value of money.

"Even if I wished to I don't think I could ever make a worldling of her. Each day she is with me I am impressed afresh with the purity and simplicity of her mind.

"It is a keener pleasure than I have known in many a long year to watch her impressions of things as I take her about with me—she is so filled with wonder at everything. She is like a small boy at his first circus! Her comments are often so funny and yet so unexpectedly wise. It will be delightful to take her to Europe.

"It isn't always easy to understand her. At times she seems absent and dreamy in a way that is quite unaccountable to me. There is a melancholy about her which she seems unable to shake off and which puzzles and troubles me, for surely she has everything to be happy for. Is it, perhaps, the somberness of her past still clinging to her? Or can it be possible that she is brooding over some country lover she left out there? If that were the case, you, Peter, having been by her all summer, would know. I wish you would tell me. Wouldn't it be tragic if that were the case?"

Miss Wolcott concluded with a warm expression of obligation to Dr. Kinross for his disinterested kindness.

It was this letter which had brought Dr. Kinross after a bitter struggle with himself to the place where he was on this afternoon late in the month of October—at Eunice's side, walking with her in Central park.

It was a bracing autumn day, but the fresh air was not alone responsible for the brilliant color in Eunice's face and the light in her eyes. But the color and the light suggested excitement rather than joy. There was a shadow of melancholy back of them.

In Kinross' face, too, the signs of his battle with himself were deeply marked.

They walked slowly in a secluded path. The change he had felt in Eunice from the hour of their meeting that morning had given him a sense of loss, as though the unsophisticated child who had trusted and liked him had slipped from him, for there was a dignity in her manner with him that almost made him think she had already grown conventional. And as for the deep feeling for him which in their last talk together at the farm she had so naively revealed—he shrugged his shoulders at the fickleness of the sex, for not a sign of it could he read in her new manner of reserve.

Now, however, that they were alone in the isolation of the great park he had a sense of being nearer to her. She was unbending to him and opening up as she had not done all day.

"I am waiting to hear some of your first impressions, Eunice, of life in the great world," he said as they strolled under the great trees which rustled in the autumn breeze.

"Perhaps," she answered, "when I am more adjusted to my new life and understand it better the world may look very much less mournful and lamentable to me than it looks now. Yet I am happy. Life is full of wonder and beauty and constant new delights. And, remember, I never before knew the meaning of the word happiness."

"Um—m! You are happy?" he repeated. "I'm so glad to know it, Eunice."

"Of course one constantly sees things that sadden. No sooner am I deep in the enjoyment and interest of some pleasure than I am confronted with a sight of poverty that makes my own possessions seem wholly wrong. I didn't work for this money—why should I have it?"

"But your father worked for it," he said, knowing very well he was instilling false social economy.

"That doesn't make it right," she shook her head.

"Perhaps not," he granted.

"I think," she went on, "that people would interest me more than anything else in the world if only they were real, were themselves; but I have yet to meet a man or woman of the world who seems to me genuine—except you and my aunt. And Aunt Eunice seems to be herself only when we are alone. Perhaps," she suddenly looked up at him, "if I saw you with other people you, too, would seem artificial to me and to be acting a part."

"There's no telling, Eunice, what your unclouded eyes would see!"

"Some things seem so strange," she went on; "Aunt Eunice and all the people who make up what she calls her 'set' (meaning a sort of clan) are so hemmed in by social laws, so hampered on all sides by perfectly meaningless rules and customs, so taken up with details which are trivial and unessential—and very tiresome to themselves—but which they nevertheless take heed to—for what reason it is hard to make out—that at times they all seem like puppets moving at the pull of a string—with no freedom of motion at all and no spontaneity. It stifles me!"

"Go on," he urged when she paused, her fresh impressions interesting him.

"I ask myself sometimes, Is all life a slavery, only in different forms? Every one seems to be in bondage of some sort. The men of Aunt Eunice's clan are slaves to the women; a man allows himself to become a mere money making machine for no other apparent reason than to keep his wife and daughters in idleness or to give them opportunity to cultivate themselves. It seems that the man doesn't need time for culture. It's no objection to him if he does have some culture, but it must not interfere with his money making. But the women must have leisure for the study of art, for society and other feminine occupations. Aunt Eunice says that if a man is a gentleman he will work night and day to give his wife or daughter absolute leisure to do as she pleases. I don't see the sanity of it or the justice. If a woman does not rear a family and make a home or else work at some vocation, if she is simply the daughter of a household, spending her time cultivating herself in music and literature and gracing social affairs, of what significance is her existence in the economy of the universe? What point has her life?"

She turned to him with her old wistful appeal. These commonplace problems, so new to her, were evidently vexing her sorely.

"Is it perhaps enough just to be," he suggested, "if only one be lovely and good and a delight to others?"

"But," she objected, "is it possible to be anything worth while—anything strong and worthy—without work, effort, responsibility? I am looking on at life not to judge and criticise, but only to learn, but sometimes judgment is forced upon me by what I see."

"And perhaps you, with your unsophisticated eyes, may be able to see deeper truth than is vouchsafed to old duffers like us—your aunt and me, I mean."

"But," she answered impetuously, "whatever impresses me I try to see through your eyes as well as my own, wondering what you would think about this or that which bewilders or puzzles me. In everything that I do or see your presence seems to be with me constantly. I have longed so unspeakably to have all these experiences with you actually and not just in fancy."

Kinross felt the blood surge to his very forehead. He answered her with an abrupt question.

"Why did you leave my letter unanswered, Eunice?"

Her eyes fell. She did not reply at once.

"I couldn't write to you."

"And why?"

"Aunt Eunice kept urging me to write. She said I must express my gratitude to you for all you had done for me, but my feeling for you is so far above gratitude—it is a feeling so much larger and greater than that. Yet," she added, her head drooping, "I could not write of it to you, and so I could not write at all, for there is to me a sacredness in my feeling for you which would seem belittled and even desecrated by my not being true to it. I could write to you out of the fullness of my heart or be silent."

He suddenly caught her hand, hanging at her side, and clasped it in a grip that hurt her. "If you had written to me out of the fullness of your heart, oh, you incomparable"— He checked himself and dropped her fingers with an abruptness that made her feel as though he had flung them off.

"Life is such a farce, Eunice," he answered coldly, "that, generally speaking, it is wiser to do as you did—to refrain from speaking out of the fullness of the heart. But what, may I ask, restrained you?"

She looked pained and hurt, both at his tone and his words.

"I feared," she answered, with a gentle sadness, "that I might weary you, Dr. Kinross."

His laugh sounded to her sardonic.

"Weary me? Let me tell you something. The night I saw you off on your train for New York there was a sudden drop in my spiritual thermometer that left me torpid, bored, sick to death of the not-worth-whileness of things. After a few days I wrote to you, and the expectation of hearing from you revived me somewhat. But the expectation prolonged itself to a point where it ceased to be interesting and became tormenting. 'Why doesn't Eunice answer my letter?' was the only thought my brain contained day and night."

"But now that you know why you say that you commend my 'wisdom' in keeping silent?"

"Ah, but what good did it serve? For you see here I am at your side—in spite of your wisdom, in spite of my own—for I, too, Eunice, have been acting wisely since we parted, else a whole month would not have passed without our looking again into each other's eyes!"

There was a passion in his voice that caught her breath.

"You have been repressing your feelings in staying away—your feelings for me?" she asked breathlessly. "Did you want to see me?" came her wistful question.

"Did I? Here I am!" was his answer.

"But," her eagerness suddenly dropped, and she spoke mournfully, "it can't last, you know."

"No. Your aunt is going to take you to Europe!"

"Yes."

"She says you are wild to go!"

"Oh!" She lifted her head and flung back a lock of hair from her eyes. "In spite of all the delights that wealth can give, what is it all when it can't feed the soul, when the heart is always longing—for just one thing that"— She checked herself, and again her head drooped.

"And that one thing, Eunice?"

She raised her eyes to his. "It is you I have wanted! Rather than go to Europe—so far away from you—I would bring back those days of last summer on the farm—yes, even those days before we had spoken together at all—for at least I then could see you every day face to face."

He suddenly caught her hand.

A BIT OF ADVICE

First--Don't Delay; Second--Don't Experiment

Mrs. W. Huycke, of 311 Louis St., Peterborough, Ont., says:

"Mr. Huycke frequently suffered with backache. At times the pains in the small of the back would become so severe that he was unable to straighten himself up without much suffering. He could not stoop or lift anything of consequence, and his general health had been run down for some time. He had tried a number of different remedies, but didn't find relief until on advice of a friend he procured Booth's Kidney Pills at Wm. Madill's pharmacy and commenced treatment. He soon found relief. The pains left his back and he straightened. He has had no return of the trouble since, and speaks very highly of Booth's Kidney Pills."

If you suffer from backache; headaches or dizzy spells; if you rest poorly and are languid in the morning; if the kidney secretions are irregular and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. The kidneys are calling for help. Slight symptoms of kidney troubles are but forerunners of more serious complaints. They should be given attention before it is too late.

Booth's Kidney Pills cure kidney trouble. They are recommended by thousands. Can Peterborough residents desire more convincing proof than the statement of a Peterborough citizen.

Mr. Herbert Booth, son of General Booth, spoke in the George street Methodist church on Sunday night.

His text was taken from the last verse in the Bible, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

The sermon was a striking one. Had Mr. Booth been an actor he would have been a powerful figure on the stage.

He is a powerful preacher instead. Magnetic, humorous, swaying his audience at will.

NO PROOF BY PROSECUTION; YOUTH WAS DISCHARGED

Peculiar Evidence in Stone-throwing Case at Police Court—Young Lad Signed Statement That He Broke One Window, But Witness Testified to the Effect That He Was Not Near the Track.

Magistrate Dumble had a puzzling case to handle this morning. He had some peculiar evidence to deal with, but he dismissed the charge against a youth, who, it was alleged and according to his own signed statement, threw a stone and broke a pane of glass in a coach of the C.P.R. evening passenger train for Toronto.

The Railway Company has had much cause to complain of cases of damage to the property and the climax came Friday evening, May 20th, when three windows were broken on the westbound passenger train after it had passed the diamond.

Detective Wright was assigned the duty of ferreting out the offenders, and if possible have them punished.

On the following Monday, accompanied by P. C. Newhall, he went to the vicinity where the windows were broken and finally came across a young lad who took both officers and showed them where he threw the stone which broke one window. He also stated that he had seen another boy in the act of throwing a stone.

A statement to this effect was written out by P. C. Newhall and was signed by the boy without any inducement held out or threats made.

This morning eight boys appeared before his Worship and it was charged "that they not being employees of the company, walked on the track." All pleaded guilty.

Two employees of the company were called and they stated that much trouble was caused by boys hanging on to the cars, breaking lamps and one of the witnesses said that switches had been thrown half way over and the boys in court had been offendors.

The Magistrate pointed out the danger in which they had placed themselves and the inconvenience they acused the railway men. All promised that there would be no repetition of the trouble and were dismissed.

Next came the charge re the breaking of windows. The Magistrate noted that it was a serious offence and a indictable one.

Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared for the accused, elected for a summary trial and pleaded not guilty.

Five witnesses were called and their evidence was to the effect that the accused was at Morrow's hill at the time the passenger train went through.

One boy swore that he and the accused were together from 1.30 or two o'clock till six and during that time were not near the railway track. They had been at play at Morrow's hill.

Next came the window-breaking charge. Mr. R. F. McWilliams appeared for the accused and evidence to establish an alibi was given. The signing of the paper Mr. McWilliams seemed to think was a rash act on the part of the boy and the admission was retracted. The case was dismissed.

The damage from the window-breaking amounted to $12 and a lady passenger was hit by a stone.

RUNAWAYS WERE CAPTURED HERE

With less than a dollar, but "millionaires" in nerve, two pals, by name Millen and Reid, left Ottawa the latter part of last week, per regular passenger, and arrived in Peterborough. Both dropped off to shed some outer clothing and left again. Reaching Leeside Junction, just out of Toronto, they stopped off, and decided to make the return trip to this city. The travellers came through on the midnight last night, but were collared by Detective Wright and taken to the police stattion.

Acting Chief Adams wired Ottawa and received a telegram in reply asking him to hold the boys. An officer will arrive this afternoon on the 4.48 and take the boys back to their home on the midnight.

HOUSE OPENED TO BIG BUSINESS

And Bill Presented by Crystal Amusement Co. Won High Approval

The Grand Opera House was very largely patronized last night on the occasion of the opening of the theatre for the summer season by the Crystal Amusement Company, under the management of Mr. W. A. Edwards. In spite of the extensive seating capacity of the Grand, the theatre was filled for the greater part of the evening, and the crowd enthusiastically endorsed the programme, every number being accorded much applause.

Weber, the musical female impersonator, met with great approval, as did also Conger and Odin, the entertaining and versatile comedy team. Peterborough's favorite juvenile singers, the Long sisters, made a most favorable impression with a pretty sentimental number and were generously applauded.

The moving pictures were of a superior character, Mr. Edwards being favored with an excellent selection by the supplying agency.

THE LION'S ROAR.

An Appalling Sound That Brings Terror to the Traveler.

Once in the lion country you learn the real reason why he is termed the king of beasts. He looks it. Besides, there is the terror he casts over all the brute creation about him. And as for terror, there is one feature of life in East Africa that the traveler never forgets—the lion's roaring. To me no other sound in nature is more awe inspiring, more appalling, especially if heard at really close range or among hills, where the echo resounds in its rolling double bass. Contrary to the common idea, lions do not confine their thunderous calls to the night only. Frequently in open daylight one may be startled by a sudden outburst. They are a noisy lot too. At night I have heard a band keep up the dire chorus for hours at a time, a blood curdling concert that brings to mind every tale, fanciful or true, of their daring, of their fierce rapacity and might. It seems, still further, to have an added dreadfulness when one is lying within the frail walls of a tent, with only its canvas between one and the formidable musician.

Listen now! There goes one booming in the distance, a roaring obligato that breaks into from six to a dozen calls. From the first to the fourth the volume usually increases; then it dies down. At very close quarters one hears the roar melt gradually into a purr, itself diminishing to a growling, discontented mumble that lasts for about half a minute, or there is the other sound, equally menacing—a soft and suggestive crunching noise, as though the beast had already settled to a grewsome meal. The lion's voice is mighty, as mighty as his strength. Forget his habits, his love of carrion and his daylight turn of cowardice and you have the impression of a king of beasts—a real royalty along the brute creation.—Everybody's Magazine.

SOME FAMOUS COMET HUNTERS

Look for the comet after sunset to-night in the western sky It is now 45,000,000 miles from the earth having receded 4,000,000 miles since yesterday.

Jerome Fracastor (1483-1543) and Peter Apian (1495-1552) both noticed that a comet's tail always points away from the sun, a fact which has been used in modern times to throw some light on the structure of comets. Even so great a man as Tycho Brahe held the common belief that comets were in our atmosphere. When the brilliant comet of 1577 appeared, however, he satisfied himself that the comet was revolving around the sun at a distance greater than that of Venus, thereby upsetting the old notions, which he had himself fostered. Tycho's great pupil Kepler, who saw Halley's comet in 1607, wrote a book in which he also took the stand that comets were of celestial and not of terrestrial origin. Indeed, it was not until Newton formulated the laws of gravitation and applied them to comets, and not until Halley made practical use of the laws in computing the orbits of 24 comets, among them the one that bears his name, that the true motions of comets were understood and that comet hunting became possible.

Comet hunting in the true sense of the term began when it became time to look for the comet that Halley had predicted would return "about the year 1758." As the time approached the mathematical astronomers began to hunt in earnest for their celestial quarry. A wonderful mathematician, Alexis Clairant, one of those precocious geniuses who startle the world now and then (he had read the Infinitesimal Calculus and Conic Sections at the age of ten), began the laborious work of calculating the perturbations suffered by the comet since the time when Halley last saw it and announced that it would pass the sun about April 13th, 1759, with a probable error of about a month. The comet was actually discovered, almost in the exact position assigned to it by Clairant by the Saxon peasant-astronomer, George Palitzsch, on Christmas Day, 1758.

Then after that achievement comet-hunting became a scientific sport, but after the eighteenth century comet-hunting went out of fashion. When a comet is discovered it is usually known first by its discoverer's name. Thus the comet which suddenly appeared from behind the sun a few months ago and which by many was incorrectly supposed to have been Halley's comet, was first known as Inness' comet; for Inness discovered it at the Johannesburg Observatory, South Africa. Following astronomical custom, it was afterward designated "Comet A, 1910." Later still, the comet received a Roman number, which indicated the order of its perihelion passage (i.e. passage around the sun) with respect to other comets of this year. Thus Daniel's comet, which was discovered on June 9th, 1907, goes down in astronomical history as "Comet IV., 1807." Because a comet may be discovered at a later date than another it does not necessarily follow that the first will follow the second in chronological order around the sun. Hence, the order is fixed by perihelion passage. The system was inaugurated by Dr. C. F. Peters, editor of the Astronomische Nachrichten, the leading technical astronomical periodical.

But recent photography has begun to play a part in comet discovery. Professor Barnard made the first photographic discovery of a comet in 1892. Sometimes a comet is found on a plate months after it was exposed. Thus Brook's (Comet I., 1904) was photographed in May, 1903, long before it was really seen.

As soon as a comet is discovered a telegram is sent to Harvard College Observatory, which serves as distributing center of astronomical news. After the code words in which it is sent, to facilitate transmission, have been deciphered it reads somewhat like this:

"A telescopic comet was discovered by Caxton at Chicago on May 28th. Position on May 29th at 10h. 30m. 16s. in R. A. 7h. 13m. 2s. and N.PD, 17' 28'." Daily motion in R.A. is (—73s.) and in N.P.D. (—6)."

The Right Ascension and Declination here referred to are celestial equivalents of terrestrial latitude and longitude, so that the astronomer who receives such a telegram can find the comet as readily as a navigator who is told to sail for an island in west longitude 94 degrees 24m. and south latitude 12 degrees 35m.

DOUBLE SEMI-READY BUSINESS

The Big Montreal House Are Now Enlarging Their Shops

Five years ago the Semi-ready Tailoring House took possession of their present factory premises. They planned and built these with the idea that they would have afforded sufficient room for ten years' growth. But the business has grown wonderfully and beyond their expectations.

Last week President C. H. Nelson turned the first sod and broke ground for another five-storey addition to the factory, which the Semi-ready Company estimate will nearly double their capacity, or at least give them a capacity output of $2,000,000 a year.

The new annex will be completed and ready for occupation in August. As the Managing Director, Charles P. Creamer, observed to a reporter, "We have only begun to cover Canada. For a long time we sold only in the cities and by-towns. When we decided to open accounts in 600 of the smaller towns we found that we had already reached our capacity and trade was increasing with all our customers, so that we have actually been compelled to expand. Yes, I believe our advertising has been a factor in our growth but we modestly claim that we produce an article which must ultimately win a universal verdict by reason of its many advantages."

The Semi-ready has taken a premier place among the larger industries of Montreal. There is no other business where so many skilled mechanics are employed. When the new addition is finished there will be accommodation for nearly 1,000 expert tailors, and already the labor market is being scoured for men who have the required training for high-class work.

[G]AMES TO BE FASTER

[L]ast night the magnates of the local [City] League teams got together and [disc]ussed ways and means by which [the] two games might be put through [earli]er. Some were in favor of call[ing] the second game at 3.45, while [an]other suggestion was that each [gam]e be limited to seven innings. [Non]e of these were favorable, how[ever], and it was decided that in future [the f]irst game will be called at two [o'cloc]k sharp, and the second at four. [In e]ither game the umpire will be in[stru]cted to call balls or strikes after [he] has called play ball. The respec[tiv]e captains will instruct their catch[ers] and twirlers to be ready to take [thei]r positions immediately at the [clos]e of their team's time at bat.

ROY TURNER CAME IN FIRST

The Toronto Globe says;—Parkdale Canoe Club commenced their season's sport on Saturday afternoon with a half-mile handicap cruising canoe race. The result was;

Turner, 20 yards, first; Duffit, scratch, second; Roden, 15 yards, third. The winner of this race will be awarded a gold medal with a silver medal for second place and a bronze medal for third.

The winner is Roy Turner, a son of Mr. W. R. Turner, Water street, and who before going to Toronto, was prominent in Y.M.C.A. athletics. He used a Peterborough canoe and it was made by the Canadian Canoe Company. There were fifteen starters.

THE RED DAB OF DEATH.

Tragic Mark on the Steel Skeleton of the Skyscraper.

"See that big blob of scarlet paint?" said the engineer as he pointed to a girder high up in the skeleton of the new skyscraper. "That red spot means that one of the men working on the building was killed by the girder sweeping him off the structure while being put in position."

The visitor craned his neck and saw a rough patch of vermilion paint on one of the floor girders up on the sixteenth story. "It must be a dangerous life," he said to his engineering friend.

"Yes. Those men up there are working under the chance of instant death at any moment. They'll walk along the topmost girder, 300 feet above the sidewalk—a little path of slippery iron five inches wide—and will lean outward against the wind. You or I couldn't do it for a second.

"Now and again there's an accident. A chap slips. A worker gets hit by a swinging girder and flung off. Another man takes an incautious step and falls off into eternity. The men working near by do their best to get at him if he manages to grab the girder he's falling from, and there are some swift and reckless races with death to get to their comrade at any cost in the five or ten seconds allowed them while strong fingers are sliding away from a slippery beam flange. If the worst happens and the man falls in spite of their efforts, then they apply the dab of red paint, and the ironworkers call it a day. They don't speak much of the man that is gone, as a rule. He's soon forgotten. The men consider it fate.

"You'd think, by the way," went on the engineer, "that the higher up these men worked the more careful they'd become. They aren't particularly careful, but they do guard against the hypnotism of height. One of the men working on a high girder gets paralyzed now and again by a sudden fear that holds him motionless and still on his iron beam.

"The men look out for this sort of thing, and the remedy is to distract his attention by a rough blow on the back or in some cases by exciting him to anger through any means in their power. When the man gets fighting mad he is freed from the paralysis of terror or whatever you may choose to call it. He gets up from his girder to make a rush for the other fellow to do him up, and the moment he is safe he is restrained by the other men.

"Whenever you see a skyscraper framework," concluded the engineer, "each dab of scarlet paint on the iron means that some man has come to his death. Every skyscraper and every bridge is the monument to some little group of unknown workers, laboring at dizzy heights and dallying with sudden death as part of their day's work." —New York Press.

A Poverty Stricken Queen.

Partly owing to the fact that she was wedded to an avaricious king and partly because she was generous with the little money allowed her Elizabeth of York, queen of Henry VII., spent but a small amount for dress. She was very often in debt, and the sums she spent were ridiculously small, 20 shillings ($5) being the greatest amount expended at any one time. Her gowns were mended and turned, and new waists were made for them, as is shown by the record of bills paid to her tailor. These bills prove that she wore her clothes for a long time, for her gowns were obliged to be newly hemmed, and also that, though a princess of the great house of Plantagenet, she wore shoes costing but 24 cents, which were decorated with tin buckles!

Made It Clear.

A senator, speaking of the advantages of clearness of statement, told a story about a restaurant to illustrate his meaning. He said:

"This restaurant advertised a dinner, but not in the loose way many other restaurants advertise dinner as between certain hours, whether there would be enough dinner to last between those hours or not. No. The man who runs that restaurant has a proper knowledge of his responsibilities and of the exact use of the language. He advertised, 'Chicken pie, 25 cents; from 12:30 until gone.'"—Saturday Evening Post.

A Cynical Statesman.

The saying that "all men have their price" is ascribed to Sir Robert Walpole. While speaking of a faction in parliament which bitterly opposed some of his measures he said, "You see with what zeal and vehemence these gentlemen oppose me, and yet I know the price of every man in this house except three."

Of some who called themselves patriots he said: "Patriots! I could raise fifty of them within four and twenty hours. I have raised many in one night. 'Tis but to refuse an unreasonable demand and up springs a patriot."

A Dilemma.

Mr. Crimsonbeak—A hunter in Newfoundland who has lost his bearings or finds himself in a fog has no difficulty in finding the way, as, owing to the constant west winds, the tops of all the trees point east. Mrs. Crimsonbeak—But suppose he doesn't want to go east?—Yonkers Statesman.

Married For Money.

"Do you mean to say that you married for money?"

"In a way I did. I got married because I couldn't afford to stay engaged any longer."—Cleveland Leader.

Nothing can be produced out of nothing.—Diogenes.

A prairie fire caused Bonfield & Harvey's dynamite storehouse at Sturgeon Lake to blow up. Loss $6,000.

MR. KNOX PRAISES WOMAN.

Department Employee Is Able Lawyer, He Says.

Philander C. Knox, who was famous as a lawyer before he became attorney general of the United States, senator from Pennsylvania or secretary of state, has given the highest kind of indorsement of the legal attainments of an employee of his department. The employee is a woman, too, Miss Annie H. Shortridge, who is now law clerk to Counselor Hoyt of the state department.

"Miss Shortridge," said the secretary of state to the house committee on appropriations, which is making up the state department estimates, "has been in the service of the government since Mr. Olney was attorney general." She began as stenographer and general clerk, and she had been in the department of justice ever since until she came into the department of state, three or four months ago. "She is undoubtedly and to my knowledge a very able lawyer. Many important briefs were prepared by her when she was in the department of justice. It is a great pleasure to me to be able to do her justice."

It is a certainty that many male lawyers would give a good deal to get so hearty an indorsement of their legal attainments from Philander C. Knox.

Dainty Baby Sack.

The dainty flannel sacks and kimonos that the baby wears are usually cut from a good pattern and then taken to some art needlework place to be stamped.

This is not always convenient, and it is well to know simple borders that can be put on at home.

Most of these small garments are furnished with a buttonhole scallop, which can be worked around the ends of a thimble or spool. A daintier scallop is made by using a spool of 200 thread and drawing halfway around it.

A coarse deep scallop never looks well on baby garments.

An easier way is to draw a series of scallops on stiff paper and transfer it to the material with transfer paper. Shift the paper and design when the section is done.

How to Detect Chicory.

Shake a spoonful of coffee with a wineglass of cold water and then place the glass on the table. If the coffee is pure it will rise to the surface and scarcely color the liquid, but if not it will sink to the bottom and the water will be tinged red.

When Living In Sooty Place.

If you live in a dirty place where soft coal is burned you cannot be too particular to wash out the inside of the nostrils every time you wash your face. This is not only a sanitary precaution, but one of cleanliness as well.

Australia's Stony Desert.

The great stony desert of north Australia was discovered by Captain Sturt, an Australian explorer, in 1845-6. It is north of the river Darling and is about 300 miles long and 100 broad, consisting of sandy dunes or ridges. Its want of trees, except along the creeks, gives the country a sterile appearance. These ridges were probably formed by the joint effect of winds and a gradually retiring sea.

Pulling Him Through.

Mr. Melton Prior, the war artist, tells how during the Ashantee War, on going up the hill into the town of Kumassi with the troops under Lord (then Sir Garnet) Wolseley, he was so tired and "done up" that he could scarcely walk. He was struggling along, when Lord Wolseley, mounted on a mule, passed, and without more ado he laid hold of the mule's tail. He had been assisted thus for but a short distance when Lord Wolseley turned round and saw what he was doing. Of course, he apologized, but Wolseley only laughed, and replied, "Hold on, Mr. Prior, we will pull you in."

The STORY of the GRAY FRIAR

By Luke Thrice

A breathless story with a fascinating setting, moving swiftly through a series of tense situations to a satisfying climax. One of the very best in the great series of the "Master Rogue," as written for these pages by Luke Thrice.

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

"WHAT'S the answer?" insisted the visitor.

Burch considered the question and the glowing tip of his coronation through the drift haze of the smoke for a moment of silence. The two were ensconsed in their usual summer retreat, the hidden arbor on the roof, where only the attentive, flitting shadow of Ota, the Japanese, broke upon their seclusion. About them lay the litter of the day's papers, from which they had absorbed such professional items as served their business and social interests.

"Why not simply the attraction of skilful theft, the thrill that comes to a subtle mind through overreaching other minds?" inquired the master. "There remains kleptomania, which seldom makes distinctions on the basis of Bradstreet."

"Kleptomoniac, eh?" mused Laxton. "Never saw one," he added innocently.

The master looked across at him and smiled, a characteristic, quiet smile. "One less serious minded than myself might perpetrate an evil jest by fetching the mirror," he commented.

"Who, me?" exclaimed Laxton, with a flush of astonished protest. "No such a thing. I'm no bug. Why, I'm just as much a laborer as the lad who packs a hod."

Burch smiled again at his earnestness, but sobered in a flash. "Pardon me, Laxton. But we were speaking of kleptomania," he added in a lighter tone. "Let me dig into my grab bag of yarns and perchance bring forth one under that head."

It was second cigar time when the master spoke again.

The place was the vast, wooded Long Island estate of the Demaars; the time, late August, and the occasion the fête masque for which all the north shore that properly belonged to the north shore had schemed throughout the summer.

Wandering paths flanked with shrubbery, the faint glow of multicolored paper lanterns, the thousand mysteries of night in the wood and the careless spirit of a frolic crowd make a tempting setting to the clever operator. The three Central Office men who watched the gates of the park conscientiously for just such uninvited masqueraders as myself had no opportunity to inspect my credentials, however. I preceded them by a day, taking up residence with the prize pheasants and passing the time comfortably with a copy of Montaigne and a basket of sandwiches.

Behold me then at the merriest hour—my hour—strutting in the semblance of Bertrand de Born, brave in colors, a stringed rebec by my side, with black silk mask wherewith I might meet all boldly. Perhaps the fascination such mummery held for me was the sneaking opportunity to mingle on level terms with——. Well, the fascination was there, you understand, immense, irresistible.

My flowing garments showed as well, my person was as pleasing, my voice as soft and tenderly modulated as the best ruffler of them all. I knew the murmured phrase, the discreet advance, the flash of the eye, the sly pressure, the hundred and one points of a game whereby a jaded set consents to forget under Pierrot's garb and mien for an evening the threadbare, playaday round of life. None was there to question me. For a moment I was an equal member. Weakness if you like, but I revelled in it, safe in the helter skelter of bizarre disguises.

I moved among the throng that filled lawns and terraces, spread along the alleys and wooded trails, far out through groves where myriad globes winked and nodded. I threaded my way unchallenged, bowing for an instant over the white hand of an Arthurian heroine, disputing and winning a dance with a bewitching little shepherdess against an importunate Richelieu and a bristly mosstrooper; clapping hand to hilt at the pretensions of a black visaged Turk; whispering audacious flattery into the pink but ready ear of a jewelled Isabella; fetching ices for a nautch girl, and something less innocuous for a white browed, unapproachable Diana.

The Whirl of Pleasure.

The surge and whirl of merrymakers, the froth and patter of small talk, the ripple and tinkle of laughter up and down the dim lit paths, where shadows moved in and out of the shadows, where unsubstantial forms gathered in eddies and broke to gather again—all this was to me as real and unreal, and intangible and delicious, as intoxicating and soothing as a hasheesh dream. Handsome women, delightfully shy, mockingly attentive gallant men, meticulously courteous, subtly defiant—entertained and saluted me unawares. While the spell lasted there was no J. Ramsey Burch, various and unmitigated rogue; only a featherbrain beneath the curls of Bertrand de Borun, whose one interest was an ephemeral but passionate devotion for an arch minx of a Black Forest peasant girl.

At the height of the revelry I stood upon the verge of the sylvan circle, sunk below the surrounding promenade, where, by the same touch of golden magic that had raised all this wonderland, the smooth, polished surface of a perfect dancing floor shone under the clustered, pendulous lights. In the centre, as from a placid lake, rose a natural crag, reached by an underground passage, whereon the orchestra was marooned in harmonious isolation. The interweaving of form and color, the swinging rhythm of the dance, wrought sweetly upon my senses. Crusaders, banditti and eager carpet knights of a dozen impossible courts hustled me, passive, hither and yon as they plucked their nymphs and gypsies, their goddesses and Pompadours, their Jeannes and Theodoras, to the tripping of the measure. Shouldered to the outskirts, I spied a rustic bench half hidden beneath a gigantic lilac bush. I sank upon it, and as by the rending of a veil the glamour was gone. The harsh, low voice of a woman reached me from beyond the bush.

"My dear, you have only to watch him—the Gray Friar. Ordinarily one says nothing about such things—they pass as a hideous nightmare. But this is too terribly bold, too outrageous an affront to permit of sacrifice or silence. There will be no scene, of course. I wished to warn you of what to expect, that is all."

"But, mother," came a hurried, fluttering protest, "it—it is quite impossible. Oh, how can you say such dreadful, dreadful things? Steven Bascom"——

"Hush!" returned the first speaker sharply. On the section of the floor just across the promenade from where I sat a couple glided through a gap, balanced and reversed into the waltzing throng. One was a Gray Friar, with plain robe, cowl and knotted cord that showed a tall, broad shouldered, powerful figure. As he passed he laughed, a deep chested, virile, primitive laugh that spoke of a splendid, high spirited animal. His partner was the jewelled Isabella, who seemed withal quite content to nestle within his masterful arm.

"Hey, Barney, you've got the wrong man."

"You see, he is with Marion Stuyver," came the harsh, vibrant, decisive whisper from behind the bush. "And she has her emeralds."

"How can you—how can you say such things?" was the broken, passionate remonstrance. "It is too horrible! I've never heard"——

"That will do, Estelle," was the peremptory rejoinder, in a tone used to the inflections of command. "It makes not the slightest difference what a girl in her first season may have heard or never have heard. Such things occur from time to time. Usually they are hushed up and the person is cared for by his family. Steven Bascom has already alienated his family, and he must suffer."

"But he couldn't——"

"Estelle, I see I must speak more plainly. I have warned you before against Steven Bascom. He is entirely too much interested in you. And you, I fear, were not unresponsive. Your father and I were considering ways and means before this happened—a boy utterly without fortune. But now—you see—he is a thief"——

"Mother!"

"Exactly," was the nasal response. "He has my canary pendant in his pockets this instant. Oh, I promise you, the affair has been carefully investigated. Not that I am in the least alarmed. Mrs. Demaar was almost prostrated when your father and her husband told her the truth—as well she might be, poor woman!—a fearful scandal. They have gone for the policemen now. He will be caught quietly and the property recovered, we are assured. At least a dozen losses of jewelry have been discovered, traceable in every case to him."

The whisper ran on, petulantly, maliciously, cynically, with no apparent concern on the part of the speaker for the utter horror expressed by the girl's exclamations at the monstrous charge.

"I don't believe it," was the strangled interruption. She had courage, this girl.

"Once for all, Estelle, that will do. You are blind. You have flirted with this—this degenerate"——

"That is not true!" cried the girl. "He has quarrelled with his people. He has been unfortunate, he's bitter—and impulsive—but not, not criminal, mother!"

"Estelle! Do you presume to contradict? I give thanks—do you hear?—I am thankful that this should have occurred so pat upon his attentions to you. It has been the heaviest of my burdens that you should thwart and disappoint me at every turn. But for this you might have been capable of——. Well, at least, that is scarcely likely now. You would hardly disgrace yourself with a kleptomaniac!"

The Cry of the Girl.

The only answer from the girl this time was a little suppressed cry of pain. I began to hate the elder woman. She was a sour beldame who would crush the first flower of romance with so ruthless a hand.

There was a pause. The music had ceased. Among the dancers who trooped up to the higher level of the promenade I caught a glimpse of the tall Gray Friar leading the stately Isabella a willing captive. Couples and parties of masks began to stray past my lilac bush.

"There is another matter, my dear," began the low, harsh voice again, with a softened hint of deprecation. "It is long since we have spoken frankly—through your fault, I may add. Now we may as well have it out, now when you have had such a thorough demonstration of your own fallacious judgment. I have prepared you for this, I think. Mr. Stuyver, Mortimer Stuyver, has spoken to your father. He wishes to pay you his addresses. Did you say anything?"

Apparently her daughter had not, for she continued "We consented. He is in every way desirable, and enough older than you to balance your waywardness. I wish you to consider him as the one we favor. There he is now. How well he looks in that distinguished Italian costume."

Beyond, on the floor, a big boned, beefy chap in slash trunk of purple velvet and parti-colored hose upon his thick, awkward legs, blundered in chase of a giggling Carmen. The mask could not hide the fat good nature of his broad face nor the doublet conceal an unmistakably generous girth.

"A charming man," whispered the elder lady, with satisfaction. "And a natural leader in everything. Your father says he will be the next president of the Matrix National, and his wealth is estimated at thirty mill——."

How did you recognize Steven so easily?" asked the girl, impatiently, but with tears not far off.

"I heard him admit his identity on the terrace, my dear," returned her mother, triumphantly, "to some mask who taxed him. And no one could mistake that voice. It was on the promenade here that the villain took my pendant. Come. I am perishing for an ice, and it would not be well for you to see—what will happen. People might talk——." I was up and into the path beyond the lilac bush in time to see the two women walking toward the house. The elder was a thin, angular, sharp featured Queen Elizabeth in ruff and brocade, the very impersonation of her voice. Her companion was the little shepherdess I had danced with, a charming, simple creature, exquisitely matched with her flounced skirt, staff and beribboned hat.

The orchestra struck into another dance and the merry folk came flocking back from all parts of the grounds to the floor. I pressed in among them seeking the Gray Friar, making the circuit of the promenade. I found him where the crowd was thickest. He stood at the edge of a laughing group, in animated converse with Marie Antoinette. What drew my eye was a fine, four strand rope of pearls that lay carelessly about her shoulders. The group closed around them for a moment and I lost them. Then, at the further side, a tall, gray form slipped into the shadows of the wood, and when I caught a glimpse of Marie Antoinette again there were no pearls, though she was not yet aware of it.

I darted after the Gray Friar. My impulse was to breathe a warning into the ear of this daring young giant, to give him a chance against the closing trap of Queen Elizabeth, whom I cordially detested. I followed him with difficulty through the maze in the direction of the house, losing him frequently in the mystic, baffling glow of the infrequent lanterns. Running around a curve I was almost precipitated upon a tableau that sent me scurrying to cover. At an open spot where three alleys intersected the Gray Friar had been stopped by the Italian nobleman. There was no one else in sight.

"Hail, brother," said he of the trunks, gayly saluting with a small bundle he carried. "I have sought you high and low. Is your reverence minded to enter upon a merry plot for the sake of a good jest?"

"Speak on," rumbled the Gray Friar, laughing.

"I have here a domino for which I wish to beg the exchange of that gray robe of yours. Will you grant the favor?"

"Why, it's Mortimer," cried the Friar. "Might have known your style with that vivid makeup, you giddy gallant. What's the game? Am I in on it?" He thumped the other vigorously on the back.

I caught a note of constraint in Stuyver's answering laugh. "It's a joke, Steve—er, a joke on Queen Elizabeth, if you know who she is. I want to borrow that robe of yours and adopt your character for a few minutes."

"Righto," boomed the Friar, cheerily, untying his girdle. "Anything you can put across on Queen Bess goes with me. No trouble about the height, Mort; but what about the paunch, eh? Can you hide that in the folds? Give me the domino."

They made the exchange quickly. Stuyver slipped the muffling robe over his own brilliant costume, turning up the cowl. Bascom presently stood transformed in checked blue and white.

The Ominous Pause.

"Now, what's the ticket?" asked the younger man, eagerly. "Do I take a hand? Do you need me? By the way, I warn you, Mort, you'll have to pick up a lot of desperate flirtations where I left them off if you're going to do credit to me."

Stuyver stepped toward him and laid a hand on his arm, his big, pudgy face gone solemn under his visor. "Yes," he said, evenly, "I'll pick up the whole thing for a time, Steve. You have about three minutes to get away from here. I should advise the west wall of the park. The gate is watched."

There was a moment of silence. Voices borne on the distant strains of the orchestra swept softly through the wood. Bascom stood staring stupidly at the other. "Pardon me, old man," he said, at length, with an uneasy rumble of laughter, "but what the devil did you say? Does this go with the joke?"

"It's no use, Steve," returned the other, firmly and rapidly. "You've been watched. Mrs. Demaar, as you may not know, has three Central Office men out here. She is finding costumes for them now up at the house. They are to get you quietly, if possible, so as to avoid a scandal. Luckily I overheard the whole plan and I'm ready to lead them a wild goose chase until you get away. Now, start; you haven't a moment to lose." He spoke with tense, kindly feeling, voice and gesture urging his act of friendship. But Bascom wrenched loose from him and flung forward with heavy, grasping hands, in his turn catching Stuyver roughly by the shoulders.

"What's all this?" he breathed, hoarsely. "Why, you—— Don't trifle with my temper," he thundered in a sudden gust of passion, and shook the other violently. Stuyver held up to him manfully.

"Where's the good, Steven?" he pleaded, gently but urgently. "I know you've been unfortunate, practically lost everything you've got. And I'm the last to blame you. God witness, if you'd come to me with your trouble I'd have helped you. Now it's too late. You've done it, and the whole thing is known to Mrs. Demaar and others. I never would have believed it, but I saw you myself. We were rivals, boy," he added, with a little twisted smile, "but I'd have given up Estelle and everything else to save you from this. It only remains for you to get away; if not for your own sake, then"——

Bascom, with a roar of anger, bent the older man like a reed, forcing him mercilessly to one knee. "Damn you," he said, thickly, "that's as far as you go on that lap. Now what is it? The truth man. What have you and her mother fixed between you? What do you know? What does Mrs. Demaar know? Out with it?"

Stuyver remained calm and steady. "She and others say it must be kleptomania. I don't believe there's anything of the degenerate in you, Steve. It must have been the pressure of your troubles. I—and Demaar—saw you take my sister's emerald bracelet."

In a burst of primal rage Bascom snatched the other from his kneeling posture, held him upright an instant, and smashed a heavy fist full into his face. It was a brutal thing, the act of a pure savage. Stuyver was helpless. He reeled backward blindly, his cheeks staining with crimson beyond the black silk mask. Bascom, wild with fury, was whirling upon him again when a shout came from the end of the alley toward the house. A little party of men in dominoes was coming at a run. In the dim, broken light they had seen the assault. One, unmasked, in dress suit, lumbered after them—Demaar, whipping on his detectives.

Bascom had stopped short at the cry. Stuyver, bringing up against the end of a bench, stared at the approaching group. Almost instantly he recovered, wrenched around and sprang upon Bascom.

"Quick!" he yelled, dragging the other with frantic strength into the lower alley. "The shrubbery! Make to the west for the wall! I'll give them a chase yet. They'll follow me." He was a powerful man for all his weight, and his vigor had taken Bascom completely by surprise. Now, with a sudden shove, he sent the younger stumbling and floundering into the bushes not a yard from where I crouched. Bascom scrambled a moment, swearing outrageously. The running group broke around the corner just as he stood erect once more, and with a yell he dashed into the path in front of them. The pursuit passed on swiftly toward the dance floor, led by the false Gray Friar, with the culprit next and the pack of the law at their heels.

I held to my place of concealment for a moment, debating what might yet be done to aid Bascom. I no longer had any particular sympathy with him, but I would have saved a worse man to despite Queen Elizabeth. That instant of hesitation reversed the entire affair as sharply as the crack of a whiplash. For as I waited the bushes on the opposite side of the open space parted and a tall, stooped, stealthy figure stole out. I gasped with amazement. It was the Gray Friar!

And yet not the Gray Friar. Stuyver was pounding down the alley with that distinctive robe flapping about his awkward legs. The man before me was another Gray Friar, the very twin of Bascom as Bascom had looked with mask and robe. Many readjustments took place swiftly in my mind as I watched.

The new Gray Friar stood a moment, mouth opened in silent mirth as he viewed the departing [illegible] race down the alley, hands on hips. I was [illegible] had opened his mouth that way. When he had sufficiently enjoyed the situation he turned and glided catfooted to the end of the path toward the house, spying the next step toward speedy escape. The movement brought him with his back toward me.

With infinite caution I crawled out from my hiding place. He had not turned when my feet were on the gravelled walk. And then I had him. Three silent jumps took me across and hurtling on him from the rear, knee driven at the waist line. His hands flew up and I caught a hold that Ota taught me years ago. One wrench and he collapsed, limp and groaning, face down, to the path. The ribbon of my little rebec, which was still bound to my shoulders, served my purpose.

"'Silk Stocking' Dugan, my dear young friend," I purred to him, as I slid the capacious sleeves of the friar's robe from him, "lie quiet, as you value the articulation of your various joints." Having removed the indispensable garment I proceeded to truss him up scientifically.

"I'm right glad I didn't have to come at you from the front, just the same," I assured him cheerfully. "You've got all the build of young Bascom there, whom you so cleverly duplicated, and you're probably a heap more effective in handling your fists, not to mention that gun. By the way, I must congratulate you on the job. It was worthy of your best efforts, 'Silk,' and you've done some pretty classy work in your time. But the game must go on. I'm sorry, but the dramatic suspense demands it. There have been three Gray Friars to-night, Bascom, Stuyver and yourself. Now there's going to be a fourth."

"What do you mean when you say that?"

I later had occasion to rejoice that the trussing of Dugan had progressed to a stage where he was helpless, for when this question was murmured in my ear by a fresh, sweet toned voice I was momentarily paralyzed. I looked up to find my little shepherdess beside me, leaning on her staff, and questioning me and my occupation with wide, fearless eyes. I recovered when I found she was alone.

"What do you mean?" she went on, earnestly. "I was in the bushes there. I saw—and heard, everything. This man," pointing to Dugan, "is the thief. I followed him, thinking he was—the other. But they are running after Mr. Stuyver. When they catch him they will learn their mistake and get Steve—Mr. Bascom. Even if they find nothing on him he cannot clear himself"—— Her voice caught, slightly, but she went on. "I don't think I know you. You danced with me, didn't you?" If she was afraid, afraid of me or of Dugan, lying there, she gave no sign of it. But she was infinitely more appealing in her brave, frank, direct questioning as she bent over me with flushed cheeks and parted lips than she would have been in fear. There are times when I feel somewhat sorry and ashamed in spite of all my philosophical props. I felt so before this simple, charming child, and I was glad of my mask.

"Miss Estelle, you honored me by a dance this evening," I agreed, gravely, "but you do not know me." I finished the tying of Dugan, dragged him into the bushes, where I informed him he could release himself, with hard work, inside of an hour, and slipped on the robe of the Gray Friar.

"This is what I meant," I went on, as the girl watched me. "I am to be the fourth Gray Friar this evening, and the last. Listen."

The music had ceased again below. The hum and ripple of voices filled the pause. But now there was a new note. A cresendo wave of laughter interspersed with cheers, followed by another and another, reached us. I smiled at her. "Do you know what that means?" I asked. "It means that the crowd views the chase as some prank of madcap masks. They need never be the wiser, except those who have suspected Mr. Bascom. Hurry straight to the dancing floor if you wish to see the last incarnation of the Gray Friar." And I left her, running at top speed down the alley to my right.

The path brought me out at the side of the circle furthest from the house. Most of the throng was banked along the promenade across from me and on the floor the serio-comedy that excited their applause was being enacted. Stuyver, the robe flapping about his legs, was running and dodging the pack, waving frantically at Bascom, who pursued him as desperately as the detectives. Stuyver must have been frantic with chagrin and disappointment at [illegible]ure of his well meant efforts, but he still [illegible]gedly in the lead, wiping his face as he ran. So much I saw as I plunged into the musicians' underground passage, that led beneath the floor to the orchestral crag.

When I climbed out among the bewildered fiddlers and gained a point of vantage the hunt was closing in. The detectives had circled the rock on both sides and Stuyver, in a last spurt, was coming straight toward me. Ten yards away Bascom ran him down and the breathless group came panting to a stand almost at my feet.

"Hey, Barney, you've got the wrong man," I hailed one of the detectives mockingly. All their faces were turned up to me in wonder, and as they stared from the capacious pockets of the Gray Friar I drew a dazzling handful of jewels, a canary pendant among them. Barney, the best of the Central Office men, was the first to recover and made a jump for me. With a gay wave I dropped from the opposite side of the rock and sprinted away from the hopeless pursuit to the woods and safety. As I made my way toward the west wall the crowd was still buzzing with laughter over the pranks of the strange madcap masks who caught one Gray Friar only to be distanced by another.

Among the society weddings next June was that of my simple little shepherdess to Mr. Mortimer Stuyver, which led me to suspect that she was not so simple after all.

MARCO POLO'S BOOK.

It Gave Columbus the Idea For His Voyage of Discovery.

Mediaeval Europe knew but very little of eastern and northeastern Asia. Many of the most learned cosmographers of the time taught that Asia stretched eastward indefinitely, and no one imagined that it had an eastern coast washed by the ocean. It was seriously taught that eastern Asia was a land of vast swamps, inhabited by monster serpents and dragons. This was the opinion that still prevailed up to within 200 years of the time of Columbus.

At this time two Venetian merchants of the name of Polo went on a vast trading expedition to the uttermost parts of Asia. They were gone many years. Upon their return the son of one of them, a young man named Marco Polo, wrote out a full account of their travels, described the empire of the grand khan (the Chinese emperor) and revealed the fact that Asia was bounded on the east by a vast ocean. He described this eastern coast minutely, with all its vast cities and its wealth of precious stones and spices.

It was from reading this book that the imagination of Columbus was fired, and he conceived the bold idea of reaching this eastern coast of Asia by sailing toward the west around the earth.

So when he discovered Cuba he had not a doubt that he had landed upon the coast of Asia and that he looked upon the same scenes that Marco Polo had gazed upon 200 years before.

HEIGHT OF ELEPHANTS.

In the Majority of Cases It Is Under Eight Feet.

The average term of an elephant's life, although there is no precise information on the point, is seventy or eighty years. The elephant is not in full vigor and strength till thirty-five. The most ready way of forming an approximate idea of the age is by the amount of turnover of the upper edge of the ear. In young animals, sometimes up to the age of eight or nine years, the edge is quite straight. It, however, then begins to turn over, and by the time the animal is thirty the edges lap over to the extent of an inch, and between this age and sixty this increases to two inches or slightly more.

Extravagant ideas are held as to the height of an elephant. Such a thing as an elephant measuring ten feet at the shoulder does not exist in India or Burma. Sanderson, an admitted authority on the subject, said the largest male he ever met with measured nine feet ten inches and the tallest female eight feet five inches. The majority of elephants, however, are below eight feet, and an animal rarely reaches nine feet, the female being slightly shorter than the male. The carcass of an elephant seven feet four inches tall weighed in portions gave a total weight of 3,000 pounds, so an elephant weighing two tons should be common enough. The skin was about three-fourths of an inch thick.

Kind Words Mean Much.

Cultivate kindness of heart; think well of your fellow men; look with charity upon the shortcomings in their lives. Do a good turn for them as opportunity offers and, finally, don't forget the kind word at the right time. How much a word of kindness, encouragement or appreciation means to others sometimes and how little it costs us to give it. We do not need to wait for some special occasion. When calamity overtakes a friend words of sympathy and encouragement are offered sincerely enough, yet in certain respects as a matter of course. Such an occasion calls for expression on our part, and we naturally respond. But why wait for occasion? Why not speak the kind word when there is no special occasion?

JEFFERSON'S PICTURES.

A Wonderful Landscape Painted Entirely From Imagination.

Marvelous were the products of Jefferson's inspiration. He had created a school of his own. He was prone to portray forest scenes, with tree trunks of wonderful size, in accurate military formation. Old mills were a favorite subject with him, especially old mills with water wheels, and in some of his paintings he actually accomplished the impossible, for to all intents and purposes he succeeded in making the water run uphill. This having been called to his attention by an overcritical friend, Mr. Jefferson responded that he was well pleased with the result, for "few men could have accomplished it."

When president of the Players club, a position he held for so many years before his death, Mr. Jefferson presented to the club a large canvas of his own. If the writer remembers correctly, there was a pond in the foreground, with rushes, a tumbledown house and a large and rather theatrical looking forest, all painted, the artist boasted, in the dead of winter in his own sitting room and entirely from his imagination. When it was first displayed on the walls—for of course none of the old gentleman's gifts was ever refused—it attracted much attention, and one day Mr. Jefferson, being in the club, seized a brother member, who happened to be a man whose pictures had on more than one occasion won prizes in the salon, and stood him before his own masterpiece. "Now, I want you to tell me," he said frankly, with his childlike and delightful smile, "what you think of it."

"Well," replied the painter, responding to the pressure on his arm, "I'd like to have one hung as well as that." And the old gentleman was delighted.

During his lifetime that picture remained in its prominent position, and whenever Mr. Jefferson entered the club he would manage to maneuver himself in front of it, regarding it from all sides and angles, and hardly ever did a picture receive so much praise and so little criticism as that marvelous landscape.—James Barnes in Bookman.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

Three Things a White Person Must Have to Live There.

Without a mosquito bar a white person would be unable to live on the equator, writes Ida Vera Simonton in the Delineator.

No matter how hot and stifling the night—and no other place can be so stifling as the equatorial African night during the long rainy season in the midst of the jungle—one must sleep under a closely tucked in mosquito bar, not the ventilated kind civilization knows, but one of closely woven stuff through which no air circulates.

When the mosquito bar was let down it took in almost the entire room, but it proved especially useful in sickness and convalescence. It permitted existence free from insect bites. As malaria is the white man's most insidious foe and comes from the bite of the mosquito, every precaution must be taken against it. Three things are absolutely necessary in Africa—a mosquito bar, a water filter and quinine.

The bed was made by a native carpenter. The frame was of wood, the slats of bamboo ribs fitted closely together with the pith side uppermost. They didn't give a bit and were an excellent dancing floor for the dried plantain leaves which made the mattress. The leaves were confined beneath ticking tacked to the four sides of the bed, but they matted easily, and every night it was continuous leaf turning for me. The bamboo was slippery, and insomnia kept me and the leaves on the move, so that most of the time I slept on a hard surface. My pillow was of dried sweet smelling grass. Whoever says that hard beds are beautifiers should sleep upon an African bed.

Gold Heated Water.

Over 4,000 years ago an elaborate system of filtration was established by the Egyptians to purify the waters of the Nile. In both Rome and Athens hot water was drunk in preference to cold by the small minority who used water for drinking purposes. Champier, writing in 1560, notes that the habit of drinking hot water was spreading among all classes in France "Some warm it by holding it over the fire. Others dip burning bread into it. Rich people plunge a bar of hot gold into their water before drinking it, and the less wealthy a bar of hot iron, while the very poor are content to warm their drink with a live coal."

Got His Number.

Uncle Zeph had had some trouble getting about on the cars and complained of the employees. "When a conductor is uncivil to you take his number," said his nephew.

Two days later uncle came in somewhat battered, but looking triumphant. "I got the number," he said, with a satisfied air, "but I had to grab the bull cap too."—Buffalo Express.

Had a Proxy.

"Have a drink, old man?"

"No; I've cut it out."

"Aw, be sociable."

"Well, my companion here will take a drink with you. He's my social secretary."—Kansas City Journal.

Entirely Capable.

"Is your new maid capable?"

"Yes, indeed. She can tell callers I don't want to see that I'm out and make them believe it."—Detroit Free Press.

PAPERING THE HOUSE

When a Weak Play Appears In a New York Theater.

PROPPED BY FREE TICKETS.

The Judicious Distribution of "Complimentaries" by the Manager Secures Well Dressed Audiences and Saves the Appearance of a "Frost."

Long before the curtain goes down at the end of a new production the manager has decided, nine times in ten, whether he has a success or not. But he does not mean to be caught napping in either event. If he believes the play is a "frost" or even a semisuccess the house for the next few nights must bear every outward evidence of prosperity.

In other words, he must "buck the line" of adverse criticism by "papering the house." For a week at least he must make a "front" in the orchestra chairs, no matter if there is desolation in the box office. Let him make the public believe the new piece has attracted a large number of patrons for six or eight performances and there is a chance of enough business to prop up a forced run of a few weeks, which may help things on the road. This means that "paper" or free tickets must be judiciously distributed.

Every manager of a theater has a large circle of friends. This may be due partly to his possession of a genial personality, but undoubtedly the business he is in has in itself an attraction for many. A majority of these people will accept passes when they are offered; some are not above asking for them, while still others—but these are rare—will buy tickets when complimentaries are not tendered.

When the manager has a play that is in danger of going to pieces for lack of patronage he sends tickets to all these friends of his and whenever possible obtains a promise that they will be used by the persons to whom he gives them. It is not difficult to extract such a pledge. Being on terms of more or less intimacy with the manager, the favored ones know he will be likely to see them in the theater or if they are not there that he will take note of those who do not use the tickets. He keeps a record of the seat numbers opposite the names of those who should occupy those particular chairs and can tell at once when his hospitality has been abused.

Another class which sees many plays in New York city gratis is to be found in department stores. Nearly every director of a theatrical company—as distinct from a theater manager—is on cordial terms with the heads of departments in large retail mercantile establishments. Each of these heads will accept from six to a dozen pairs of tickets occasionally to distribute among his subordinates.

Often it is possible to get rid of 200 tickets or more in a day in this way, and when this is repeated in four or five stores the manager is sure of the attendance of an appreciable number of well dressed young women in the newest millinery and style of coiffure, each with a respectably attired cavalier and all on their best behavior. These people may not be ultra fashionable, but they will not disgrace their environment.

Unless the theatrical man is acquainted with the department heads, however, it is not an easy matter to give away tickets in such an establishment. The average clerk in a large store, especially of the feminine gender, is suspicious. She does not understand such open handed generosity, and there must be a lot of explanation to convince her that in offering something for nothing the manager has not some sinister design. As for the male clerks, if he gives them any directly they are sure to tell every one what a pull they have with the manager and pester him for tickets ever afterward, particularly when he has a success, with "the free list absolutely suspended."

It is far less of an undertaking to buy a hundred dollars' worth of low priced goods than to make a present of two tickets apiece to a dozen persons behind the counter. The telephone girls, stenographers and manicurists look askance at free tickets from a stranger, although when their confidence is won they will generally accept them with due gratitude.—Theater Magazine.

PERSIAN WEAVERS.

The Way the Carpets Are Made by the Hand Workers.

In describing Persian industries Mrs. Hume Griffith, in "Behind the Veil In Persia and Turkish Arabia," tells how the beautiful carpets of that country are made, of course without machinery of any kind. The warp is stretched on a loom, which is merely a frame. The woof consists of short threads woven and knotted by hand without the aid of a shuttle. When a row is finished it is pressed tightly to the rest of the web by means of a comb inserted into the warp.

"The weaver does not see the pattern as he works, for he sits with the reverse side of the web toward him. The looms are generally kept in an underground vaulted room, often with water running through the center. At each loom three or four workers sit, according to the size of the carpet. Sometimes the workers consist of one man and two children, and occasionally the owner uses boys and girls only for the weaving.

"I sat on the high stool by the side of a tiny girl, whose fingers were working away so fast I could hardly follow her movements. The overseer was walking up and down the room calling out instructions to the workers. To me it sounded a horrible, incoherent jumble, but the children seemed to understand it perfectly.

"The overseer held in his hand a paper, from which he was apparently reading out instructions. It was something like this:

"'To No. 1, three blue threads, one white, two green; No. 2, four yellow, one white,' and so on, each child repeating after the 'master' the instructions given. As it was all said in a high pitched monotone the result was confusing and deafening. But there the little weavers sit, day in, day out, week after week, in this dark, gloomy cellar, kept hard at it by the overseer."

WONDERS OF A WATCH.

Its Marvelous Mechanism and the Power That Moves It.

We hear much from time to time of the wonders of this or that complicated and intricate machine, but there are few pieces of machinery more marvelous than that of the common watch.

A watch, it may be stated as a general proposition, is the smallest, most delicate instrument of the same number of parts that has ever been devised. About 175 different pieces of material enter into its construction, and upward of 2,400 separate operations are comprised in its manufacture.

Certain of the facts connected with its performance are well nigh incredible when considered as a whole. A blacksmith strikes several hundred blows on his anvil in a day and, as a matter of course, is glad when Sunday comes, but the roller jewel of a watch makes every day—and day after day—432,000 impacts against the fork, or 157,680,000 blows during the course of a year, without stop or rest—some 3,153,600,000 blows during the space of twenty years, the period for which a watch is usually guaranteed to keep good time.

But the wonder of it does not cease here. It has been calculated that the power that moves the watch is equivalent to only four times the force used in a flea's jump. The watch power is therefore what might be termed the equivalent of a four flea-power. One horsepower would suffice to operate 270,000,000 watches.

Furthermore, the balance wheel of a watch is moved by this four flea-power 1 43-100 inches with each vibration, or 3,558¾ miles continuously in one year.

Not much oil is required to lubricate the little machine on its 3,500 mile run. It takes only one-tenth of a drop to oil the entire machinery for a year's service.—Harper's Weekly.

Duck by Duck.

An old farmer had brought twenty ducks to the market to sell and, after the usual amount of haggling inseparable from a bargain of that description, managed to dispose of the lot to a dealer.

"That's 30 shillings I have to give you," said the dealer as he proceeded to count it out.

But the old chap's strong point was not arithmetic, and he was not satisfied with this mode of payment.

"Noa, noa!" he exclaimed. "Ye bought them at wan an' six apiece, an' ye'll jist pay for them duck by duck."

And "duck by duck" it had to be.—London Scraps.

How It Is Done.

Returning from school the other afternoon, a little girl proudly informed her mother that she had learned to "punchtate."

"Well, dear," said her mother, "and how is it done?"

"You see, mother," explained the child, "when you write 'Hark!' you put a hatpin after it, and when you ask a question you put a buttonhook!"

DO YOU USE PILLS?

If In Doubt About the Right Pills to Use Read the Following Letter Carefully:

"I am one of those persons whose system requires aid," writes Mr. Young Gledhill, from Picton, "but it is so easily affected by reason of the great sensitiveness of the bowels that ordinary drastic pills inflict great injury to the delicate coating, and excite such persistent activity as to be with difficulty checked.

A PREACHER IS ACCUSED OF THEFT AND FORGERY

Witnesses From Far Off Macedonia Swear That Minister Did Not Give Money to Widow of Murdered Man —Trial in Toronto Creates Much Interest.

Toronto, June 1.—After a woman and three men from far-away Macedonia had sworn to certain facts relating to the charges on which he was yesterday placed on trial, Rev. G. M. Atlas went into the witness box in the Sessions Court yesterday, and, sticking to his original story, contradicted the crown's witnesses.

The court was crowded all day, a number of clergymen and women, believers in Atlas, being present.

Atlas is accused on three charges: Of stealing $405 from Velika Simoff, the widow; of forging a false receipt for the same, and uttering the alleged forged document when called upon by the courts to account for the non-payment of the money to the widow.

While the crown's case was closed yesterday afternoon, there will be witnesses in rebuttal of Atlas' story today. A verdict should be reached tonight.

County Crown Attorney Baird outlined the case for the prosecution. Atlas had been appointed to administer the estate of the man Simoff, who was murdered here, had drawn the money, some $400. Simoff's widow in Macedonia, had complained to the British consul that she had received nothing. Atlas was called before a judge and produced a receipt purporting to show that the money had been paid the widow.

"The crown," said Mr. Baird, "will now show that that money was not paid, that that receipt was not signed by the widow, and that Atlas acted upon the receipt as genuine, well knowing it to be the forgery of his own hand."

Atlas was called to the box in his own defence at 4.25 p.m.

"Mr. Atlas, did you pay that widow that money?" asked his counsel.

"I did [illegible]," he replied, firmly.

"Where?"

"At that village."

"In what money?"

"In English sovereigns."

"Who went with you?"

"Charles Risk."

Atlas and Risk had gone all the way and saw the money paid over. He repeated his previous story of his trip.

"She came and kissed my hand," he said. "She begged me to blacken the house of the man who had blackened her house. She begged me to get her husband's money for her. I said that I would."

Atlas said that when he offered to pay the money at the time, Georgieff said not to pay in the presence of the mayor, as he would take the money from her. Georgeiff said that they could have a little room in which to make the payment. The witnesses of the receipt went into the room. He described minutely the signing and the payment of the money.

He had run short of money and cabled to the police here for money. He did not receive it, although the order or draft was cashed by someone in Vienna after he had left.

He described his last trip to Egypt, where he was sent a newspaper clipping, in which a number of charges were set out. He had cabled to his solicitor: "Untrue, coming." He surrendered himself, was tried, and acquitted. Much followed here concerning allegations that Atlas had used several aliases in his life. This he denied.

There was more than a murmur of interest when the little widow entered the box. With her peasant's shawl over her swarthy features, she seemed a strange figure in the court-room. She gave her evidence through an interpreter.

She said that she had seen Atlas once when he came to the mayor's house in the village where she lived. She was called to the house and she went with her five-year-old boy. There a paper was drawn up, so that her husband's money should be sent to her. Mitsi Georgeiff drew up the paper. She made her mark to it in the presence of Tipo Tipoloff and one Christo. She understood that the document was to allow Atlas to get the money and send it to her. She went first to the verandah and found Tipo Tipoloff, Dimetri Georgieff, the mayor of the village. She had signed no receipt and had received no money.

She did not see, and had never before seen, Charles Risk, who was here called into the court room. No such man as Hadgi Janus, whose name was on the document, was there.

Demetri Georgieff, representative of the Cunard Steamship Co. at Florence, Italy, but who lives at Gorua Novelaine, swore that he had been with Atlas and others, among whom was a Turkish soldier. Charles Risk was not there, nor was any other Turk save the soldier. They went to the mayor's house and up to the porch. The mayor was there and several others who had come to see the mayor's son, Christo Tipoloff. He had never seen the alleged receipt. Atlas promised to send her all or part of the money when he arrived in Toronto.

Tipo Tipoloff, brother of the mayor, corroborated. He had come there in March to work and the police had heard of his arrival, he said. Christo Tipoloff, son of the mayor, gave evidence confirming the others.

CORONER ESTIMATED TRAIN WENT 15 MILES AN HOUR

Made This Calculation on Basis of Engineer's Admission Regarding the Control of the Air Brakes---The Evidence on the Fatal Accident to Mamie Feeley at G.T.R. Crossing Last Saturday---"I Did All I Could to Save the Child" Said Engineer.

The inquest into the death of Mamie Feeley, the little girl killed at the Park and Wescott street crossing of the G.T.R. on Saturday, was resumed last night before Coroner Gray at the council chamber, when a large number of witnesses were examined.

The solicitor for the G.T.R., Mr. E. D. Foster, represented the company, and a stenographer took full notes of the evidence. County Crown Attorney Wood was present in the interests of the Crown.

The court adjourned about eleven o'clock, after a three-hour session, and will meet again on Friday evening at 8 o'clock at the council chamber, when the verdict will likely be rendered.

WARNED THE CHILD.

Miss Mattie Hales said she was sitting on the verandah of her home on Park street, immediately north of the track. She saw the little girl going south towards the track.

By the unconcerned manner in which the child was approaching the train Miss Hales became alarmed lest she should be in danger and called to her to keep away from the track. The girl, however, didn't seem to hear her or hear the train.

She stepped with one foot over the rail and then suddenly became aware of her danger, jumped ahead, but the move was a fatal one and the train struck the child.

She was thrown back on to the cowcatcher and carried along on it beyond the cattle guard, which is ten or fifteen yards farther on the witness thought, and then rolled off the cowcatcher on to the track.

The train had not stopped and Miss Hales saw the engine pass over it's little victim.

The witness stated she couldn't say how fast the train was travelling at the time of the accident as all her attention was focused on the child.

Tommy Gordon, aged nine, who lives on Park street, four houses south of the railway crossing, saw the little girl taken from under the train. He didn't see the train strike her.

Tommy estimated that the child would be five feet from the cattle guard when she was taken out.

ANOTHER EYE WITNESS.

Herman La Plante saw the accident from the corner of Romaine and Park streets one block south of the track. He saw the girl crossing the track from the north side on Park street.

He thought she was carried about fifteen yards on the cowcatcher and she was taken beyond the cattle guard before she fell off on to the track.

The whole length of the engine and and pretty nearly half the baggage car passed over her he would judge. A man whom he took to be the firemen removed the body from under the car and carried it to the house on the south-west corner of Park and Westcott street.

La Plante said he could see the train from the corner he stood on, when it was about fifty yards from the crossing. It appeared to be going about fifteen miles an hour and slowed up after it had hit the child.

There were no houses to obstruct the engine driver's view of the crossing and the child on that section of the track.

To Mr Foster the witness said he couldn't be absolutely certain as to the rate of speed the train was making. He hadn't timed it.

To Mr Wood he said he had noticed that the same train had gone across the crossing considerably slower the past couple of days.

DIDN'T THINK TRAIN WENT TOO FAST.

Mrs. Libby, who lives on Parnell street, was coming along the track on the morning of the accident, from Lake to Park streets in company with Mrs. Glass and Mrs. Emery. She left the track at Park street.

The train was close behind them and was whistling for the crossing and the bell was ringing also.

She didn't know the child was killed till she saw her under the car, her attention being arrested by the noise of the train stopping.

She thought the child would be about half way under the baggage car.

In response to a question as to how fast the train would be travelling along the track, Mrs. Libby said she didn't think it was going anything like fifteen miles an hour.

She told Mr. Wood she had no relatives employed on the G.T.R. and had talked over the matter with no one outside her family.

WHISTLE BLEW THREE TIMES.

The next witness who was one of the three ladies walking along the track, Mrs Emma Emery, of Romaine street, didn't see the little girl hit either. She didn't see the accident.

Mrs. Emery expressed the opinion that the train wasn't travelling very fast.

The witness replying to Mr. Foster, said she heard the train blow the whistle three times at least and the bell rang. The train whistled for the Park street crossing, she informed Mr. Wood.

As she had left the track before the train came to the crossing she wouldn't be positive, she stated to Dr. Gray, whether the train whistled before it had passed here or not.

THOUGHT TRAIN WENT TOO FAST

Michael Neary, a resident of Lake street, volunteered the statement that he knew nothing whatever of the occurrence under inquest.

He lived about 200 feet from the Park street crossing and from his observations the train generally ran about 15 or 20 miles an hour. He didn't see the train pass on Saturday.

The 9 o'clock train from Belleville, he noticed had reduced its speed the last couple of nights.

TRAIN WAS GOING SLOW.

The next witness to testify, Mrs. Mary Leahy, said she had often seen the train going faster than it was last Saturday. In fact it struck her at once that it was travelling slower than usual.

She saw it from the window of her house, the second from Park and Westcott street.

A SENSATION IS SPRUNG IN THE SHOOTING CASE

A Remarkable Series of Affidavits Are Put Into Court at Bryson, Que., in Shooting Case—Alleged That Small Shot Came From Opposite Side.

Bryson, Que., June 1.—The sensation promised by the defence in Annie Murphy's case commenced yesterday, when R. de Salaberry, the Bryson lawyer, presented two petitions to the Court of King's Bench, presided over by Judge Weir, one asking that the bodies of Harry Howes and William Dale be exhumed and an autopsy made, and the second that he and the experts in the case be authorized to visit the scene of the tragedy when necessary.

The court house was crowded with jurymen awaiting empanelment, and with villagers, mostly men, who had heard that the petition would be read. Without preliminaries Mr. de Salaberry presented the extraordinary petition. It laid stress on the fact that no shots were produced in evidence in the late trial, and that only the testimony of physicians, who had made an external examination of the bodies, was produced. Having made this plain, the startling statement was made that in the fire described by the crown no trees had received marks from shot, but that in an opposite line there was plenty of marks of small shot. The petition asked that an autopsy be made to compare the shots in the body with the marks on the walls.

Several affidavits were then read, including that of Athole B. Reader, the New York expert, who alleges he made the startling discovery of a new line of fire, and of five suspicious-looking revolver shot marks in the milkhouse.

The sworn statement of Michael Murphy caused a sensation in court. "I solemnly swear," ran his affidavit, "that I did not kill Harry Howe and William Dales, and that I did not fire the shot that killed them."

Another affidavit was that of Emmanuel Godin, one of the jurymen, to the effect that the verdict of "not guilty" was the result solely and alone of their visit to the scene of the tragedy.

Addressing the court, Mr. de Salaberry said: "I fear we are confronted with the most terrible state of affairs ever seen in the legal history of the Dominion. The case is so strong I am really afraid of it."

"I want you to have information laid against Michael Murphy for perjury in this affidavit," declared the crown prosecutor. Then, after he had washed his hands of the affair, the judge expressed his willingness to allow the matter to go before a jury. "However," said the judge, "I am astounded at the audacity of Murphy in making such an affidavit. The motion is rejected." The second motion was granted by the judge, asking that the attorney and experts be allowed to visit the scene.

An affidavit of Bailiff Robertson, attached to the petition, said: "While experts were at work, Harold Armstrong, one of the actors in the tragedy, ordered them off, saying, 'You are trying to make things out that never happened,' when the experts had not spoken of their business there."

Mr. de Salaberry told the press representatives he was not discouraged at the judge's action. He had evidence more startling than exhumation could give, he declared.

EARL GREY'S REASON FOR TAKING NORTHLAND TRIP

He Aims to Show Englishmen That Northern Canada is Not the Frozen Wilderness They Commonly Suppose it to Be.

Ottawa, June 1.—Earl Grey is determined to destroy the "frozen north" idea regarding Canada which seems to prevail so largely in Great Britain. More than any other man he will accomplish this by his spectacular trip through the wild northland, arrangements for which will be completed in about a week. The party will be a little larger than was anticipated, probably about 12 in all.

To show the feasibility of the Hudson Bay route the trip will be accomplished in twenty days, provided no very severe weather is encountered. The only part of the arrangements which remains to be decided upon is the overland route to Hudson Bay, but it is very probable that the first intention of following the surveyed route of the proposed Hudson Bay Railway, and that the Governor-General will travel by canoe down the Hayes River from Norway House, at the head of Lake Winnipeg. The Hayes River is preferable to the Nelson River, in that there are fewer portages and navigation generally is less dangerous.

The overland trip to Port Nelson, which is also at the mouth of the Hayes River, will occupy eight days, and twelve days will be spent on the Government steamer Earl Grey, on the way to St. John's, Nfld., or Halifax. After leaving Port Nelson, the Governor-General will visit Fort Churchill. Thence he will go to Prefontaine Bay, on the northwest of Ungava, which is one of the finest natural harbors in the world. It is almost completely landlocked and is capable of accommodating the entire British fleet.

Big Island, on the northern shore of Hudson Strait, will next be visited. There are valuable mica mines there. At the eastern end of Hudson Strait a stop will be made at Fort Burwell. Then the Moravian missions and Dr. Grenfell's missions will be visited, and a straight course set for St. John's, Nfld., or Halifax.

DYING MAN MAY BE VICTIM; PICKED UP BESIDE C.P.R. TRACK

Base of Skull Smashed in by Some Heavy Instrument—Blood Spots Found on Suspects Clothing—Injured Man in Midland Hospital.

Midland, June 1.—With his head lying in a pool of blood the unconscious, still breathing, body of a man who goes locally by the name of "Scotty" was picked up beside the track, near Victoria Harbor, by the train from Midland. The base of the skull had been smashed in, apparently by some heavy instrument, as there was no evidence to show that the man had been run over by a train. From the amount of blood, it is thought he had lain there for from three to four hours. A strong smell of whisky was observable on the body.

The C.P.R. is erecting a big new steel and concrete elevator across from Victoria Harbor, on Maple Island, and it is believed that "Scotty," with a companion, who was a fellow-ironworker on the elevator, came from the camp on the island together and that his companion left at the track, returning to camp.

The injured man was placed on a train and taken to the hospital at Midland, where at last accounts he was still alive, though very low.

Scotty's companion was later arrested and lodged in jail at this place. Blood spots were found on his clothing.

The blade stuck in the woman's scalp. Flora blinked for a moment, then, with the hatchet still sticking in her head, she kicked Kiarfine down a flight of stairs to the street. Flora followed, and before he could rise seated herself on his body and drew the hatchet from her head as though it was a [illegible] beating Kiarfine with the weapon when the police rescued him.

The fight caused so much excitement that a riot call for the police was sounded. Kiarfine was arrested, charged with assault to commit murder. The woman was taken to a hospital, where her condition is reported serious.

Strangled Young Son.

Moosejaw, June 1.—Moses Smith, living with his married son six miles south of Brownlee, it is said, strangled his five-year-old son Monday night, and then attempted to suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

Smith had insisted on the boy accompanying him to feed the pigs, about 400 yards from the house, and carried the razor with him. Smith is not thought to be insane, though he attempted suicide in a similar manner a year ago, near Guelph, Ont. He came west from Ontario last fall.

SAID TO HAVE BEEN A DRUNKEN ORGY

New Inquest Opened Into Death of William Fowler

Orillia, June 1.—Before Coroner R. E. Darling of Greenwood the second inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of William Fowler, whose dead body was found alongside the Grand Trunk Railroad tracks just east of Atherley Junction, on May 20, commenced yesterday.

The death of Fowler is alleged to have been caused by his being struck by the pilot of Grand Trunk engine 2,019, running on the Midland division between Peterboro and Orillia, while he was lying on or near the track in a drunken stupor. The previous inquest, which was commenced by Dr. Galloway of Beaverton, developed certain irregularities, which rendered the holding of this second inquest necessary. The embarrassment which would have obviously followed a formal dismissal of coroner and jury was fortunately avoided by Dr. Galloway's voluntary retirement from the case, when he dismissed the jury and sent in his resignation, claiming that the exaggerated reports of his conduct of the inquest made it undesirable that he should continue in office.

From the evidence adduced at the previous inquest, which Crown Attorney Farewell will probe more deeply now, Fowler, with five companions, indulged in a drunken orgie, which is alleged to have extended over several days, Thursday, May 20, the climax being reached in a quarrel in which one of the companions of Speers was badly cut up. Fowler in some way became disengaged from the party and wandered on to the railway track from the shack where the drinking was taking place, which is a mile [illegible] of Atherley Junction, to a point about 400 yards from the station. Here he fell across the track and was found the following morning dead.

Devastation at Mozambique.

Lisbon, Portugal, June 1.—Mail advices from Imhamban, Portuguese East Africa, confirms earlier reports of devastation wrought by the cyclone that swept the coast of Mozambique early in April. LAWSUITS TO FOLLOW PAMPHLET

Montreal, June 1.—The brochure issued the other day exposing the Emancipation Masonic Lodge, is creating a great deal of interest from the number of lawsuits which are sure to be entered.

Omer Chavut, editor of La Tribune of Sherbrooke, who had to retire on account of the famous pamphlet, has already sued La Croix and Mr. Lemieux, the author of the brochure, for $10,000, while a good deal of interest is also felt in St. Hyacinthe, where one Mr. Damase Bouchard, city clerk, also named in the book, has entered an action against a Mr. Cartier, who stated that Bouchard said he was a Mason. It is said that all the members of the Emancipation will be subpoenaed in this case.

ROOSEVELT ADVISES SEVERITY

London, June 1.—Theodore Roosevelt was yesterday presented with the freedom of the City of London, and he accepted the honor with [illegible] ism that led him into a frankness of speech that created a sensation in old Guildhall.

Mr. Roosevelt eulogized British rule in Uganda and the Soudan. He also declared that Great Britain had given Egypt the best Government that the country had had in two thousand years. But in certain vital points it had erred, he said. Timidity and sentimentality might cause more harm than violence and injustice.

"Sentimentality," he added, "is the most broken reed upon which righteousness can lean."

Mr. Roosevelt denounced the Nationalist party of Egypt as neither desirous nor capable of guaranteeing primary justice. It was trying to bring murderous chaos upon the land.

HEAVY INFLUX OF CHINESE

Vancouver, B.C., June 1.—The phenomenally heavy influx of Chinese into Canada through the Port of Vancouver, which has been netting the Dominion and Provincial Governments capital at the rate of about $750,000 per annum, was yesterday explained by receipts of the information from Hong Kong that there is a report in circulation among the Chinese there that Canada intends shortly to increase the head tax from $500 to $1,000.

THE COLLEGIATE CADETS

Col. Young, of Kingston, reviewed the Collegiate Cadets yesterday. The lads made a fine showing. Three thousand Cadets paraded in Toronto last week before General French in the presence of thousands of spectators. They are our choicest blood. In the young man is our hope. To be a good soldier one must be ready to take commands and obey them. The training received as a cadet is invaluable. He is made to use his head, to straighten up and should there ever come a time in future years when the cause of Empire must be sustained, it will be to the cadets, now lads, then men, that we must look to march to the call of the bugle, to go to the front and die if necessary. True, the rifles are harmless. The muscles of the lad are soft, and the flesh tender, but the day will come when they will be men and take active part in the affairs of life, of which they now are merely spectators.

BALAAM

Jack E. Middleton, of the Toronto News in his special column draws attention to the fact that a western preacher had for his subject, "Was Balaam's Donkey a talker?" Middleton declines to answer this question, but ventures the opinion that most asses are.

But what does this present century, this day, this hour, want to listen to sermons on Balaam and his ass for? Men and women are looking for the real message to help in the now and here, and when they get it, that something that they are looking for, there will be more of the masses and less of the classes attending church than there are to-day.

A CONUNDRUM

They held the sixth World's Sunday school convention in Washington, D. C., last week, and one of the events was a mammoth parade. But the negro delegates were barred. Why was that? The answer is very easy. The color line. Birth is a mere matter of accident. If our ancestors had been born in Africa we would have had dark skins and wooly hair. We deserve no credit. There is nothing for any of us to be conceited about for if we look back far enough we are liable to find that one of our forefathers was hung for sheep stealing or some other crime.

The authorities who barred the negro gave a very poor illustration of their teaching.

And what must China think? The gospel as preached them by Canadian missionaries is free but if the Chinaman wills to enter Canada, he must pay $500, while he is barred at any price by that great missionary, Uncle Sam.

We seek to send them a gospel of love, yet the nation that is the home of the missionaries, hands them a real live lesson in hate.

"JUST KEEP STILL IT WON'T HURT"

Apropo of the Dental Convention that convenes to-day in Toronto, it is trusted these gentlemen will look matters, as they ever do, squarely in the face. There is no suggestion that the profession will be down in the mouth, or take the bit in its teeth. No doubt, with a laudable idea to be thorough the profession will announce that it spares no pains to make every operation successful.

QUEBEC BRIDGE TO COST $20,000,000.

And now it is announced that the new Quebec Bridge is to cost $13,000,000. When we add the sum, nearly $7,000,000 which has been thrown away on the structure that fell down, we get a cost of $20,000,000. Great is the Laurier Government and great are its bills payable.

London Times.

THE SILENT OFFENDER.

Utica Globe.

Two Golfers at Pinehurst, one of them an amateur who had been runner-up in several big tournaments, were starting out, and a friend from Chicago, who was leaving that afternoon and had packed his clubs, started to walk around with them.

"You can go," said the classy amateur, "if you won't talk. You've got to keep quiet."

They started. The tournament player hooked his drive into the high grass off the first tee, had a lot of trouble getting it out, made a bad put when he did reach the green and, all in all, looked a fearful duffer.

He topped his ball on the second tee and it rolled off a few feet. The friend from Chicago was standing by. He had not said a word.

"Dog-gast you!" shouted the unlucky amateur. "I know you haven't said anything, but stop your thinking!"

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL MEETING

North Monaghan, May 30. — The Township Council met as a Court of Revision to-day at 1.30 p.m., in the town hall. Mr. W. G. Howden was elected chairman.

The only appeal was made by Mr. F. J. Hall, secretary of the Peterborough Agricultural Society, claiming exemption from taxes on the property assessed to R. A. Morrow, as owner, and Messrs. J. Garbutt, S. Redmond, S. Deyell, W. B. Stewart, G. Gillespie and R. A. Leary as tenants. Mr. R. H. Leary appeared for the appellants. As it was not shown that the Peterborough Agricultural Society were either the owners or occupants of the property, the court confirmed the assessment.

The court then adjourned.

At the close of the Court of Revision the council resolved into session for the transaction of public affairs of the township.

All the members were present, the reeve, W. G. Howden, presiding.

The minutes of the two next preceding meetings were read and confirmed.

Mr. Switzer, representing the Toronto Savings and Loan Company, appeared before the council, and in presenting three petitions from ratepayers, asking for the construction of concrete sidewalks upon Morrow and Sherbourne streets, stated that it was the desire of the petitioners to have the council issue debentures and construct the sidewalks, the whole cost thereof to be charged as a frontage tax against the property owners along the streets.

It was moved by Messrs. Foster and May: That this council consents to construct concrete sidewalks along both sides of Morrow street, and along the west side of Sherbourne street, said walks to be placed in such a manner as may be approved by the majority of the ratepayers owning property thereon. The entire cost of the construction and manufacture of, and repairs thereto, and the cost of keeping the same clear of snow and all other cost or charges in connection with the preparing of by-law, issuing of debentures and making plans and specifications shall be paid by a frontage tax upon the property owners affected, and that the matter be referred to a committee consisting of the reeve and councillors Foster and May, who are hereby authorized to consult the township solicitor and an engineer, if necessary, and to report to this council.—Carried.

A communication was read from D. M. Roberts, stating that the culvert across the road at his lot was not large enough to carry off the water, which backed up and damaged his property.

Moved by Messrs. May and Morrow, that the road commissioner of road district No. 3, is hereby directed to exchange the tile in the culvert at D. M. Roberts' for a 24-inch tile.—This was carried.

Mr. R. H. Rust appeared before the council and asked them to open a ditch along the west side of Webber's avenue, so as to turn the water off his property. No action was taken.

Accounts were handed in as follows: John Tully, 27 yards of gravel at 20 cents, $5.40; Peterborough Examiner, balance printing, 1909, $26.70; R. E. Wood, balance of cost of funeral of E. Armstrong, $5; Davis-Thompson Co., premium on insurance, $5.95; B. Sanderson, sundries, 65c.; W. Anderson, burying a carcass, 50c.; G. Moncrief, repairs to Lockus bridge, $7.

Moved by Messrs. Morrow and Robson, that the accounts of Peterborough Examiner, R. E. Wood, Davis-Thompson Co., B. Sanderson, W. Anderson and G. Moncrief be passed and paid, and that the account of J. Tully be referred for investigaiton.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Foster and Morrow, that the road commissioner of road division No. 2 is hereby directed to grade Webber's avenue and to put in a culvert is necessary.—Carried.

The clerk reported that the amount of money due each road division from commutation tax, 1910, was as follows: Road division No. 1, $189.75; No. 2, $153; No. 3, $111; No. 4, $79.50; No. 5, $86.25; No. 6, $450.

By-laws Nos. 624, to appoint road commissioners; 627, to appoint a collector; and 628, to divide the public highways in the township into six groups, for the purpose of maintenance and improvement thereof, were then regularly read and finally passed, signed and sealed.

Council then adjourned to meet when called by the reeve.

A TIMELESS WORLD.

What Would Happen if We Were Entirely Inclosed by Clouds.

If astronomers are right in ascribing the wonderful brightness of Venus to the existence of an atmosphere continually filled with clouds, then she must be a world without time—at least there can be no measurement of time there such as we have here.

It is because we can see the sun and the stars that we are able to traverse the oceans and run railroad trains across the continents.

Surround our earth with an unbroken shell of clouds and what would become of all our clocks and chronometers? Not a ship could safely cross the sea; not a railroad would be able to run its trains without a series of frightful wrecks. In a few weeks every clock and watch would be hopelessly wrong and all exact timekeeping would cease.

Probably there are few who stop to think of the way in which our everyday life depends upon astronomical observations. Our great primary timekeeper is the earth rotating on its axis. If we could not see the sun and stars because of clouds we should not know that the earth rotates and there would be no standard to which we could refer our timepieces and by which we could correct them. In fact, we should probably have no timepieces.

There could be no hours and minutes, for they are exact divisions of an ideal day based upon celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

They could not be based upon clocks or other mechanical devices, because the most exquisite chronometer that can be constructed will not keep time indefinitely and must be continually corrected by means of observations of the stars made in the observatories.

There could be no accurate maps of countries or charts of the seas, for such maps and charts can be made only by the aid of astronomical observations.

There could be no parallels of latitude or meridians of longitude, for they, too, are based on celestial observations which would be impossible to us.

We should not know with any certainty where we were upon the earth. We could not measure the distance from New York to London nor from New York to San Francisco.

Poetical minds, moved by the spectacle of Venus in her glory, have drawn brilliant pictures of the delights of life in that radiant world, but there is another side to the question of which we may well think as we gaze admiringly upon her electric splendor.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York American.

The "Arabian Nights."

The collection of tales called the "Thousand and One Nights," or the "Arabian Nights," is of unknown date and authorship. It was first made known in Europe about the end of the seventeenth century by Antoine Galland, who was employed by Colbert to collect manuscripts in the east. The copy of the Arabic manuscript brought by Galland from Syria contained a marginal note dated 1584, and from internal evidence the middle of the fifteenth century has been fixed upon as the probable period of the composition of the work. Some of the tales were evidently borrowed by the writer from other authors, and Von Hammer identifies at least the plot and some of the stories of the "Arabian Nights" with an earlier collection in Persian called the "Thousand Fanciful Stories."

April Fooling.

The origin of the custom of April fooling cannot be traced with any degree of certainty. In the literature of the last century there are found many references to it, and yet beyond that it is scarcely possible to go. One suggestion is that the custom of playing tricks on the first day of April was derived from some ancient pagan custom, such as the Huli festival among the Hindoos or the Roman feast of the fools. One fact, however, we do know, and that is that the practice prevails in many countries under various names which would seem to indicate that it dates away back to the early history of the race.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Four Extremes.

The coldest place on earth inhabited by man is Verkhoyansk, above the arctic circle, in northeastern Siberia. The thermometer there drops to 90 degrees below zero in January, but sometimes rises to 86 degrees above zero in the shade in July, dropping, however, to the freezing point on the warmest summer nights. The hottest place in the world is the interior of the great Sahara desert, in Africa, where the thermometer rises to 122 degrees. The wettest place is Greytown, Nicaragua, where the mean annual rainfall is 200 inches. The place of least rain is Port Nolloth, in South Africa, where less than an inch sometimes falls in a year.

All For Love.

"Did you ever know a girl to die for love?"

"Yes."

"Did she just fade away and die because some man deserted her?"

"No; she just took in washing and worked herself to death because the man she loved married her."—Houston Post.

"The Queen of the Savannah River."

Travelers going south by way of Savannah are always attracted by some such exclamation as "The queen is waving at us!" as the steamer glides into the Savannah river from the Atlantic. Nobody seems to know the real name of this unusual woman, as she is always called "the queen." The romance is that years ago, when she was young, she had a lover who went to sea. She promised to greet him on his return, waving a handkerchief if by day, a lantern if by night. He never came back, and for more than thirty years "the queen" has greeted every steamer that has sailed up the Savannah river, waving a handkerchief by day, a lantern by night. It is said that she never misses a boat at no matter what hour it may pass her home. All the navigators know about "the queen," and they never fail to salute her when passing.

HIS COURTSHIP

By HELEN R. MARTIN,
Author of "Tillie: A Mennonite Maid."

COPYRIGHT. 1907. By McCLURE, PHILLIPS & COMPANY.

"Eunice! It's no use! We can't be 'wise,' you and I—we can't struggle against the inevitable! The power that draws you and me together is stronger than our wills—we must yield to it!"

She drew her hand away from his. "No, no! If you mean we must yield to it at the expense of another girl's happiness, I will not!"

"Georgiana, you mean?"

"You are betrothed to her."

"The devil I am!"

"But you are 'as good as.'"

"That's her idea, not mine. I never originated it. And if I have any influence with myself"—

"You told me you loved her!"

"I spoke figuratively. I mean I loved youth, beauty, grace."

"Oh!"

"Don't you see?"

"Please to label your remarks to me, 'literal' or 'figurative.'" She was speaking quite seriously, with a look of bewilderment; "or I may misunderstand you painfully!"

"No, Eunice, you and I will not misunderstand each other again. For we shall speak the same language—the language of our hearts!"

"But if it was not Miss Ellery, what was it that kept you from me when you wanted to come?"

"I will tell you."

He drew a long, deep breath, then half turned to her as he walked beside her and talked.

"It was while the days dragged by when I was waiting for a letter from you, and my heart grew sick with hope deferred that a great truth began to dawn upon me. I came into the realization that my whole horizon was colored by the thought of Eunice; that in thinking of her I found my only interest, my only happiness; that in the meeting of her life and mine, the deepest needs of my nature had been met and fed; and at last I came face to face with the knowledge that she was all to me that a woman can be to a man; that I loved her utterly!"

Eunice walked at his side like one moving in a dream. For a moment the silence between them throbbed with their strong emotion.

"And then," he presently went on, the gravity of his voice calming her throbbing heart, "came my bitter struggle with myself. I was not willing to take advantage of your inexperience—before you had had an opportunity to see other men. I knew you cared for me, but how could I be sure that your feeling would bear the test of your larger knowledge and experience? Clearly my honorable course was to be silent, to withdraw into the background of your life, until you should come into a mature understanding of your own heart.

"Then, the simplicity of the life I would have to offer you as the wife of a teacher compared with the brilliant career you might have—possessed of large means—a man would have to think better of himself than I thought to ask a woman to make such a sacrifice.

"The possibility that you might think me a fortune hunter I put aside as an unworthy thought of you. That your aunt might attribute such a motive to me—I was indifferent to that, though I believe she would favor me as a suitor, she's so daft about 'family.' And she's not mercenary either. So my own comparative poverty would not stand in my way with her.

"Then I reasoned that in denying my heart I risked not only my own life's happiness, but yours as well. Fortune hunters would swarm like bees about you, and in your guilelessness how easily you might be deceived into a wretched marriage! Why should I step aside for others even less worthy than myself? I wanted you now—now while that sweet wild wood flavor was upon you! Perhaps you would never lose it if I took you to myself and kept you so close to me forever that the world could not get near to you. Why should I leave it to others to enjoy the charming opening up of your young mind to the wonderful panorama of life, for who could delight more than I in the unfolding of your beautiful spirit? Had I not discovered you? Why should I not have my reward? Why should I not woo you, marry you, travel with you all over the world, teach and guide you where I could and myself be taught and guided by your womanly loveliness? Eunice, I was almost appalled when once I gave rein to myself at the strength of my love for you, for I felt the hurt of it almost as much as the ecstasy.

"I tried to persuade myself that your love for me was as fundamental, as inevitable, as mine for you, but the very force of my own passion made me distrust the sophistries of my selfishness. I knew that if I would not degrade my great love for you I must put your best welfare above my own desires, I must leave you free—until you had taken your bearings in the world and had found yourself. And then, if it were not too late—

"That thought gripped my very soul!

"And so, Eunice, as I am a man and not a god, my love and not my reason carried the day—and I am here with you!"

He stopped in the solitary path into which they had strayed and opened his arms to her.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"IT will bump you to hear it, Georgiana, and I'm awfully sorry for you, but I can't help it," said Daisy, as one afternoon in October the two girls strolled about the campus; "I've got to tell you. You are laboring under the delusion that Kinross is in love with you—we can't of course, understand how he can help being, when he had the chance of watching us for four weeks without our knowing it. But," she added in the tone of an oracle, "he is not! Better you should know it now while none of your feelings except your pride are mixed up and before you hurt poor Gateshead to the point of driving him into my arms."

"How can you possibly know anything of Dr. Kinross' feelings, Daisy?" Georgiana asked. "He is not a man to flaunt them before the public. And I don't suppose he has taken you into his confidence!"

"Oh, but he has!"

Georgiana turned and looked at her quickly. "What do you mean, Daisy?"

"He not a man to flaunt his feelings! Gracious, he can't repress himself! He just has to let out to every passerby!"

"And has he confided to you that he is not in love with me?" Georgiana smilingly inquired.

"He made me hear the whole story of Eunice—her turning out to be an heiress and the daughter of one of the oldest and best families in the country. Well, Georgiana, no man looks as he looked while speaking of that girl unless he has gone the way of all flesh and become mad with love. You would have seen it for yourself, but for your prepossession that he loved you. What a chance I missed myself, or if I'd dreamed that Pete was him—I mean he—I might have had a try at him myself, for I do like the creature rather. It isn't his fault that all the girls get silly about him. Yes," she said thoughtfully, "if I'd ever dreamed of his being himself I certainly would have given my attention to his case, for I know the man is rather fond of me—you mayn't have noticed it—and my own private opinion is that we were made for each other. No hope for any of us now, though, not even for you, Georgie. He's shelved! The long lost heiress has him. Whether he has her I don't know. I'd love to see him refused. I'd like to have a chance to refuse him myself. Though in such a contingency, if he continued to want me, I'd think about it. As for you, Georgiana, you'll have to content yourself with Gateshead."

Georgiana laughed. "Your gratuitous surmises, my dear, are all wrong. How could a man like Dr. Kinross care for a mere country girl like Eunice, a sort of servant to the farmer's family? She was a little less illiterate than the rest, but a simple, uneducated country girl nevertheless. Why, I never saw Dr. Kinross speak to her."

"He spoke to her whether we saw him or not."

"He is too clever a man and too fastidious to become enamored of an unsophisticated country girl," Georgiana repeated confidently. "The idea is absurd."

"He loves, adores, worships her!" Daisy affirmed. "He's mad about her. What, I ask, is more alluring to a world weary cynic than rural simplicity?"

"Rural simplicity," reasoned Georgiana, "is very well in its way. I think I don't underrate its value and its charm. But a highly complex mental and spiritual organism like that of Dr. Kinross could not be at one with a simple organism like that of the girl Eunice. It stands to reason."

"She was duplex or complex enough to land her fish!" Daisy vulgarly declared. "And to think, Georgiana, how you missed your chance when you had him all to yourself for a whole month—for, of course, I wasn't in the way."

"No doubt Dr. Kinross found my true self more quickly because of my unconsciousness of his presence than if we had come together in the ordinary way and been hampered by conventional forms and reserves."

"And maybe that's why he fell in love with Eunice instead of you."

"I don't follow your reasoning."

"Clear as mud! He found you too superior. Prefers rural simplicity. I ask you," she demanded, with a theatrical wave of her hand, "why he is now, at the very beginning of the term, away from college—in New York or Newport or some place? Echo answers, 'He's gone to see his girl!' Here comes your venerable young father!"

President Ellery, white haired and wrinkled, but vigorous, came toward them in the path, a cane in one hand, an open letter in the other.

"I have a letter from Dr. Kinross," he announced, waving it before them. "Bad news! He's resigned. But we shall not accept his resignation. We'll give him a year off and get his promise to return next fall—with his bride. He's about to be married and intends to spend a year in traveling with his wife in Europe and Asia."

"The unfortunate lady's name?" inquired Daisy, for Georgiana could not speak.

They waited breathless while President Ellery slowly took out his eyeglasses, adjusted them and examined the letter.

"Miss Eunice Wolcott."

"Stung again!" cried Daisy, tottering.

The two girls walked on, while President Ellery proceeded in the opposite direction.

"Please, Georgie, don't let it rattle you," Daisy coaxed her, slipping her arm through her cousin's. "As I said in the beginning of my remarks to you this afternoon, none of your feelings is as yet engaged except your pride. Tell me," she demanded, with an air of conceit, "can I read men? Am I observant? Am I cute and clever? Are my perceptions keen? My parting advice to you is, be kind to Gateshead before it is yet too late and he saith in his heart, 'I have no pleasure in her.'"

Georgiana withdrew her arm from Daisy's. "I was mistaken in Dr. Kinross," she said, with dignity.

"So it would seem."

"He is, after all, commonplace. He was unworthy of the high friendship I gave him."

"'If you want that, you must climb.' He wasn't husky enough to do it."

"I had fancied him a man," said Georgiana, "to whom the low plane of the average marriage would be impossible, one whom the universe would call only to the highest union. But he was quite incapable of meeting me. A country girl's pink and white prettiness"— She shrugged her shoulders, leaving her remark unfinished.

"It only goes to show," said Daisy, "that there isn't the least use sporting up for a mere man, nor yet in making an effort. I don't really believe Eunice tried for Pete. After this I'm going to live up to my favorite motto, 'Let Things Slide.' You come out better in the end."

THE END.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

CURE Sick Headache and relieve all the troubles incident to a bilious state of the system, such as Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Distress after eating, Pain in the Side, &c. While their most remarkable success has been shown in curing

SICK headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint, while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured

HEAD Ache they would be almost priceless to those who suffer from this distressing complaint; but fortunately their goodness does not end here, and those who once try them will find these little pills valuable in so many ways that they will not be willing to do without them. But after all sick head

ACHE is the bane of so many lives that here is where we make our great boast. Our pills cure it while others do not.

Carter's Little Liver Pills are very small and very easy to take. One or two pills make a dose. They are strictly vegetable and do not gripe or purge, but by their gentle action please all who use them.

Chesterfield Superficiality.

Chesterfield's idea of excellence was essentially superficial, for his praise of solid acquirement and genuine principle is always coupled with the assertion of their entire inutility if unaccompanied by grace, external polish and an agreeable manifestation. He omits all consideration of their intrinsic worth and absolute dignity. Their value to the individual, according to him, is wholly proportioned to his skill in using them in a social form.

In one of his earlier letters to Philip Stanhope he writes: "What an advantage has a graceful speaker with genteel motions, a handsome figure, over one who shall speak full as much good sense, but who is destitute of these ornaments! In business how prevalent are the graces, how detrimental is the want of them! If you should not acquire manners, all the rest will be of little use to you. By manners I mean engaging, insinuating, shining manners, a distinguished politeness, an almost irresistible address, a superior gracefulness in all you say and do." He would have manners overlay individuality and goes so far as to declare that a soldier is a brute, a scholar a pedant and a philosopher a cynic without good breeding.—London Standard.

The Butcher Bird's Larder.

It is possible that the butcher bird's "curious and cruel habit" of impaling various creatures upon hedge thorn is his way of supporting his wife during her period of seclusion. Of many species the female is fed by the male on the nest, but the butcher bird's prey consists often of creatures which are too large to be eaten at a mouthful. Even if the male could always drag these carcasses to the nest it is obvious that the female could not eat them there, so the "larder" may have been hit upon as a happy device to get over the difficulty, the female flitting thither to help herself whenever she is hungry.—Country Life.

Moral Suasion and a Strap.

"She seems to have abandoned her moral suasion ideas relative to the training of children."

"She has."

"How did it happen?"

"Well, I was largely instrumental in bringing about the change. You see, she has no children of her own, and I grew weary of her constant preaching and theorizing, so I loaned her our Willie."

"Loaned her your boy?"

"Precisely. She was to have him a week on her solemn promise to confine herself entirely to moral suasion."

"Did she keep her promise?"

"She did, but at the expiration of the week she came to me with tears in her eyes and pleaded for permission to whale him just once."—New York Mail.

Confucius on Kingcraft.

"What is kingcraft?" demanded a disciple.

Confucius replied, "Food enough, troops enough and a trusting people."

"Were there no help for it which could be best spared of the three?"

"Troops," said the master.

"And were there no help for it which could be better spared of the other two?"

"Food," said the master. "From of old all men die, but without trust a people cannot stand."

Got It Mixed.

An amusing blunder was made in the case of a judicial declaration that certain resident magistrates "could no more state a case than they could write a Greek ode."

This was made to read that the magistrates "could no more state a case than they could ride a Greek goat."—London Scraps.

The Judge's Error.

"Give one verse of 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

"I can't do it, judge."

"Quote a passage from the constitution."

"Too many fer me."

"Then I can't naturalize you, my man."

"But I was born here, judge. I don't want to be naturalized. I'm after a bailiff's job."—Kansas City Journal.

The Tramp—Ah, 'ow deceptive is 'uman natur'. Fer two nights I've slept in your barn, eaten of yer poultry an' drunk of yer cider, and now yez treats me as an utter stranger.—London Sketch.

The Sphinx.

"What was the riddle of the sphinx?"

"I don't know; but, judging by a sphinx's facial expression, I don't believe it was very funny."—Washington Star.

THE COLORADO DESERT.

Its Stunted Tree Forms and Its Petrified Forests.

In places in the Colorado desert are stream beds where perhaps once in several years heavy rains in distant mountains will cause water to flow for a short time. In these dry water courses several varieties of stunted tree forms are often found. The desert willow, which resembles the willow with which we are familiar, though smaller in size; the val verde, or green tree, a tree which is a bright green from trunk to tip of limb in every twig, and the ironwood, so dense in fiber that it turns an ax's edge, are the principal varieties. They are rarely above twenty feet high and, like all desert vegetation, have not a leaf.

They are apparently outcasts from the two great tree divisions, deciduous and citrus, for they have leaves neither to lose nor to keep. These may be called the living dogs of the tree family. We will find here also the dead lions.

Not far from the mountain range we will come upon the remains of what were once extensive forests of gigantic trees, now turned to stone and lying as they fell centuries ago. The great trunks, perfect in grain, knot and bark fiber, cumber the ground in tangled confusion in those places which have been protected from the drifting sand, giving evidence that what is now a desert was once upon a time a tropical wilderness.—Travel Magazine.

RUB THE OTHER EYE.

And Let the One In Which the Bit of Cinder Lodges Alone.

Nine persons out of every ten with a cinder or any other foreign substance in the eye will instantly begin to rub it with one hand while hunting for a handkerchief with the other. This is all wrong. The right way is not to rub the eye with the cinder in it, but to rub the other as vigorously as you like.

A few months ago I was riding on the engine of a fast express. The engineer threw open the front window of the cab, and I caught a cinder in my eye, which gave me intense pain. I began to rub the eye desperately, when the engineer called to me:

"Let that eye alone and rub the other one."

Thinking he was chaffing me, I only rubbed the harder.

"I know the doctors think they know it all, but they don't, and if you will let that eye alone and work on the other one you will soon have the cinder out," shouted the engineer.

I did as he directed and soon felt the cinder down near the inner canthus and made ready to take it out.

"Let it alone and keep at the well eye," again shouted the engineer.

I did so for a minute longer, and then, looking into a small glass the engineer handed me, I saw the offender on my cheek. I have tried it many times since, always with success.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Where History Began.

Describing a visit to the tombs of the Egyptian kings, Albert Bigelow Paine in Harper's Weekly writes of "the splendid tomb of Amenophis II., of the eighteenth dynasty, who lived in the glory of Egypt, 1600 B. C., a warrior who slew seven Syrian chiefs with his own hand. The top of the sarcophagus is removed and is replaced by heavy plate glass. Just over the sleeper's face there is a tiny electric globe, and I believe one could never tire of standing there and looking at that quiet visage, darkened by age, but beautiful in its dignity, unmoved, undisturbed by the storm and stress of the fretful years. How long he has been asleep! The Israelites were still in bondage when he fell into that quiet doze, and for their exodus a century or two later he did not care. Hector and Achilles and Paris and the rest had not yet battled on the plains of Troy."

HIGH-O-ME

Thats the Way to Pronounce Hyomei, the Money-Back Catarrh Cure

As doubt exists in the minds of many readers of the Review, let us say that the above is the proper pronunciation of America's most wonderful catarrh cure. Wm. Madill is the agent for Hyomei in Peterborough and he will sell you an inhaler, a bottle of Hyomei, and full instructions for use, for only $1.00.

And if it fails to cure acute or chronic catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, croup, hay fever or coughs and colds, he will give you your money back. The person who suffers with catarrh after such an offer as that, must like to snuffle, spit and wheeze, and be generally disgusting.

Read what Mr. Higginbotham, a respected citizen of Guelph, Ont., says of Hyomei.

"I have the best kind of reasons for giving Booth's Hyomei my hearty endorsement. I had suffered with an itching sensation in my throat, swelling of the nasal glands and glands leading to my eyes, in fact a genuine catarrh for several months. I used several remedies but received no relief until I used Booth's Hyomei. I am glad there is on sale a remedy that relieves like this one and also glad to endorse the use and speak a good word for Booth's Hyomei."—N. Higginbotham, 63 Queen street, Guelph, Ont.

OBITUARY

The following contains the particulars of the death of Miss Lula A. Cathcart, daughter of Mrs. Wm. Cathcart, Cavanville, Ont;

News of the death of Annie Lulu Cathcart, aged 20 years, even though anticipated for a day previous, came as a shock to this community last Friday morning, May 13th. This young lady passed away in her room in the McCay block at about 3 o'clock on that date, after a short illness, caused by an attack of lagrippe, with complications, which finally resulted in death being caused by meningitis. The only near relatives present being her sister, Miss Lily, and an uncle, Wm. Cathcart, of Lang, Sask. The deceased came to this town from her former home in Cavanville, Ontario, early last fall, and, with her sister, opened dressmaking parlors in the McCay block, where this business was continued until a week ago. During this short time both these young ladies had made many friends in Oxbow, as was evidenced by the many words of sympathy and acts of kindness tendered them in the hour of trial. The remains were shipped on Friday morning's train to the home of the parents, accompanied by the grief stricken sister and uncle.—Oxbow, Sask., Herald.

CORONER ESTIMATED THAT TRAIN WENT 15 MILES AN HOUR

RUNS AS FAST AS 18 OR 20 MILES

Patrick Boulton is a shipper in the Canadian Cordage Company's plant, and has daily opportunities to observe the trains as they pass by. He saw the Port Hope train go by the Cordage on Saturday morning, and thought its speed was too great for within the city limits.

He had seen it going over the crossing at about eighteen or twenty miles an hour.

The outgoing trains went faster than the incoming ones, as the latter slowed down near Lake street for the semaphore.

20 TO 25 MILES AN HOUR.

Robert Nicholls, who lives in the first house south of the track on the west side of Park street, saw the child taken out from under the train.

He thought the train frequently went at from 20 to 25 miles an hour. It was about fifty feet from where the child had been hit by the train to where she was taken out from under the car.

He didn't see the accident.

DOUBTED IF BRAKES WERE USED

Adam Frick, a Canadian Cordage Co. employee, saw the train go by.

The steam was turned off a little below Lake street, and he presumed this was done because the engineer saw the child on the track.

Mr. Frick gave semi-expert evidence to the effect that he didn't think the emergency brakes were applied, as it was two train lengths from where the steam was turned off to where the child was hit, and he had seen trains going just as fast come to a sudden stop in a shorter distance than that. He wouldn't [illegible] speed.

Mrs. Lucy Glass, who was with Mrs. Emery and Mrs. Leahy, didn't cast any further light on the matter in her testimony.

The engine driver, George Mimms, testified that it was the fireman, Nelson Babcock, and not himself, who took the child out from under the baggage car and carried her to Cavanagh's, at the corner of Westcott and Park streets.

Mr. Wood didn't ask the witness any questions as to the rate at which the train was going, or on his observance of the whistling signals regulations.

Mr. Foster thought that Mr. Mimms should have a right to tell if he employed the usual signals of warning.

Mr. Wood stated that he didn't want to ask Mr. Mimms anything that would incriminate himself.

Upon further examination by Mr. Foster, the witness stated he had been an engine driver for forty years, and had been running the Port Hope train for twenty-five years.

Approaching the crossing on the day of the accident he gave the usual whistling signals. After coming around the curve near the crossing he saw three ladies on the track and turned off steam and whistled.

He saw the child walking south on Park street toward the track, but thought she would get across it all right, or else stay on the side she was on.

Later, by the way the child was walking along unconcernedly to the track, he came to the conclusion she was unconscious of the train coming.

When the driver observed that the child didn't appear to notice the train he applied the emergency brakes, and ran fifty or sixty yards before the train stopped.

The child was struck at the crossing and was taken out from under the rear of the baggage car.

"I did all I possibly could to save the child. I couldn't have done anything more," said Mr. Mimms.

The bell rang continuously from the station to the crossing. At the crossing the train wouldn't be running more than six or seven miles an hour.

Before the steam was shut off, when the engineer noticed the ladies on the track, the train would be going at the rate of nine or ten miles an hour.

The brakes were applied about one hundred and seventy-five or one hundred and eighty feet west of Park street crossing.

Coroner Gray asked the witness how far his train would go travelling at fifteen miles an hour, before it was brought to a stop by the use of the emergency brakes.

The witness stated it would go one hundred yards.

THE CORONER'S CALCULATION

The coroner said that it was one hundred and eighty feet from where the child was struck that the brakes were first applied. The child was carried fifty feet farther on, and the length of the engine, tender and baggage car, a total of eighty-five feet had passed over her.

This would bring the total distance to over one hundred yards, so the coroner said that, on the strength of the engineer's own admission, the train would have been going at fifteen miles an hour.

A SHORTER DISTANCE.

Fireman Babcock, the last witness, said the child's body was only carried thirty feet from where it was struck, and not fifty, as stated by Mr Nicholls.

DOURO FARMER FOUND DEAD BY HIS BROTHER

Went to the House to Get a Drink of Water and Discovered Patrick Hogan Dead on His Bed—Had Been Seen Last on Monday—No Suspicious Circumstances.

Patrick Hogan, whose home is situated on lot 7, of the 7th concession of Douro, was found dead in his bed about eleven o'clock to-day.

His brother, Frank Hogan, who works on the farm to the north of that of the deceased, went to the house to get a drink of water and looking into the bedroom, which is on the lower floor of the house, discovered the dead man.

No bottles or anything of a suspicious nature were found.

The dead man was unmarried and about 35 years of age. He was temperate in his habits and well known throughout the community. He had lived alone.

The Review learned of the particulars of the death through Mr. Michael Moloney, who came to the city this afternoon to report to Coroner Gray. Mr. Moloney stated that he had seen the deceased on Monday about his house.

The deceased is survived by his mother, four brothers and three sisters.

Dr. Gallivan will go out this evening to determine, if possible, the cause of death.

CAVANVILLE

From Our Own Correspondent.

Cavanville, June 1.—Mr. Sam Touchburn, son of Mr. Jos. Touchburn, Ida, underwent an operation at Nicholls Hospital, Peterborough, on May 17th, for a disease of the jawbone, caused by the extraction of a tooth six years ago. It will be a week or two before he will be able to return to his home. Mr. Touchburn had recently arrived home from a trip to the Northwest.

Mrs. Nill, sr., who has been on the sick list recently, is improving. She was able to attend church Sunday night.

Mr. Wm. Hilton, who has been on a trip to the old country, returned home on Saturday evening, and is staying with his brother-in-law, Mr. E. Sisson, of Cavan. He reports a pleasant voyage.

Mr. Robt. Henderson became the happy father of a young daughter on the 23rd of May.

Mr. W. P. Whitney, of Cavanville, spent the 24th of May in Toronto, visiting friends.

Mr. McLean, of Toronto, grandson of Mr. James McLean, of Mount Pleasant, spent the holiday visiting friends in Mount Pleasant.

Mrs. George Johnston, of Burkton, was the guest of her father, Mr. T. Foster, of Cavan, last week.

Mr. Vincent Elliott, of Peterborough, was visiting friends in Cavan during the 24th.

Despite the inclement weather, there was a large concourse of people out to witness the sports at Bethany on the 24th. A football match between Bethany and the Canadian General Electric team, of Peterborough was the principal feature of the day. The score was 3—1 in favor of the visitors. The C.G.E. boys certainly know how to play the game. A baseball match was pulled off between Janetville and Cavanvville, resulting in a victory for the former by the score of 13—7. It was certainly a case of the best team winning, Cavanville's defeat being attributed to lack of practice previous to the game. Another interesting event was the mile race, which was won by Harry Hutchinson, of Bethany, Melville Carr, of Cavanville, came second. The above, along with a few minor items, completed the day's programme. The gate receipts amounted to $145.

Mr. Jos. Heaslip, of Cavan, moved to Peterborough last week, where he intends to reside. He has sold his farm, the purchaser being Mr. F. Eagleson, formerly of Mount Pleasant.

Mr. Hassard, importer of Clydesdales, and a former resident of Millbrook, now living in Markham, Ont., purchased a team of heavydraught horses in Bethany the other day, paying the handsome sum of $650 for them.

Mr. C. White has just completed an addition to his house, Mr. Jas. Morden, of Mount Pleasant, being the contractor.

Melville Carr, of Cavanville, is on the sick list these days. We all join in wishing him a speedy recovery.

Mr. Harry Tinney, of Cavanville, had the misfortune to break a small bone in his leg last week. He is doing as well as can be expected.

Mr. Jim White, of Hope, a former resident of Cavan, was presented with a young daughter on May 11th.

Cavanville Methodist Sunday school intend holding an excursion during the second week in June, to Idyl Wyld.

Rev. W. Vance, of Toronto, son of Mr. Robt. Vance, Ida, preached in St. John's church last week.

TRIPS OVER THE RAIL EXPENSIVE

Rates on "Pay When You Ge off" Have Been Increased

Passenger ticket rates on the C.P.R. advanced perceptably this morning at the police court.

It was Detective Sam Wright who is partly responsible for the advance, and it happened thusly:—

Chas. Brodeneau, Jas. Edwards and Joseph Thomas blew off at the local station last night, and when the headlight was turned on they showed up. They had ran out of sand.

On the throttle being opened this morning the three changed cars. The price was too steep.

It was fifteen days.

APSLEY

Special to the Review.

Apsley, June 1.—The weather has been exceedingly fine for the last week, and things are beginning to look up.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hall, of Apsley, on Saturday, May 28th, of a son. Congratulations.

Mr. Isaac Roebick made his usual trip through this locality this week. Mr. Roebick has been on the road calling on the people for upwards of of 30 years.

The Rev. Mr. Garbutt has a couple of students out here who are conducting some very fine services in the locality.

On May 25th Arthur Ferguson, of Coe Hill, wedded Miss Lydia Hall, daughter of Richard Hall, of Apsley. Rev. G. Garbutt, of Madoc, performed the ceremony. The groomsman was Arthur Hall, and the bridesmaid Mrs. Hall. The bride, who received many splendid presents, was attired in white lawn and carried a beautiful bouquet. They were married under an evergreen arch, and the wedding cake was an imposing one, seven stories high. Among those present from a distance were Alex. Hall, of Campbellford; Mrs. Richard Cassan, of Campbellford; Mrs. G. Cassan, of Campbellford; Mrs. Dan Moffett, of of Coe Hill.

A basket social in connection with the Apsley Telephone Co., was held in the Templars' hall on the evening on May 24 and was one of the best that has been held here. The baskets were beautifully got up and tastefully decorated, and all sold at a good price. Any person whose basket sold for five dollars or over was entitled to a share in the telephone. The programme was also a success and consisted of songs, dialogues, recitations and instrumental music. Speeches were given by Rev. C. Lord and Rev. Mr. Cosford. The proceeds amounted to about sixty-one dollars.

A memorial service was held in the Church of England on Friday forenoon, May 20, it being the day on which the remains of our beloved sovereign, King Edward VII., were laid to rest. The flags at the respective schools also swung at half-mast as a tribute of respect, and to show our sympathy and loyalty as true British subjects.

The Union cemetery has been undergoing some changes during the past week which will greatly improve its appearance.

The city fathers met in the council chamber on Saturday last to attend to municipal matters.

A number have been taking observations of the comet as seen in the western sky during the past few evenings.

Tenders are being received for the shingling, painting, etc., of the North Burleigh school.

SPORTING NEWS

SIDE SHOTS ON NEXT SATURDAY'S DOINGS

P.A.C and T.A.S. are the home teams for Saturday's fixtures at Riverside Park, with the former taking the first game with the West Ends as opponents. The manner in which the Pilling outfit are hitting the ball will give them more than the outer edge for the honors. The team is somewhat generous in handing out slipups, but as was the case, when the Straths were put under the tent in the opening of the league, their [illegible] more than makes up for these misplays.

With all respect to the ability of Pitchers Kirn and Creswell, their performance of Saturday does not warrant a win for the Westerners, that is, if either goes on the mound. And of course, taking for granted that the P.A.C keep up their good work with the bat and Thompson or Mahoney can glide the ball with proper control.

The Strathconas will stack up against the T.A.S. in the second battle and just as like as not the red-trimmed aggregation will give the cold water boys the game of the season. Past performances go to back this statement up. Last season the T.A.S. went down to defeat, once only and that was against the Straths. Dusty, if he rounds into good shape, will do the heaving for the aviators and for once, conditions may not be congenial for a flight. If such good fortune favors the team, the game will be a hummer all the way through.

A BIG LEAGUE PLAY.

LAWN BOWLERS COMING JUNE 15

The business men of Unionville are running an excursion to this city on Wednesday, June 15th. The excursionists will include several teams of lawn bowlers, and matches with the locals will be pulled off.

BASEBALL

In giving the batting averages of the city league players in yesterday's issue the names of Dickie of the West Ends, and Halpin, of the P.A.C., were omitted. The former is batting at .250 and the latter at .500.

Dubbie Shea had three hits and two errors in the Brantford-Hamilton game Saturday.

Winnipeg is leading the Western Canada Baseball League. Jerry Edmunds is putting up a fast game behind the bat.

The batting average of MacaFee of the Strathconas, is .250 and not .500.

Jimmy O'Hern is in the city. Yes, the same Jimmie who galloped around second base for the Peterborough baseball team when the championship of the Midland league came this way, two seasons ago.

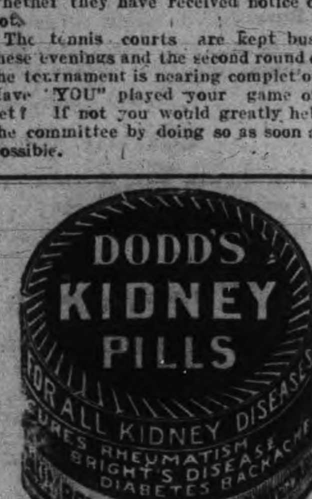
Jimmy came in to-day and is being initiated into the mysteries of decimals and angles in the draughting department at the Canadian General Electric Company.

Y.M.C.A SPORTS

There was a good turnout at the oval last night when special attention was given to the jumps and springs. The men are fast getting in shape for weekly athletic contests, which will commence Tuesday [illegible] interested in athletics are requested to turn out.

The Track and Field Club will hold a meeting this evening at 7.30 p.m. to talk over matters of importance. Members are requested to attend whether they have received notice or not.

The tennis courts are kept busy these evenings and the second round of the tournament is nearing completion. Have "YOU" played your game off yet? If not you would greatly help the committee by doing so as soon as possible.



DERBY WINNER

London, June 1.—Lemberg, first in Derby, with Greenback second, and Charles Omolty, third. Roseberry's Neil Gow was unplaced. American entries badly beaten.

King James Wins.

Toronto, June 1.—King James repeated in the Toronto Cup on closing day at Woodbine Park like the grand race horse he is. He won from end to end, making the 1 to 2 against his chances look a long price as he romped home an easy winner. The King, Rio Grande and Dr. Pillow were the only winning favorites. Second choices landed the other five.

First Race, York Purse, six furlongs, for three-year-olds and up—1st, Seymour Beutler; 2nd, Stafford; 3rd, King of Yolo. Time, 1.13.

Second Race, Nimrod Welter Selling Plate, seven furlongs, four-year-olds and up, gentlemen riders—1st, Rio Grande; 2nd, Purslane; 3rd, Duke of Roanoke. Time, 1.30 2-5.

Third Race, Rutland Purse, five furlongs, for maiden two-year-old fillies—1st, Supple; 2nd, Sea Kittie; 3rd, Mary's Aunt. Time, 1.02 1-5.

Fourth Race, Stanley Barracks Cup, Hunters' Steeplechase, about 2 1-2 miles, for hunters, four-year-olds and up, handicap—1st, Merry Maker; 2nd, Excise; 3rd, Bilberry. Time, 5.28.

Fifth Race, Toronto Cup, 1 1-8 miles, for three-year-olds and up—1st, King James; 2nd, Fulfill; 3rd, Wm. Pitt. Time, 1.53 4-5.

Cleveland, O., June 1.—Demanding a 12-hour working day and holidays off, 100 members of the Great Lakes Towing Co. quit work yesterday. As a result lake navigation in and out of Cleveland harbor is at a standstill.

Local tug men say the walk-out will become general along the great lakes.

MEMORY IN FISH.

Striking Results Shown in a Test With Gray Perch.

Even the fishes of the sea have pictures on memory's wall. Experiments have been made with several fishes as to their faculties for remembering, but the most striking results have been obtained with the gray perch, which [illegible] sardines. Some of these were taken and colored red and were then put into the tank where the perch was with several silver colored sardines. Of course the normal sardines were at once seized and eaten, but it was not until hungry that the perch made a tentative meal of one of the red colored victims.

On recognizing the sardine flavor, however, he promptly demolished the remainder. Later the perch devoured the sardines irrespective of color, thus showing not only traces of a memory, but also the power to differentiate color.

Subsequently sardines colored red and blue were placed in the tank together with the silver ones. The same scene was repeated, the blue sardines not being attacked until the others were eaten and hunger compelled investigation of the newcomers. After this introduction the perch ate the sardines of all three types without any difficulty.

Some spines of the sea nettle were then fastened to the blue sardines. These were at once avoided by the perch, which promptly got out of the way of the newcomers. This showed traces of memory, as the results of contact with the sea nettle were shown and recognized.—Chicago Tribune.

A QUAINT OLD TAVERN

The Old Cheshire Cheese, In the Heart of London.

SERVES A FAMOUS PUDDING.

A Noble Pastry It Is, and It Was Sampled by Such Men as Gladstone, Dickens, Thackeray, Tennyson, Trollope and Whistler.

Nearly all Americans when they go to London make it a point to visit that quaint old tavern in the heart of the newspaper and printing business, the Old Cheshire Cheese, to partake of its famous pudding.

It is the Londoner's delight when he gets back to Fleet street to make a rush for the pudding, and it is almost the last thing he eats before leaving it. Travelers in the Sahara have seen mirages of that pudding, and during the Boer war the men shut up in Ladysmith and Mafeking dreamed of it at regular intervals.

Precisely at 1 o'clock p. m. Tom conveys the pudding from the first to the main floor. It is a big pudding, and the price of it is just 2 shillings—that is to say, a feed of it is 2 shillings, as much as you please, as many shares as you ask for, cut and come again, all for 48 cents of American coin. Cheap, aye, and, oh, how good it is! It is worth crossing the Atlantic to get a sniff of it, and the aroma lingers in the memory for many a day.

Big? The dimensions are Falstaffian. It is a round earthen vessel something more than two dozen inches deep, with a diameter of about eighteen inches. A noble pastry, my masters!

When it is placed upon the service table an elliptical white crust meets the hungry gaze. Tom and his myrmidons take their places in front facing the host, who, knife and spoon in hand, poses with gentle dignity and benignant mien. It is a moment of solemn thought when every man hopes that his portion will be larger than his friend's and that he will be blessed with an abundance of gravy. But they ought from years of acquaintance with the host to understand that his hand is as steady as his judgment is impartial.

No more and nothing better for one than for another. He waves his weapons, and the first onslaught is made. The room is full of a delicious steam bearing with it the concentrated essences of ambrosial substances. The guests sniff it up and murmur choice blessings on the cook, the original inventor, the house and the host. It is a time when men feel good, one toward the other.

One smell of that pudding makes the whole world kin. This famous pudding, which has tickled the palates of thousands, is thus compounded:

- A crust of flour, water and suet.
- Beefsteak.
- Sheep's kidneys.
- Larks.
- Mushrooms (freshly gathered).
- Oysters.
- Stock.
- Pepper and salt.

But it is the boiling that does it. For at least twelve hours this heaven sent pudding is kept slowly simmering in an immense copper specially constructed for the purpose. It must not boil quickly, but the same temperature be kept up the whole period. The steak assumes a juicy tenderness; the larks—not sparrows, as some malignant spirit has suggested, although sparrow pudding is not to be despised—are seethed to the bone, and you can chew up each little songster without an effort; the kidneys are soft and mushy and offer no resistance to the digestive organs, and the oysters, despite their lengthened cooking, are not leathery. The amalgamation and assimilation of the variety of constituents are perfect; the result is bliss.

There is a story told of one eminent litterateur who had seven helpings of the pudding and still yearned for more, and there is another remarkable narrative of four men who ordered a pudding of the regulation size and finished it among them.

J. Pierpont Morgan praised the pudding, and Theodore Roosevelt was delighted with it. Lord Beaconsfield bestowed his approbation thereon, and Gladstone thought it far superior to his famous "three courses." Dickens, Thackeray, Meredith, Swinburne, Tennyson, Trollope, Whistler, Leighton, Sala, Phil May—all sorts of the best of men of their day have fed upon the pudding, and it no doubt helped to inspire their work.

Apparently any cook can fashion it, mix it, fix it, boil it. Let any cook try it. Lots of cooks have tried it, but the results have not been satisfactory. There was a man who once ran the Old Cheshire Cheese, and in his day the pudding first achieved its great fame. When he sold the old hostelry and took a house in the financial district he announced that the same pudding—the same in every respect—would be served every Saturday.

Many of the Cheese's old patrons came around to celebrate. There was the size, but the aroma was wanting; there were the identical materials, but the flavor was not in them. It was not the same, not a bit of it. There was something missing. It may have been the shades of the departed great ones of a bygone time. And so it is that today the famous dish of the Old Cheshire Cheese tastes as of old, and its devotees cannot be seduced by any designing invitation based upon "just as good" simply because there is nothing just as good.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Thoughts are mightier than the strength of hand.—Sophocles.

AN OCEAN OF AIR.

Admirable Description of This Sea In Whose Depths We Live.

We live at the bottom of a mighty sea, says a writer in giving a very entertaining and instructive article on the ocean of air about us. Sometimes from out its clear unsullied depths we behold afar the glittering stars swinging in their everlasting orbits. At other times the sea is dark and murky, and even at noonday we may not see aught of the King of Day save a dull, coppery ball. This ocean is wider and deeper and more easily moved than the aqueous oceans which separate continent from continent.

Sometimes it moves so gently to and fro that the dewdrop on the fragrant rose is undisturbed. At other times it moves with such tremendous violence that mighty oaks, rooted for centuries, are tossed about like pipestems. Sometimes it wafts the white sailed vessels across the sunlit seas to their haven under the hill. Again it bears down upon them with terrible fury and sends them to the harbor of missing ships beneath the seas.

It laps up the water from ocean and river and returns it in beneficent rain and dew. It gives to us the beautiful azure of noonday, and the chromatic glories of sunrise and sunset. It brings the day earlier than it otherwise would come, and holds the sunlight at evening in the twilight's delightful glow. It gives us the breath of life with its abundance of oxygen, and provides for the food that is to be our nourishment, as every morsel of breadstuff that enters into our beings must be part of the atmosphere.

Its constituents are so nicely and so delicately balanced that a very slight variation in their relative proportions would mean that no human being, constituted as we are at present, could exist at all. It gives us of its substance while we live and when we die it gradually takes back the materials it has loaned us, and we return to the dust whence we sprang. It gives us the glorious sky with its wondrous clouds and shining light and wards off the grim, eternal night that is everywhere a hundred miles above us.

It protects us from the fierce heat of the sun, which would otherwise burn us to a crisp. It wraps its fleecy mantle about us, and keeps away the icy cold of space, 460 degrees below zero. It meets afar the fierce darts of cosmic dust, those wanderers in the eternities of space, and burns them to ashes, before they can pierce us like needle darts moving with a velocity far greater than that of a rifle bullet.

It soothes us to sleep with its gentle, kindly touch, and brings cooling zephyrs to stay the fever that burns the invalid's cheek.

A Bet and Its Odds.

A notorious gambler who died some time ago once wagered a thousand dollars to one that six would not be thrown with a pair of dice ten times in succession. His offer was taken up by a fellow clubman. The dice were brought, and his opponent actually threw six nine times in succession. The gambler then offered $470 to be free of the bet. The other man declined, had his tenth throw and failed to get another six. Just to show how very little the average man knows about the doctrine of chances, a well known mathematician has pointed out the real odds about this bet. The chances were no less than 60,466,175 to 1 against six being thrown ten times in succession. Therefore the real bet should have been about $600,000 to a cent against such a thing happening.

Some War Expenses.

The Napoleonic wars cost England $4,320,000,000. The war of 1870 between France and Germany cost $3,300,000,000, and the civil war in the United States exacted a toll from both sides of over $6,600,000,000. The Boer war cost England over $1,000,000,000, and the struggle between Russia and Japan cost more than twice that sum.

BY A. T. ASHMORE.

IT is comparatively an easy matter when the weather is cold and dreary to be self-denying as far as new gowns are concerned, and to be philosophically content with last year's fashions, but let the warm days of late spring and summer weather once begin and the woman who can be happy and cheerful with her old clothes is a rara avis, and is certainly entitled to the unstinted admiration of her fellow beings.

To be prepared in advance for all the spring and summer entertainments is a happy fate that befalls few individuals. For the most enthusiastic lover of clothes, as well as the most practical of managers, rebels against the amount of time essential in getting together a summer outfit that is up to date in every detail, not to speak of the money question. For the first spring days—spring according to the calendar if not the reigning temperature—the smart street costume is absolutely necessary to comfort. Then there must be the smart gown suitable for the autumn reception or bridge, and these two, with an attractive theatre gown, are sufficient to get through the two or three weeks before the weather has settled down into a much higher record of temperature, especially if each and every one of these gowns is perfect—and there are two or three others of the winter wardrobe still in fairly good order.

To be quite comfortable there must be included in the spring outfit more than one new street gown, for the tailor costume that is heavy and warm enough for the cool days of spring is quite out of the question in the warmer days, which, however, are still cool enough to call for a gown of more weight.

But in these days of resource there are so many different weights of cloth that the difficulty can soon be solved. There must be provided the gowns for warm weather, the coat and skirt of lightest wool, pongee, silk, linen and, for more formal occasions, crêpe de Chine and satin. These, be it remembered, have always the coat to match, even when the gown is in one piece instead of skirt and waist.

Foulard and Voile de Soie.

This is to be a season of smart thin gowns, foulard and voile de soie, which has been so often described and alluded to that it would seem as though its very popularity would write an early dismissal from the ranks of fashionable materials. Foulard, too, has been sold in such quantities for several weeks as to make the more conservative minded wonder if it can possibly continue to be desirable, but it is material that possesses rare advantages. It is delightfully cool and light in weight, there are many qualities that cannot be injured by rain, it sheds the dust, lends itself to the draped effects, and if made in a tight fitting waist is a becoming material in so far that it clings to the figure. One of the familiar styles of the season is to combine it with another fabric, liberty satin, voile de soie or serge, and also to make up figured foulard with the plain colors of the other material. This all tends to a variety of effect that is attractive and permits of a bit of originality, so that the danger that always exists when a fashion is both practical and popular of having every woman dressed alike is obviated.

There is an unusually large variety in color and design in the foulards this season. The white ground with white figure and the dark ground with white figure are alike to be found in what seems like an endless choice. The always popular polka dot is omnipresent and in a most extraordinary range of sizes and designs, rings of white, lace designs, stripes and checks, [illegible] to choose among so many requires cool judgment. The bordered foulards are exceptionally attractive this year, and the border can be so satisfactorily dealt with that trimmings are unnecessary. Black and white, color and white, all with borders, are displayed with an edge of darker or plain black as a finish. There are most artistic and becoming shadings of gray in the bordered foulards, as well as the blue and white and black and white, that always appear when foulards are in favor, and this year all the many shades of red are much in evidence.

Pongee, rajah and tussor are heavier in weight and are almost invariably made with coat to match. Silk linen is another material on the same order and is immensely popular this season. It is to be found in all colors and all shades of color, and, while not classed with wash goods, can, it is claimed, be washed as well as cleaned. There are few who try the experiment of washing the silk linen costumes, for, as a rule, they are made up in such more or less elaborate fashion that cleaning seems the more natural process. There are many new models for the coat and skirt costumes, but the simpler designs are the smartest, and when there is braiding, just the bands around the skirt and on the collar, revers and cuffs of the jacket are sufficient to give the smart effect. Pongee costumes are on the same order, and in fact there is little difference in the models for any of the coat and skirt costumes of the summer fabrics; there are long coats and short jackets, but the skirts are all short, as these costumes are intended for street wear. Foulard, the figured foulard, combined with plain pongee or rajah, is an attractive fashion, the foulard used in the same way as when combined with serge in facings and linings and sometimes in the separate waist. Much depends in these combined materials on the colors, and it is by no means an easy task to match the shades, so that often it is better to choose some one color that is not so extremely fashionable that it can only be found in one material and to match it involves hours of weary search.

Shepherd plaid effects, as are known the black and white check effects, and, indeed, all the checks of color and white, are as popular as ever, despite the fact that they are turned out by the thousands. The shepherd plaid street costumes in wool, serge, silk linen and silk are still being made at the more expensive establishments. But there is a most wonderful difference between the ordinary cheap ones and the expensive. Of late there have been seen many trimmed with bands of plain material. This style is new and is often attractive, but cannot be generally recommended, for the plain band cuts the figure so unbecomingly, and there again comes the trouble of the exact matching. Bands of white are the latest color scheme, and it must be admitted they look smart and novel in linen or pongee.

Gathered and side pleated skirts are now to be seen in the foulard and pongee gowns, with wide and narrow side pleatings, and black and white striped silk skirts, accordion pleated, are most cleverly made so as to show either the all black or all white. The gathered skirt has not as yet been enthusiastically greeted, and when it proves successful, which means becoming, it has been most carefully and wonderfully dealt with, for when fashion positively demands long, slender lines and then commands gathered or pleated skirts, the dressmaker's life is a weary one indeed, as only by most careful fitting and cutting can pleats and gathers be disposed of so that there will not be too much fulness to make the wearer look large around the hips. The pleated or gathered skirt, with its fulness held in around or just above the ankles with a straight band or fold, is supposed to help in solving the problem, but it requires a master workman or workwoman to obtain the desired results.

PRACTICAL HINTS FOR HOME DRESSMAKING.

AS it is not every woman who is fortunate enough to be able to order her wardrobe without regard to expense, the problem of home dressmaking must be seriously considered. The small dressmaker, the clever seamstress, who years ago was part of every family life, has been absorbed by the large dressmaking establishments or has started an establishment of her own. Dress is far more intricate and involved than it ever was and its very simplicity is often a delusion and a snare. Every woman who has to make her own clothes or has to superintend their making has to study dress most carefully before she decides what she will have in her summer wardrobe.

To begin with, she must have a good fitting pattern for the lining, and she will find it pays to spend days if necessary in getting the lines just right; then the same thing must be gone into for the skirt. But with the waist lining perfectly fitted and the skirt lining perfectly fitted and hung the rest of the gown is comparatively easy. A common fault in poor dressmaking is cutting away the material at the armholes toward the front of the waist and then leaving the mistake to be remedied by letting the waist out in front and covering up the mistake with the outer material. Better lose the entire lining, even if it be silk, than attempt to remedy it in such fashion. Sometimes the results of the fault can be obviated by putting in a piece to give the width required, but far better it is to try once again—and several times if necessary.

OSHKIGMONG

From Our Own Correspondent.

Oshkigmong, May 31.—Mr. and Mrs. David Taylor are the happy recipients of a new-born daughter.

Mr. Madden Howard and family, of Hiawatha, are visiting friends here.

Mr. Isaac Taylor and wife, of Scugog, were here for a few days, the guest of his father, Mr. Wm. Taylor.

Messrs. D. Whetung, Sr., and R. Tobico spent Victoria Day at Shawanaga, where they saw the Indian athletic games played.

Victoria Day was observed loyally in our village, as usual. Attractive games were witnessed by all the people of the village, and some strangers. During the day a football match was played between the Seniors and the juniors, the former winning. A baseball match between the same teams resulted in a victory for the Juniors. Races and a tug of war concluded the day's sports, which were followed by a display of fireworks at night.

Some of the women and children in this vicinity were greatly frightened by a flash light from a passing steamer a few nights ago, believing that the comet was visiting the earth and making its headquarters in Chemong.

Messrs. Taylor and Howard captured a young bear cub. It is thriving well in its new home, and is contented with its strange mood of life, and is quite an attraction.

A STORY OF FORREST.

The Actor's Encounter With an Impertinent Critic.

Many years ago Edwin Forrest, the celebrated actor, when in New York, was in the habit of dining at Windust's, a noted restaurant on Park row that was a favorite resort of actors and literary men. It usually happened that Forrest would be joined by friends and that the little group would sit together at one table. On one occasion it chanced that an Englishman with a reputation for conceit and impertinence, who had scraped acquaintance with the tragedian, was one of the group.

Early in the course of the dinner the Englishman began to make criticisms which he considered pleasantries about Forrest's conception of certain roles. Encouraged by his own appreciation, he gave full play to his humor and concluded each of his impertinences with "Pardon my freedom, sir—it's my way."

To the astonishment of all who knew Forrest's irascible disposition he bore the Briton's offensive remarks patiently and seemingly ignored them as far as possible. When, however, the nuts were brought in by the waiter he took several cracked walnuts in his hand and, walking over to the Briton's place, jocularly snapped them successively in the face of that individual, lightly saying after each shot, "Pardon my freedom, sir—it's my way," and snapped him out of the restaurant.

SPEED OF WAVES.

Over Seventy-eight Miles an Hour Has Been Recorded.

Interesting facts about waves were given by Dr. Vaughan Cornish in one of his lectures. In the north Atlantic, he said, waves had been measured, the largest of which was somewhat more than forty feet high, with a length from crest to crest of 560 feet. It was in the southern Indian ocean that waves attained their fullest development, and they had been measured there with a length of 780 feet.

In the Atlantic it had been found that waves attained a speed of thirty-eight miles an hour in a wind of about forty-four miles an hour. Speaking of the swells in the waves that run freely on the surface of the sea after the wind has ceased, Dr. Cornish said that during a storm in December, 1898, he recorded breakers near Bournemouth which moved at sixty-seven miles an hour and had a length from crest to crest of 1,900 feet. In February, 1899, he observed breakers on the same shore which had a speed in deep water of not less than seventy-eight and a half miles an hour.—London Family Herald.

When Kissing Was Costly.

The case of the people against Murline, heard by the governor of New Haven colony in council on May day, 1660, indicates the attitude toward unlicensed kissing in those times. It appeared that Jacob Murline and Sarah Tuttle had been caught kissing each other. Jacob tried to throw the blame on Sarah, saying he thought she had "with intent let fall her gloves." Sarah denied the intent. Jacob then admitted that he "tooke her by the hand and they both sat down upon a chest, but whether he kyssed her or she kyssed him he knows not, for he never thought of it since until Mr. Raymond told him that he had not layde it to heart as he ought." The stern governor, after duly lecturing the guilty parties on the enormity of their offense, decreed that "the sentence therefore concerning them is that they shall pay either of them a fine of 20 shillings to the colony."

Khartum.

Khartum owes its existence to an oriental form of treachery. When Khedive Mohammed Ali invaded the Sudan in 1820 he marched triumphantly to Shendi, where his troops were entertained at a banquet by the submissive natives. But while the khedive's high officials were seated at the feast they shared the fate of the viands and were themselves reduced to funeral baked meats. Full of fury, the army fell on Shendi and demolished it. Marching south, the invaders reached the junction of the Blue Nile and White Nile. With the conqueror's instinct they recognized that the strip of land, with its few fishermen's huts [illegible] strategical headquarters, so Khartum finally grew into the most sensitive part of the Sudan organism.

Doubling Up.

A boy of eight years was asked by his teacher where the zenith was. He replied, "That spot in the heavens directly over one's head."

To test his knowledge further the teacher asked:

"Can two persons have the same zenith at the same time?"

"They can."

"How?"

"If one stand on the other's head."

DESOLATION AND DEATH

REIGN IN ST. PIERRE, THE CITY OF 40,000 DEAD.

Roofless Houses and Cavernous Windows Strike Terror to the Hearts of Sightseers—Vegetation Now Covering Many Ruins—It Was the Wickedest Spot In the Whole West Indies—Only One Man Escaped.

"It is men, not walls, that make a city," the Greek maxim ran, and more, it is living men, writes a correspondent of The London Times. For the walls of St. Pierre are there still, and probably no fewer than 40,000 of its inhabitants are there also. But they have been asleep these eight years now. And it is extraordinarily impressive, this white, sightless skeleton of a dead city.

In orderly rows the houses stand as seen from the sea, the streets rising in tier upon well graded tier back from the shore to the hills. But every street is silent, every house roofless, every window cavernous and blind.

Before us as we land lies the wide paved street which runs along the parallel to the waterfront. "And there," says the ship's officer who is my guide and counsellor, "was the wickedest spot in the whole West Indies. That row of houses, pink and white, to the left. The French nature, you know, away from the restraints of home, with the ignorance and docility of the blacks. It is a bad combination."

There are legends now of blasphemous rites which were in progress when the "fire from the Lord out of heaven" was rained down — legends which have probably grown up since the event. But there seems to have been good ground for that description, "the wickedest spot in the West Indies." And of over 40,000 people who were presumably in the city at the time only one man escaped, prisoner under sentence of death for murder confined in a cell impervious to the flames and fumes, and he only escaped to die of the shock a few days later.

Fifty yards of a narrow cross street bring us to what was once the chief business thoroughfare of St. Pierre. Wide and straight it runs for a mile in either direction, the roadway flagged with blocks of stone, fair and smooth, to where on each side the gutters are now green ribbons of herbage. Then the high curb rises, and beyond it the broad paved sidewalk (for the French build their colonial cities better than we) reaches to the straight, clean, orderly frontage of the stone built shops. Straight and orderly the line of the shop fronts still stands—the fronts only, with gaping doorways and empty windows.

Here and there, still fixed in the heavy masonry, the rusted clamps and pins show where doors were hung and window shutters fastened, but beyond the bare incombustible stone and metal not a fragment or shred of wood or glass or fabric remains of all the bravery of what was once perhaps the gayest and most fashionable shopping street in the West Indies. Now and again one gathers indications of what kind of stock was carried in this shop or that.

Here a mass of what was once coiled chain, now fused to a solid lump of metal, suggests that this was an ironmonger's. There the wreckage of a massive safe inside the wide windows, framed for display, makes it likely that a jeweler throve. But for the most part each building is full, choked to the roof, with ash and volcanic dust, dreadful to see, but merciful perhaps, for under it, buried deep, are things that one does not care to think of. No life, no perishable material survived that first strifling, withering blast, then came the rain of dust and ashes, covering all things as for the most part they remain hidden to this day.

And more mercifully yet nature in the tropics is prolific. Whatever man holds he holds only by keeping the vegetable armies at bay; wherever he retreats the ranks of the green things advance. From the hill slopes on all sides vegetation has pushed its way among the ruins. Seeds have been borne by the winds or dropepd by birds, or having long lain dormant in crevices of houses and in the uncongenial earth of the city, have now thrust up through the overlying layer of debris to the air. In every interstice, overhanging every wall from where the roofs once were, a mantle of foliage and blossoming shrubs has been drawn over the whole dead city.

Each straight paved street, with the white walls on either hand, is little more than a pergola, a grotto, an avenue cut through the green.

In the cemetery the tombstones lie split by the heat and twisted from their beds, and the monuments lie strewn broken on the ground, but it has little meaning now, this place where the resting places of a few hundred dead were honored with monuments of marble and granite, while all around in the city which is one vast cemetery lie 40,000 dead unmarked.

My ship's officer told me that he knew St. Pierre well before it was stricken, and no less than once a year since then he has been able to put in here and come ashore, and at each visit he has seen how nature has gained upon the town. In a few more years the streets will all be overgrown, the masonry buried in green and the forest growth will have pushed its way down to the shore.

This is one of the islands where the dread snake, the Fer de Lance, is found. In just such a broken wilderness as this, where under the flowers and the butterflies the wreckage of the city offers strange dark hiding places, it will love to make its home. Then few people will care to push their way through the thick growth among the ruins. Ships will content themselves with passing off shore, and passengers will be shown from a distance the place where once St. Pierre stood. But a little more and a generation will arise to which the story of the disaster is but a tradition, and the very site of the wickedest spot in the West Indies will be forgotten, its memory overgrown with myth and legend, even as the ruins of the city itself are already half submerged in flowers and green leaves.

There was a false alarm of fire at 12.30 last night from box 53, Ashburnham.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

The Explanation of the Automobile Driver and a Climax.

After the victim of the accident was carried to the sidewalk the automobile driver turned his machine and came back and explained how it happened with considerable warmth.

"This woman," he volubly remarked to the policeman, "was entirely to blame. She ran around from ahead of the street car and deliberately put herself in my way. After she had dodged the coal cart it was too late for me to stop. I couldn't tell which way she was going, and when I saw that she was dazed and foolish I jammed on the brakes and tried to pass to the left, but of course she had to run the same way, and the consequence was that in endeavoring to avoid a baby carriage with twins in it and an old man who was walking with a crutch I suppose I must have hit her. But I wasn't going more than two miles an hour, and any woman who would dodge around in that foolish way and lose her head shouldn't be permitted to go on the streets without a bunch of guardians."

The policeman nodded.

"Come over to the sidewalk," he said, "and take a look at her."

So the driver went to the curb with the officer and looked at the unfortunate creature who had so actively contributed to her own disaster.

And, lo, it was only a dressmaker's dummy that had fallen off the rear of a delivery wagon! — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HIS ONLY REGRET.

The Sorrow That Consumed Bichat When He Was Dying.

Over a century ago died Xavier Bichat, the famous physician and anatomist, author of "L'Anatomie Generale." He probably dissected more human corpses than any other man in the world's history. He established a record when he opened 625 bodies during one winter.

Of his nerve a tale is told. When he lay on his deathbed he called his colleagues to him and said: "Dear friends, I am done, but what comforts me is the fact that my case is a remarkable one. I have had unusual symptoms for some days which I have analyzed. They have greatly surprised me." The doctors sought to reassure him. He answered that he was under no illusion with regard to himself. "I shall die fairly satisfied with my life and go to the grave with only one regret, one great sorrow."

"What is that?" he was asked. "I am distressed that after death I cannot dissect my own body. I could, I am certain, have made some beautiful scientific discoveries." Then he sank back, murmuring: "I must not think about it. It won't bear thinking of."—Westminster Gazette.

The Pearl Hunters' Superstition.

The pearl hunters of Borneo and the adjacent islands have a peculiar superstition. When they open shells in search of pearls they take every ninth find, whether it be large or small, and put it into a bottle, which is kept corked with a dead man's finger. The pearls in the vial are known as "seed pearls" or "breeding pearls," and the native Borneose firmly believes that they will reproduce their kind. For every pearl put into the vial two grains of rice are thrown in for the pearls to "feed upon." Some whites in Borneo believe as firmly in the superstition as the natives do, and almost every hut along the coast has its "dead finger" bottle, with from nine to fifty seed pearls and twice that number of rice grains carefully and evenly stowed away among them. That no results follow does not dim the superstition.

The Wonderful Toad Bone.

All early writers attribute wonderful qualities to toads and frogs and the various parts of their bodies. Pliny believed, for instance, that if a toad was brought into the midst of a mob or other large and unruly concourse of people "silence would instantly prevail." A small bone found in the right side of toads "of the proper age" was also believed to have powers over the various elements. "By throwing this bone into a vessel of boiling water," says Pliny, "it will immediately cool it, the water refusing to boil again until the bone has been removed. To find this bone, expose the dead toad on an ant hill. When the ants have eaten her all away except the bones, take each bone separately and drop it into boiling water. Thus may the wondrous toad bone be discovered."

An Ancient Astronomer.

About 500 B. C. Anaxagoras of Ionia was born. When he "grew up in wisdom" he was the first to teach the course and cause of both solar and lunar eclipses and to give his followers rules whereby they could distinguish planets from fixed stars. He was punished for declaring that the sun was not a god.

The accompanying pictures are the first to reach this country depicting scenes at the funeral of the late King Edward VII., in London, and it may be interesting to know just how the pictures were secured. As soon as the pictures were taken they were rushed by special messenger to Southampton and there placed on board the Kronprinz Wilhelm. The New York Herald's despatch boat Owlet steamed outside the harbor and met the steamer.

The Owlet, by special arrangement with Collector of the Port of New York Loeb, had Acting Deputy Collector Max Sizabo, Inspector John W. Jeffrey and Appraiser W. O. McKenzie aboard, and through the courtesy of Dr. Doty, Health Officer, the pictures were transferred, examined, appraised and the duty paid in two minutes' time; the Owlet thence proceeded to the Batterya, whence the photographs were rushed to the train and put aboard the fast mail for Peterborough.

A MINISTER IS GUILTY OF CRIME OF FORGERY

Rev. Mr. Atlas Comes all the Way From Far Off Macedonia to Face His Trial—Ministers and Educationists Testify—He Has Public Sympathy.

Toronto, June 2.—"We find George Mitchell Atlas guilty upon the indictment as presented."

This was the verdict of the jury in the general sessions of the peace at 5.45 yesterday afternoon, after on hour and a half spent in deliberation upon this, perhaps the most striking case that has ever occupied the attention of the Toronto police department.

The charge upon which Atlas was convicted was that he did forge a receipt from the widow of Vani Simoff, murdered here in Toronto, and did use that forgery before Judge Winchester in Surrogate Court to evade the payment of $500 of the estate of Vani Simoff, which money he also stole.

This morning the crown will proceed with the further charge against Atlas of procuring Charles Risk to commit perjury before Judge Winchester in the Surrogate Court, as to the validity of the receipt.

He may also be proceeded against for perjury in the Surrogate Court case, and even for perjury in his evidence in his own defence on Tuesday.

Yesterday morning the defence produced character evidence. The unusual spectacle of counsel giving such evidence for his client was seen when William Douglas took the stand and said that he had always found Atlas to be absolutely worthy of trust. He was followed by James L. Hughes, public school inspector, and W. C. Wilkinson, secretary of the school board, who had given him special work in their department at the behest of the presbytery of Toronto. After these came a troop of clergymen, who all professed their faith in the honesty of Atlas. They were: Rev. J. D. Morrow of Dale Presbyterian Church, Rev. J. W. Stephen of Avenue road Presbyterian Church, Rev. John Cockburn of Parliament street Methodist Church, Rev. Mr. Back of Eglinton Presbyterian Church.

While Mr. Douglas was on the stand Mr. Robinette, for Atlas, tried to draw from him an account of the evidence given by Charles Risk before Judge Winchester at the Surrogate hearing. To this Mr. Monahan, for the crown, objected as Mr. Robinette had objected that the record should be put in.

"If you want to show what Charles Risk said," said Mr. Monahan, "you must call him. He is here."

"No you don't," said Mr. Robinette, visibly ruffled. "I'll have no confessed perjurer in my case. You can't force me to call him in that way."

Escaped Death In Quicksand.

Galt, June 2.—George Carson, a young farm hand and a new-comer, had a narrow escape from a horrible death. He accidentally sank in the Muskegor quicksand on Gavin Goodall's farm in North Dumfries, and was sucked in to the neck before his cries for help were heard. A man driving past came to his rescue. The swamp sinkhole is believed to be bottomless. Many cattle and horses have disappeared in its slimy depths. The whole countryside looks on it with horror and avoids the neighborhood.

Halifax, June 2.—A Norwegian bark struck Gastor Ledges not far from Sherbrooke, Guysboro County, Tuesday night.

Fined for Breach of Liquor Act.

Brampton, June 2.—John F. Burrell, proprietor of the Revere House, Brampton, was fined $20 and costs by the police magistrate yesterday, for a breach of the license act. On May 27, a liquor detective paid a visit to the hotel and found underneath the bar counter two bottles of whisky and a portion of another bottle on the workboard.

COMPLETION OF TRENT CANAL WOULD MEAN LARGE IMPETUS

To the Industrial Growth of Peterborough and Other Places Affected--Government Will be Petitioned to Finish the Work as Soon as Possible --Deputation Committee Appointed at Special Meeting.

There is no Government enterprise in the Dominion to-day of such importance and interest to the people of Peterborough as the Trent Canal.

Peterborough's recently appointed Industrial Commissioner, Mr. H. Van N. Duggan. In making a study of industrial conditions and prospects in Peterborough, he realized immediately, as the citizens have for some time past, that the fact of the canal not being completed was a serious drawback in the campaign to get new industries for Peterborough.

For not only will the canal completed provide a through water route, but it will also be a valuable and prolific source of water power—the most important agency in the growth of an inland town.

Desirous of having his work of getting new manufacturing concerns for Peterborough facilitated, Mr. Duggan called a special industrial meeting last night at the City Council chambers, and a definite step toward appealing to the Government to carry on the work without delay was taken, when a special committee of three was appointed to endeavor to form a deputation to wait on the Government with this end in view. The committee is composed of Mr. F. D. Kerr, Mr. Duggan and Ald. Buller.

Ald. Gillespie, chairman of the Board of Trade, presided at the meeting, which was attended by a representative gathering.

WATER ROUTE NEEDED.

"As you have been already advised," Mr. Duggan said, "this meeting is convened for the purpose of getting an expression of opinion from the industrial and other interests of Peterborough, as to the most efficient means to be adopted to obtain for Peterborough a waterhaul.

"In my capacity as Indistrial Commissioner, it has been borne in upon me that until such time as manufacturers producing articles of steel and iron can be in a position to get their raw materials laid down here by a water route, that we will have difficulty in convincing industrials of this character to locate in our city.

WOULD REDUCE RATES.

"It is true that the two great carriers, the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railways, have done much to facilitate the transportation to and from Peterborough, but you will all agree that were the Trent Valley canal completed that greater benefits in this regard would accrue for the city.

"A single illustration will serve to bring this point clearly before you. The town of Welland can lay steel down from Pittsburg at fifteen cents and it would cost an additional eighteen cents to bring that same steel on to Peterborough. The completion of the canal will have a direct influence on matters such as this.

COMPETITION CUTS FREIGHT.

"I do not wish to intimate that the rates charged by the railways are unfair, but on the other hand I should like to point out that the influence of waterways on railway rates has many precedents, one of which will serve: When the Erie Canal became a financially possible fact, by the voting of funds by the Federal Government it is reported that the railways with whom it would be competitive reduced their rates and maintained them for the many years that the canal was building.

LITTLE EXCAVATING TO BE DONE

"It may not be amiss to point out how near we are to the achievement of our desire regarding the Trent Canal. As you all know, the canal is now navigable for sixteen miles below the town of Hastings, leaving but some forty odd miles to Trenton and lake water. Of this distance, there is over sixteen miles which is naturally navigable, and, in fact, it would probably not be understating the distance to say that a very little over twenty miles of canal digging stands between Peterborough and the Bay of Quinte.

A HEAVY EXPENDITURE.

"It may come as a surprise to some to know that up to April, 1911, there will have been spent on this waterway $9,623,000. Therefore, while the very natural impatience may obtain, still we cannot help but recognize the fact that a large sum of money has been spent to expedite the work. And here I would like to mention that this meeting is not called in any spirit of criticism or complaint, but merely with a view to impress on the proper authorities, of the vital importance of the early completion of the canal to Peterborough, and I think it would only be good manners that the Government should know that what is being done is appreciated fully.

GREAT POWER ADVANTAGES

"Another phase of the situation upon which I am only competent to

MILK KILLS MANY BABIES SO SAY THE MEDICAL MEN

Annual Meeting of Canadian Medical Association is Being Held in Toronto—Commission Tells of the Work in Ontario—Live Subjects Discussed.

Toronto, June 2.—The forty-third annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association commenced its sessions yesterday in convocation hall with over 200 doctors in attendance from all parts of the Dominion. It would be extremely difficult to conceive of a more interesting and praiseworthy object than that which occasions this conference now in progress. Here we see men fortified with the most modern methods of medical science, trained in the art of battling against every disease to which humanity is heir, and met together to discuss and interchange ideas arising out of their varied experiences in daily practice, with the view of broadening still further their knowledge of disease and its remedies.

The morning was devoted to sectional meetings, when papers on purely professional topics were read and discussed.

Dr. Adam H. Wright of Toronto, the new president, discussed "The General Practitioners" in his inaugural. Although some years ago it had seemed possible that the general practitioner would become extinct in certain large cities, the pendulum was swinging back, and the family physician was now considered a necessity in most homes. "We do not pretend that the majority of physicians are saints or heroes, but we do contend that the practice of our profession furnishes grand opportunities for good work ... fering humanity," he said.

"The amount of work in all departments has increased so enormously during recent years that students are bewildered, confused and disheartened. The students of to-day bolt more, and cram more, and observe less, and think less, than did those of 10 to 30 years ago."

Dr. Wright closed with an expressed desire for Dominion medical registration and for reciprocal relations with the Mother Country.

How to improve the quality of the milk supplied to the Canadian consumer is the laudable object of the milk commission in connection with the association, and which yesterday submitted a report at the opening in committee in Convocation Hall.

In presenting the report Dr. Charles Hastings outlined what had been done by the commission during the two years of its existence, and also what was proposed to be done in future. Every municipality with 10,000 inhabitants or over will have a local organization to superintend the milk supply of the municipality.

"At present," said Dr. Hastings, "poisoning by milk is unfortunately not sufficiently melodramatic to appeal to politicians, municipalities or mankind in general. Recently an epidemic of rabies broke out in Ontario, resulting in one death. As a result of this all dogs are muzzled.

"In Ontario 50,000 children under five years died last year, and 50 per cent. of these deaths are due to impure milk on which they are fed.

"Is this not sufficient to have muzzles put on producers of bad milk?"

To be "certified," milk must not contain more than 10,000 colonies of bacteria per cubic contimetre, and Dr. Hastings stated that the three firms in Toronto supplying certified milk adhere to these conditions. In these three plants the sterilization of the milk cans has been given over to experts.

He showed the advisability of heating suspected milk to a temperature of 140 degrees F. before using. This temperature, while destroying bacteria, did not interfere with either the chemical or physical properties of the milk, or even change its flavor.

A Bit of High Finance.

Montreal, June 2.—A peculiar situation has arisen in regard to the town of Ville St. Paul, which is about to be annexed to Montreal. The corporation being pressed for funds, sold the City Hall for $5,000, not seeing the necessity of such an ornament under the new arrangements.

Now the Montreal board of control want to know the reason why of the transaction. They say the town agreed not to transact any new business after the beginning of the ...

Electrocuted at Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 2.—John Egeler, lineman, employed by the Ontario Power Co., was electrocuted yesterday near Falls View. While workmen were busy repairing the line, the juice was turned off. In some manner a current went along the wire, killing Egeler. The power company officials and Coroner Killam are investigating.

Died of Blood Poison.

Lindsay, June 2.—John Daniels of Fenelon Falls cut his foot badly while chopping wood last week. He had the wound attended to at once, but blood poisoning set in and the unfortunate man died yesterday morning. A portion of the foot was amputated.

Shipping Strike Settled.

Cleveland, June 2.—The strike of the tugmen of the Great Lakes Towing Co. of Cleveland and Ashtabula, was settled yesterday afternoon, the men returning to work under the old conditions.

Public Official Suicides.

Kansas City, June 2.—R. S. Crohn, former public administrator, and still administrator for estates not cleared up during his administration, shot himself yesterday.

THE INQUEST

At the Mamie Feeley inquest held on Tuesday night, one witness said that the train was going about fifteen miles an hour, another was sure that it was not going more than seven.

People seldom see things alike. One man will notice, where another man's eyes are dim. One person is prone to exaggeration while another is always too careful.

One viewed the comet to say, "That's a fake, it's no comet." Another saw in it one of the mysteries of the universe.

However, it is difference of opinion that keeps us from getting stale. Now suppose we were all Baptists, what would the other ministers do? If we were all vegetarians, it would be tough on the butchers and sausage-makers, and what would we do with the pigs?

If no one cared for the theatre, old New York would be crowded with thousands of actors and millions of dollars would stand locked up in great play houses. Some like sentiment, others tragedy; John [illegible] whiskers. His neighbor and many of his friends are clean shaven so the barbers keep on shaving. Some wear blue, some grey, others black and brown, and the mills are ever weaving and dyers, dying. So all through life this difference of opinion means stores, ministers, newspapers, magazines, sports and all the situations and experiences that go to make this old planet of ours one great kaleidiscope, ever changing, with not two views entirely the same.

THE JUNE BRIDE

There will be many weddings in Peterborough this month and it is to be hoped that none of the June brides will, too late, find it is a mistake. Love making is a very happy condition but once wed, it is too often different. The trouble seems to be that the honeymoon does not last. A well-known Peterborough citizen told on Wednesday the story of his fifty years of wedded life, the happiness increasing with the years. They were still lovers when she died.

The wooer is all attention before, but after, his attention often passes into neglect. It's like the man who is alert as he chases the street car, but when once caught, he goes in sits down and forgets.

She was always particular with her dress, her hair, the little ornaments so charming to the sex, she knew how to wear them before, but now she pays little attention to her appearance, she likewise forgets.

The other evening an old lady and gentleman stepped from the train. He held her arm with all the care of former years, and assisted her on a street car soon after. He carried her small parcel was attention itself, and her eyes [illegible] acknowledgement, for, though time had seared the face with wrinkles, and the cares of the years had whitened the hair, they were lovers still.

Meanwhile Cupid has a quiver full of darts and the clergymen are reaping the harvest, for this is June, the month of completed happiness, or shattered hopes.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Col. Roosevelt, ex-President of the United States, who, although not under circus management, is running a personal show throughout Europe, now comes to the limelight by advising England how to manage her affairs in Egypt. Col. Roosevelt has an exaggerated ego. Britain is the greatest colonizer of modern times. With her flag goes freedom and justice. From a representative of a land where its administration could not handle a few Indians at home, and until recently had not succeeded in colonizing the Phillipines, it comes with bad grace.

Below are two brief telegrams which appeared in yesterday's Review:—

> A mob at New Madrid, Mo., stormed the jail and lynched a negro, who had struck a white man.
> Soldiers and police fought a pitched battle on the streets of Cheyenne, Wyoming, late Monday night.

From this land of lynching and riots, trusts and scandals in administrations, it looks as if the ex-President of the United States could spend his time to better advantage at home.

Theodore Roosevelt is a success hunting elephants and lions, shooting with lead, and being shot by the camera, but he has got enough to do at home without telling a nation under whose flag goes half the shipping of the world, what to do in a country of which he probably actually knows little more than any average rapid fire American tourist. But then he is born that way, and nerve is a great asset across the line.

True, the American cousin 's great, but he was head of only 90 millions of people. King George is ruler over 400 millions, or one fifth of the entire human race.

The London Graphic commenting on the address of Col. Roosevelt, says;—Even Socrates was poisoned for giving too much advice.

MR. PERLEY THE OUTSIDE WHIP

Mr. George H. Perley, M.P. has been appointed chief outside whip of the Conservative party, and will have much to do with the general organization. The selection is thoroughly judicious. Mr. Perley is a prominent business man, is possessed of ample means, and affords an example of a well-to-do citizen who has entered life from a desire to do his duty to the commonwealth, rather than from ambition for personal aggrandisement. He is cool-tempered, clear-headed, thoroughly sensible, with a good business head and a strong gift for organization, together with excellent judgment. He has sat in Parliament since 1904, and has come before the public principally in connection with the fight against tuberculosis; he has been active and vigorous in that campaign.

Under Mr. Perley's management the Conservative campaign should be systematised and organized, and the party organization should be brought everywhere into touch with the feeling of the electorate. Public opinion is steadily turning against the Laurier Government with its slackness, its dangerous attitude on trade questions its thinly disguised separatism, its hideous mismanagement of the Transcontinental, and its endless crop of minor scandals.

THE POINT OF VIEW

TO THE DARK CONTINENT.
Montreal Gazette.

That trade between Canada and South Africa is increasing rapidly, and merchants are taking advantage of the opening up of that portion of the Empire, was proved by the heavy cargo which left on the steamship Bendu, of the Elder-Dempster line, this week.

WHY THE DIFFERENCE.
Hamilton Spectator.

New York state legislators in the assembly and senate are guilty of some funny "stunts" at times. Professional Sunday baseball, for instance, is allowable, but the grave senators have just killed a bill which permitted Sunday amateur games. Why the difference.

NEVER.
Stratford Herald.

Whiskey and love never affect two men exactly the same way.

IN A FIX.
Guelph Mercury.

A local pastor says there will be no ministers in heaven. Then what chance have the rest of us got?

A LEADER.

Andrew Carnegie says he has been responsible for forty-two millionaires. And dear only knows how many bookworms.

MILLBROOK NEWS

From Our Own Correspondent.

Millbrook, June 1.—A new plank sidewalk has been constructed along Tupper street, out as far as the G.T.R. tracks, which will be a great boon to residents of that part of the town.

A baseball match between Millbrook and Carmal was played on Friday which resulted in an easy victory for Millbrook, the score being 26—4. The Carmel boys, apparently, have not recovered from the effect of passing through the comet's tail.

The Ladies' Aid, of Millbrook, held a sale of confectionery, cakes, etc., on May 21st, manufactured by the ladies of the Methodist church. The proceeds amounted to over $50.

Mr. E. Thorndyke and Miss Thorndyke have moved into the residence of Mr. Fred Duncan, situated at the east end of the town.

Claude Percy Walker, of Bowmanville, was sentenced at Cobourg to one year for bigamy.

A new pipe organ, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Simmons, is being installed in the Methodist church at Colborne.

C.N.R. IMPROVEMENTS.

List of New Works That Will Eat Up $41,700,000.

Boston, June 2.—Further details of the recent financing of Canadian Northern Railway projects are brought by William Mackenzie, who has just returned from England.

He reports the securing of $41,700,000 in European subscriptions for the Mackenzie and Mann propositions. This new capital will be used as follows:

Canadian Northern Railway debentures, $6,000,000.

New C.N.R. steamship subsidies, $3,000,000.

Winnipeg street railway development, $1,000,000.

Western Canada Lumber Co., $7,500,000.

Dunsmuir Collieries, British Columbia, $14,000,000.

Braseu coal fields, Alberta, $6,000,000.

Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway, $4,200,000.

The completion of the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway, from Virginia mines into Duluth, will give a through connection from Edmonton to Chicago, via the Canadian Northern and Chicago & Northwestern.

The entire $6,000,000 bonds of the Braseu coal fields, were sold to private subscribers in Belgium, comprising the first large sum raised by the Mackenzie and Mann people in that country.

Suffered Severe Privations.

St. John, N.B., June 2.—A tug towing two light scows struck the rocks off Cape Spencer in the Bay of Fundy during a storm Tuesday night and sank in four minutes. The crew of ten men left in the boats, boarded a scow, and when it filled, transferred to the other scow. After a terrible night the scows were washed ashore. It took two hours for the party to climb over the rocks to the lighthouse, where they were sheltered. Two women almost died from exposure.

FARMERS INTERESTED

The farmers in the districts surrounding Peterborough are falling right in with the movement looking towards the formation of co-operative fresh egg circles. Tuesday evening at the North Monaghan town hall over 50 in all farmers and their wives turned out to hear the project discussed. After the matter had been quite fully laid before them those present decided as did those at Central Smith and Pine Grove, to organize forthwith into a co-operative egg circle through the medium of which they would do away with three or more middlemen in the egg business, put up a high quality article and receive for the same such an increased price as the article merited.

The provisional board of directors as elected to complete the work of organization was as follows;—President, T. D. Young; Secretary-treasurer, Wilbur Bennett; Directors, T. Hunter, Jas. Baptie and Fred Campbell.

The speakers of the evening were, Prof. F. C. Elford, of Macdonald College, Que., H. C. Duff, of Norwood; J. I. Brown, of Montreal; Chas. C. Nixon, H. B. Cowan, of the Farm and Dairy staff.

Rapt attention on the part of the audience and the patient hearing given the various speakers, and the ultimate outcome of the meeting, showed that the poultry business, at one time thought to be a woman's job, had become so big as to be of vital interest to the farmers and that the farmers of North Monaghan were much alive to its unbounded possibilities.

Conditions Abnormal.

Winnipeg, June 2.—The thermometer dipped Tuesday night all the way from 62 in Winnipeg to seven degrees of frost at several other points in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Usually May 24 sees the end of his unsettled weather and it sets in fine and hot, but this season conditions have been abnormal from the very earliest opening in March, which permitted almost unprecedentedly early seeding.

The latter part of April and all May was, however, generally inclement and growth suffered a decided check. The present series of night frosts has affected tender garden stuff put out too early, but so far does not appear to have damaged farm crops.

Growth of wheat has been checked at the top with the consequence that the plant has stooled out, forming unusually strong plants. Thus prospects for the crop are by no means pessimistic, but a prolonged spell of good growing weather is needed now to bring the crop along.

London Military Sulky.

London, Ont., June 2.—With the opening of the militia training camp only two weeks distant, recruiting officers throughout this district are having their hands full trying to get men to bring the companies up to anything like full strength. In addition to the cold weather which has put the farmers back with their work and will keep many young men from going into camp, there is general discontent among the men who served last year over the regulations making efficiency in musketry the basis of efficiency pay. Many men who served last June and received only a fraction of what they expected will not only refuse to train this year, but are advising others to do so.

There is a certain amount of discontent also among the officers regarding the amount allowed for living expenses.

Expensive Remorse.

Washington, June 2.—Two cents in stamps constituted the enrichment of the conscience fund of the postoffice department yesterday. A communication received by Postmaster General Hitchcock was dated at Buffalo. The writer, who signed his name as "The One Who Did It," said:

"Some time ago I used a two-cent stamp that had been used, thereby defrauding the Government out of two cents."

After the necessary red tape had been unwound and the two one-cent stamps had reached the "conscience fund," and had been properly recorded, the expense to the Government was about $1.

Six Fishermen Lost.

St. Pierre, Miq., June 2.—Six fishermen lost their lives when the brigantine Mauve, of Cancale, France, struck on Point Blanche, while entering St. Pierre in a thick fog early yesterday.

Most of the crew were in their berths when the Mauve struck. The 19 survivors reached shore after most trying experiences.

Not Guilty of Libel.

Montreal, June 2.—Dan McDougall, a general organizer of the United Mine Workers of America, was found not guilty by the petit jury on a charge of having committed a libel against the Dominion Coal Co., there being no prosecutor. The defendant wrote a letter to La Patrie, which formed the grounds of the action, which was discharged.

OF INTEREST TO DAIRYMEN

Dairy Cow Queries

What is the object in keeping a cow?

Is it simply to consume the crops grown in the fields?

Is it simply to supply home-made fertilizer for the farm?

Is it to give the hired man another chore?

Is it not rather to produce plenty of good milk?

To be of real service to mankind by converting feed that he cannot use into nourishing, appetizing food?

Would you be better off if you sold the feed instead of keeping some of the cows that you have making a pretence of using it profitably?

Does each one of your cows produce milk at a cheaper rate per hundred pounds than the factory pays?

Does each cow in your herd produce milk or butterfat at a good profit above the cost of feed?

Do you think so or just make a guess at it, or do you know for certain?

How else is your labor to be paid for?

Do you keep records so as to find out these things or are you content to keep a few poor cows in a behind-the-times style?

Men who used to get only 3,500 lbs. of milk and 133 lbs. fat per cow, are now getting 4,900 lbs. of milk and 186 lbs. fat, since beginning to keep records.

Cow Testing

Mr. A. W. Haine, of Dewdney, B.C., writes as follows:—"When we joined the cow testing association in 1908 we had 21 cows, aged between four and seven years, with an average yield of 6,800 pounds of milk. In 1909 our 21 cows averaged 8,360 pounds of milk. We have 16 pure breds and five grade Holsteins. I would not think of stopping weighing and testing our milk, as I feel satisfied that if a dairyman looks well to the sire of his herd, and weighs and tests, his herd is bound to improve, and the hired men take more interest in their work. We commenced dairying eight years ago, with the intention of bringing our cows up to an average of 6,000 pounds milk each, which we did in about five years."

Such statements as the foregoing should prove inspiring to every dairyman. A fairly high standard of 6,000 pounds milk was reached in five years, and an increase of 23 per cent. has been added to that. Mr. Haines will probably be up to 10,000 pounds per cow soon. That is one particularly interesting feature of cow testing, ideals are realized, then those still higher are sought for, again with satisfactory results. What excellent herds could be developed if dairymen all over the Dominion would take up cow testing in real earnest.

$125,000 TO BE EXPENDED.

A new concrete dam will be built about one hundred feet below where the old one stands and a new power house will also be constructed.

The power house will be in operation before Christmas, but the dam may not be built until next year. The present dam is adequate to give satisfactory service for another couple of years.

Mr. Larmonth informed the Review that the power would be used for general purposes.

THREE CASES BEFORE HIGH COURT SITTINGS

Two Actions Dealing With Land Property—Plaintiffs Ask an Account and Payment of $4950—Action for Alimony Settled Out of Court.

The non-jury sittings of the High Court opens Monday, June 6th, but just who will preside is not at present known. There are three cases.

JOHNSTON VS. McKIBBON.

In the first action John Johnston, a fence builder, living in Peterborough claims $2,500 damages and asks for an injunction restraining the defendant, James McKibbon, a retired farmer, also of Peterborough, from any repetition of the acts complained of. [illegible]

The plaintiff in his claim, states that the defendant entered on his lands and located another piece of land, marked the boundaries of same and cut trees and brush and piled same in heaps and negligently set fire to same, at a time when it was highly dangerous and neglected to watch the fire. This resulted in the fire extending over plaintiff's land and destroyed the growing timber and soil.

G. W. Hatton for plaintiff, O'Connell & Gordon for defendant.

DOBBIN VS. DOBBIN.

This was an action for alimony, but the parties have settled.

Ruddy & Burnham for plaintiff. O'Connell and Gordon for defendant.

HOLDCROFT VS. STAVERT.

The plaintiff resides in Tweed, and he took a bill of sale from a person against whom the defendant obtained judgment upon a claim held by the Sovereign Bank. Execution issued and Sheriff of Peterborough seized property claimed by plaintiff under bill of sale. Issue, to try right of property. The defendant resides in Toronto.

Hall, Medd and Davidson for plaintiff. Hall, Hayes and Hall for defendant.

BULLOCK VS. CAMPBELL.

The plaintiffs residing in Douro and Smith, daughters and administratrices of J. H. Campbell, late of Douro, deceased, claim that the defendants, of [illegible] obtained $4,950 which was payable to their deceased father as an heir of his deceased brother, and will not account for or distribute the same as part of their father's estate.

Plaintiffs also claim that property on the rented farm, belonged to their deceased father and that the defendants, have taken the same to their use. Plaintiffs ask for an account and payment and also claim that the deceased was aged and incapable of doing business and was under the influence of defendants.

DEFENCE.

The defence is that the property on the farm did not belong to the deceased that the money received by deceased was distributed by him of his own accord without influence of the defendants and that the deceased was fully capable of doing business.

Dumble & Johnston for plaintiff. Dennistoun, Peck and Kerr for defendants.

ENGLISH IMPORTER PRAISES PETERBOROUGH CHEESE

Mr. S. Stewart Wainwright of the Firm of Samuel Wainwright, Norwich, Eng., Addresses Cheese Board—Montreal Buyer Also Speaks Well of This District's Product.

A representative of one of the large firms in the British Isles handling Peterborough cheese, Mr. S. Stewart Wainwright, of the firm of Samuel Wainwright, importers, Norwich, England, attended the meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board yesterday.

FIRST VISIT TO CANADA.

Mr. Wainwright briefly addressed the board. He said it was his first visit to Canada and his first attendance at a cheese board meeting.

HIGH STANDARD.

The standard of Peterborough cheese in England was very high. His firm got the cheese in the last state before it went to the consumer, and after it had been handled a great deal through the shipping of it from Canada.

CAREFUL SHIPPING NECESSARY.

The speaker said he couldn't press home too strongly the necessity of shipping the cheese in good boxes. Sometimes the firm received cheese without boxes.

BOUQUET FOR PETERBOROUGH CHEESE.

This, however, didn't apply to the cheese of this district, as care was shown in packing them, and the quality was a matter of general remark among the English importers.

Mr. Wainwright's remarks were of a most interesting character, and he was given an appreciative hearing.

MR. H. A. HODGSON.

Mr. H. A. Hodgson, a large buyer from Montreal, and whose interests with the local board are looked after by Ald. A. G. Gillespie, was also present. He spoke in commendation of Peterborough [illegible] excellent information as to the shipment of cheese.

Gilbert Self Injured While Working at New Power House—Companion Clung to Rope When Scaffold Overturned and Escaped Being Hurt.

Last night about five o'clock Gilbert Self, while working on the power house at the new dam, fell from the scaffold and broke his right ankle. Comstock's ambulance was hurriedly summoned, and the injured man convyed to Nicholls Hospital. Drs. Frederick and Morgan set the limb.

Self and another man were working on the scaffold about twelve feet from the ground. The board turned over and Self was precipitated to the ground. His companion saved himself by clinging to the ropes.

Self is from Toronto.

SOMETHING FOR EVERYBODY

In Band's Concert To-morrow Night—The Programme

From the standpoint of classical music the feature number of the band's programme at the first park concert of the season to-morrow night will be Rossini's beautiful overture, "Semeramide." The instrumentation for this selection is magnificent and there are many striking passages for the reeds and brass.

To the older music lovers the "Songs of 1863" will appeal strongly, while the devotees of up-to-the-minute classics will find lots of encouragement to whistle in Arthur Pryor's contagious rag, "Frozen Bill."

The programme:

BURIED IN A TUNNEL

Accident to Laborer at the County Jail—Earth Overhead Became Dislodged

While at work on a tunnel at the county jail yesterday, a laborer in the employ of Mr. T. D. MacGregor had an experience which will remain green in his memory for a long time to come.

A considerable quantity of earth over his head had become dislodged and almost completely covered him. He was soon rescued uninjured.

The tunnel is being dug in connection with the installing of the new heating system at the jail.

MR. TURNER WILL TELL OF TRAVELS

The A.Y.P.A. of St. Luke's church are providing for their members and friends to-morrow night a most interesting evening of music and a lecture.

Mr. J. J. Turner, sr., who has just now returned from abroad, has kindly consented to lecture on "His Impressions Gathered During His Travels." He will also speak on the funeral procession, etc., of the late King.

Mr. Turner has travelled much and his knowledge of other lands, coupled with a thorough understanding of his subject is sure to provide an instructive as well as a pleasant evening.

Everybody is invited. Silver collection at the door.

$100 CHEQUE FOR CHIMES FUND

A cheque for $100 was received this morning by the Chimes Committee from Mr. E. R. Wood, of Toronto, to help this public enterprise. This handsome gift will be widely appreciated in this city where Mr. Wood has many warm friends.

Over $700 has now been received for the fund from persons outside Peterborough.

Mrs. Thomas Bradburn, Toronto, is another out-of-town contributor who has donated a handsome sum within the past few days.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Review does not hold itself responsible for opinions expressed by its correspondents

Strongly Endorses Chimes

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—At this season we often see the headline "Wedding Bells" in our papers, and in December "Christmas Bells." The point of this lies in the fact that it requires several bells to make a joyful sound worthy of a joyful occasion. At present we have no right to the title in Peterborough, as we have only single bells, making the same monotonous sound for all occasions, no matter how different. I hope that the efforts now being made to procure a City Chime will be so generally supported by citizens that we shall have this valuable addition to our public treasure and be able to do proper honor to patriotic and joyful occasions.

Yours, etc.,
CITIZEN.

AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE

Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed—and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

YOUNG SALVATION ARMY WORKERS UNITED IN MARRIAGE

Happy Event Witnessed by Large Audience at the Temple—Ceremony Performed Under the Shadow of the Army Flag by Staff Captain Walton.

Once again the good ship matrimony slipped her moorings and steamed away, with her two passengers on her voyage into the future. The trip promises to be a pleasant one and those two first-trip travellers were given a hearty send-off by over two hundred or more friends, who gathered at the dock to witness their embarking.

A wedding at the Salvation Army Temple is always an interesting and happy event.

When Miss Florence Lilian Leaman was united in marriage to Mr. Wilfred James Gadd, by Staff Captain Walton last evening, the occasion was, while solemn in its significance, one which the young couple may in the years to come, look back and recall pleasant memories.

The attendance at the Temple was large. There were few vacant seats. No silk dresses rustled. Decorations, there were none.

The service was opened by the hearty singing of an appropriate Army song, and at its conclusion prayer was offered by Sergt.-Major R. C. Braund and Mrs. Walton.

The Staff Captain then met the wedding party and escorted them to the platform. The bridesmaid was Miss Nellie Leader and the best man Mr. Wilfrid Boorman. Miss Ethel Card played the wedding march.

The latest fashions were not in evidence.

Apart from the white sash, which she wore over the right shoulder, the bride was attired in the blue costume of the Salvation Army.

The bridesmaid wore a white bow on the left shoulder.

The band next gave a selection "Experience," and this was followed by a chorus by the songster brigade.

The Scripture reading was the 3rd Psalm.

Sergt.-Major Braund was asked to take the platform and he had the honor of holding the flag of the Army under the shadow of which the ceremony was conducted.

The Staff Captain read the articles of marriage and the contracting couple gave their consent.

They then repeated after Staff Capt. Walton the marriage vows.

The ring was next placed upon the finger of the bride by the groom and they were then pronounced man and wife.

A short prayer, on behalf of the newly-wedded couple followed and at its conclusion those present, demonstrated in a manner, as only Salvation Army followers can, their approval of the steps taken by the young couple.

A telegram from St. Thomas, tendering congratulations, was next read.

A vocal solo was given by the bridesmaid and the band gave another selection.

Bandsman Richardson, with whom the groom has made his home for some time, made a few happy remarks expressive of best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Gadd.

The songster brigade sang another chorus, after which Mrs. Laing spoke briefly. Mrs. Gadd was called upon for a vocal solo and her husband for a speech. The former responded and went through her number faultlessly.

Mr. Gadd blushed when he arose.

The encouragement he received from the members of the band was hardly of a character to help him gather his nerve, but he stood up bravely and eventually remarked that he intended to further the cause of the Salvation Army and live for God.

He was given a volley.

Another selection by the band and the singing of two verses of "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name," closed the service.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs Harry Leaman and has made many friends during her residence in this city. She has always been a staunch worker in the Army.

After the service at the Temple a pleasant time was spent at the home of Mrs. Gadd, King street.

The newly wedded couple will reside in Oshawa, but will not leave for their new home till Saturday.

AN INCIDENT OF 1860

A story is told of the King's trip to Canada when he was Prince of Wales. This was in the days of the old Midland Railway and he was on his way from Port Hope to Peterborough. At the village where the connection was made with the boat the villagers were out in their best to see the future King walk from the train.

His Royal Highness was accompanied by several officers and prominent Port Hope citizens, including Major Boulton, of Northwest fame, who was decked out in a gorgeous uniform. The Prince was plainly attired in a Norfolk summer suit. When he alighted from the train he ran for the boat. The town constable was there with his plug hat and acted very officiously keeping the crowd back. When he saw the Prince running to the boat, he ran out and threw him down. "I'll teach you, you young whelp to be running about when the Prince is here," the constable shouted. The Prince did not answer but got up and brushed off his clothes. Major Boulton and a number of others hurried forward and pulled the constable away. When the villagers learned the identity of the youth they were going to mob the constable, who thought it was one of those fresh young fellows.—Belleville Intelligencer.

FUNERAL TO-MORROW

No Inquest Into the Death of Patrick Hogan Who Was Found Dead at His Home

Coroner Gray has decided an inquest unnecessary in regard to the death of Patrick Hogan, who was found dead at his home in Douro by his brother yesterday morning. A death certificate was issued.

Dr. Gallivan went to the house last evening, but found no signs which would lead to indicate foul play. There were no bruises or marks on the body.

The room in which the dead man was found is a small one and poorly ventilated. The door was closed, as was also the window, and Dr. Gallivan believes that these conditions may have been directly or indirectly responsible for the death.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning at nine o'clock from the late residence, lot 7, in the 7th concession of Douro, to St. Joseph's church, and thence to St. Joseph's cemetery.

HAS SAVED MEN OVER A MILLION DOLLARS

Four Year's Savings Accrue to the Men Who Followed the Way of Today

"Estimating the profits to our customers in four years on the basis of our sales during the quadrennial period, we have put over $1,000,000 back into the pockets of the men of Canada," said a high official in the big Semi-ready Corporation.

"This is based on a very low estimate of saving on each suit. Did we give the actual saving as compared with the only three retail tailors in Canada who produce Semi-ready quality and accept their prices as a basis of comparison, the amount saved would be over $3,000,000. We sell tailoring of quality cheaper than anyone can produce its like, and certainly at from $5 to $15 cheaper than any retail tailor can sell. We have big advantages and direct connections with the woollen mills.

"Good tailoring has not been one of the burdens of the higher cost of living, thanks to the Semi-ready system."

Following the direction taken by Willard, Mars found him six miles from the aviation field with his propeller splintered by a rifle bullet, shot by some unidentified person. THE GREAT "QUEERITY" PROBLEM

What Happened When Frank Williams Tried to Solve It

BY ARTHUR MORGAN LANGWORTHY

That Barrel Not Only Upset Old Hackett, but It Upset His Dignity

(Copyright, 1910, by the New York Herald Co. All rights reserved.)

PRAIRIEVILLE ACADEMY and Groveville Preparatory School had competed in a grand dual athletic meet every year as far back as any one could remember.

The results were always close, as the schools were most evenly matched, and rarely was a contest won by more than a margin of one or two points; so you can imagine the keen rivalry between the two seats of learning.

Another thing that gave an added interest to the annual meet was a peculiar "stunt" that marked each struggle. This was the event caled the Queerity. Introduced years ago to add a bit of fun to the struggle, it made such a bit that it became a recognized feature. It didn't count as much as the other events in the scoring, but on several occasions the winning of the Queerity decided the meet. So each school regarded it pretty seriously, even if the public took it as a joke.

Usually it constitutes a roaring comedy to the spectators. The queerities of the past included handspring races, stilt races, "chariot" races on oval wheels, &c., and the queerity of 1910 was called the great barrel dash.

But His Haste Was Fatal, for He Stuck Fast

Don't you think it meant just rolling a barrel. No such easy thing as running behind a barrel was allowed. The racer had to run on the barrel and stay on top of it. Each racer must have considerable acrobatic ability, for it is quite a circus feat to balance yourself on an overturned barrel and propel it forward at a fair clip. In order to revolve the barrel so it will roll forward you must keep stepping forward, somewhat as if you were trying to run backward on a treadmill.

So when the joint athletic committee announced what the next Queerity was to be the whole academy naturally turned to Bob Edwards to uphold its honor in this event, for Bob was the greatest acrobat and contortionist in the school. He could do numerous balancing acts and could even walk a tight rope as far as twenty feet. But with all his attainments he found barrel rolling needed a great deal of training to attain the necessary control and balance, and so formed the habit of practising on any promising looking barrel he happened to find. And here is where his enthusiasm overcame his judgment, and he met with the disaster that directly resulted in the great queerity problem.

It happened this way:—About a month before the athletic meet Bob happened to pass through the academy hall, and spied the big barrel that usually stood under the stairs, into which the waste paper baskets were emptied. Unfortunately it was empty. Bob knew that at this hour Mr. Hackett, the principal, was upstairs with a class in algebra. Bob rolled the barrel out from under the stairs, hopped upon it and began his lesson in this new branch of athletic learning. All would have been well had "Hack"—as the boys irreverently called him—been where Bob thought he was, and had the barrel responded properly to the control of Bob's dancing feet.

Bob's idea was to propel it down the hall. The barrel [illegible] so it suddenly turned at right angles, rolled out from under poor Bob and shot toward the door of the nearest classroom just as Mr. Hackett opened it.

That barrel not only upset Mr. Hackett right before the whole laughing class but it upset his dignity so that when Bob passed through the cyclone that followed the young acrobat found himself condemned to remain after school each afternoon for the next thirty days.

All pleadings for pardon were rejected by Mr. Hackett. He was a stern disciplinarian, who believed in ruling with a rod of iron.

When a deputation composed of the leading athletes of the academy ventured to appeal to his "school spirit" he dismissed them curtly, telling them that while he was sorry it interfered with their plans discipline must be maintained even if the school lost a dozen victories.

Frank Williams knew the principal's peculiarities probably as well as any one in the school.

"No, it isn't so much that he don't care whether we win or not," remarked Frank afterward, "but Hack can't forgive Bob for making such a chump of him before the class. That's what's the real trouble. He's been interested enough in the other track meets, even if he did make everybody 'sore' and uncomfortable; but he used to give us good points at that. Now the thing to do is to fix up a scheme to win out anyhow."

"But how are we going to get Bob in shape if he has to stay in every afternoon? You know Mr. Hackett locks up that classroom tight as a prison. He'll do just what he's done to every one of us some time or other—lock him in and then come back around six to let him out. How are you going to do it? If it was any of us we could train at some other time in the day, but Bob's father nearly works him to death in his store, besides making him do chores up at the farm. He never has any time off except that little bit after school," said Ned Wilson, gloomily.

"And here's Hack gone and taken it all away by jailing him for a month! What chance has he got to get trained properly, with the Queerity coming off only a couple of days after his month's up?" added Greggy Gordon.

"Well, boys, I don't say I can solve the problem, but I'm going to try. I've got an idea already. It may get us into trouble if Hack finds it out, but the athletic honor of the school is in peril, and when it comes to choosing between defending that or knuckling down to discipline, me for honor every time!" cried Frank eloquently, if not very grammatically, and then he told them his plan.

The next day half an hour before school opened Frank Williams dodged from behind the hedge that bounded the school grounds and rapidly rolled a large sugar barrel across the yard, disappearing into the rear basement door, which was always left unlocked, as are most doors in the country.

That same day, half an hour after school closed, if Mr. Hackett had suddenly decided to return after locking Bob in his classroom he would have found it empty. Bob had escaped through the transom. The transom was part of Frank's scheme. For jailing purposes Mr. Hackett had put a lock on it from the outside, but Frank planned to slip up stairs and unlock the transom every afternoon after the principal's departure. This he did. Bob climbed over and the two "streaked it" to the big, cool, cement paved basement, where a suppressed shout greeted them from the training committee.

"Well, I guess this comes pretty near solving the problem," chuckled Frank, as they proceeded to put Bob through his first afternoon's work. The cellar afforded a broad span of smooth space perfectly adapted to the gyrations of the rolling barrel, and the initial try-out proved a grand success.

The athletic prisoner trained faithfully day after day. Of course, the boys couldn't be there all the time, as most of them were in daily training themselves at Prairie Oval track, where the meet was to be held. But a lookout was always posted in the road to signal the principal's approach; then Bob would hustle upstairs and pop through the transom in time to receive his jailer; barely in time more than once.

One day Bob got an unexpected hurry call to "break training." Mr. Hackett had come by a different way, across the fields, surprising the lookout in the road. Bob literally hurled himself into the transom opening in a wild effort to get through, but his haste was fatal, for he stuck fast, while Frank (who happened to be with him) tried desperately to shove and pry him through.

Frank didn't desert him until they heard Mr. Hackett's key fumble in the main entrance, and then he rushed for the basement, forced to leave Bob's waving legs to greet the principal. By this time Bob was yelling at the top of his voice, for the sharp edge of the transom dug into him terribly.

As soon as he recovered from his surprise Mr. Hackett promptly grasped Bob by his legs and, giving one mighty yank, pulled the tortured youth out of the transom.

"Trying to escape, were you?" thundered Mr. Hackett sternly, taking Bob by the collar. "Well, we'll have to lock you up in safer quarters. Next time I'll find a place where you can't get out. I'll put you in the basement. Come down with me now while I take a look at it." And the principal, with one big hand on Bob's shoulder, forced the terror stricken prisoner down the stairs to inspect his new dungeon. Surely all was discovered now.

The other boys had escaped through the unlocked basement door, except Frank Williams, who daringly remained behind, crouching on the basement stairs to witness poor Bob's "finish." So thus it happened that Mr. Hackett's decision to explore the basement nearly resulted in Frank's discovery. He had just time to run down the stairs, roll the telltale barrel into an empty coal bin and dive behind it.

"I can't understand how Hackett missed seeing me or the barrel. He must be getting awfully near sighted, 'cause he looked right into the bin. There was a window there, and I know my legs stuck out from behind the barrel," said Frank afterward as he told of his escape to the others. But Mr. Hackett passed by, and after poking around the basement, had allowed Bob to go home.

How the boys laughed at the way Bob's transom disaster worked out! Instead of locking him in the stuffy classroom the next day the principal had put him in the cool basement exactly where he wanted to be and had locked the door leading to the stairs! Mr. Hackett of course saw that the door opening from the basement to the yard was locked, too, and while this barred out Bob's trainers it also dispensed with the need of a lookout. Bob complained of being lonesome, but acknowledged even that was better than being almost squeezed to death every time he tackled the transom. And so the month passed, until the thirty days were finally up and Bob was released from his prison three days before the track meet.

If there had been any doubts as to the efficiency of the school training course, they were quickly dispelled, when the late prisoner was "tried out" by his trainers at Prairie Oval Track. He proved himself in fine condition, and as for barrels, he was master of them all.

The day of the meet found the stands at Prairie Oval packed with the pupils from both schools with their friends and families. Each event counted a total of six points, except the Queerity, which counted only one point. The other events counted three for a first, two for a second, and one for a third. But the Queerity winner only scored one, and second none. The scoring was close as usual, and the crowd worked itself into a frenzy of excitement as the contest proceeded.

The Queerity took place about the middle of the programme. Mr. Hackett had attended the meet invested with his accustomed dignity. All through the contests he never even changed the expression on his severe face, and a stranger watching him would never have dreamed he was principal of one of the contending schools. In fact, the Grovevillers jeeringly said it gave them chills to look at him, sitting up there in the grand stand box, but that was Mr. Hackett's way.

Finally the Queerity was reached. The two contestants mounted the overturned barrels and each barrel was set on the starting line. The official announcer then explained the new "stunt" to the audience. The distance was 100 yards, and the man who made the distance still atop his barrel won. Every fall was penalized six feet.

Crack! barked the starter's pistol.

"They're off!" cried the crowd, and literally one was. For no sooner had they started than Bob's rival contestant swerved violently and ran his barrel directly into Bob. That racer flew into the air, and he landed heavily on the ground.

"Get up, Bob! Get up!" screamed the Academy, and right then and there the strange thing happened. Frank was busily engaged trying to stand Bob (who was dazed by the fall) on his barrel, when a deep voice shouted a command, and the next minute Mr. Hackett—of all people!—was at his side steadying Bob!

Perhaps it was the shock of discovering who this new assistant was that worked over the partly stunned Bob. Anyway, he straightened out wonderfully and in a few seconds was rolling along after his "field" in grand style. But the other had a big start.

Everybody's eyes were on Mr. Hackett, and, realizing the undignified position this sudden betrayal of interest had put him in, he walked stiffly back into the grandstand, where he watched the remainder of the race. It was a splendid finish. If the opening fall had not put Bob so far behind there would have been no race at all. But instead it resulted in making him a "scratch man." The Grovevillier reeled along on his barrel, falling more than once and earning the setback penalty, but, as Frank said, "Bob's style was faultless." If there ever was a barrel trained to roll under a boy's feet that barrel was. He gradually overhauled the other man until he brought his barrel up within a few feet of him.

They were now five feet from the finish line. Superbly balancing himself on his wabbling perch, with one supreme effort in which his dancing feet flew so fast you could hardly see them, Bob rolled his barrel over the line—a winner by six inches! Academy had won the Queerity!

He Found That Barrel Rolling Needed a Great Deal of Training

By winning it they also won the track meet, as it afterward turned out, for the final score was so close that the one precious point it gave enabled Academy to just beat Groveville.

"But what puzzles me is the way Mr. Hackett acted when Bob fell in the Queerity! Here he tries to help him to win, after doing everything to make him lose for a month," observed Jim Spencer, after it was all over.

"I'm not so sure about that!" exclaimed Frank. "I think that what he did at the Queerity just gives him dead away."

"What do you mean?" demanded Jim.

"Simply this. I'm going to put you some questions. I never mentioned it, but that morning when I sneaked the barrel into the bas[illegible] through a window. He got there early that day. Then, why didn't he ask me what I was doing with that barrel?

"Now for the next question. Why did he transfer Bob from the room to the basement after he caught him red handed, or rather legged, in the transom?

"Also, why didn't he discover me in the coal bin? He's 'nailed' me for things I've done in class that are a hundred times more secretive.

"And lastly, why did he act the way he did at he Queerity?"

"I'll answer 'em all for you in just one plain statement," remarked Frank, while his listeneres looked at him with a new light dawning on their surprised faces.

"I'm no Sherlock Holmes, but anybody who uses a little common sense will figure it out this way:—

"First of all, Bob made 'Hack' so mad that he lost his temper completely. He went too far and then regretted it. He wanted Academy to win, but it would be bad discipline to 'back water,' and he did the next best thing—he gave Academy 'a show' by letting us alone. So don't be too hard on him!"

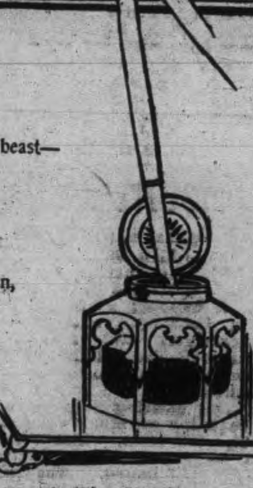
"And, boys," concluded Frank, "I thought I had solved the great Queerity problem, but I'm positive most of the credit ought to go—right to 'Hack!'"

Don't you think so, too?

A BORED PEN WIPER

BY VAN VLIET ADLING

I'm sore
That I can't run about on the floor
And roar.
But I sit on my shin
And I grin and I grin
Like a satisfied pig to the core.
You must know that I'm not a real beast—
At least
Not one that on gore makes a feast.
I've ceased
To expect much of life,
But the struggle and strife
And the pricks are daily increased.
For I'm naught but the slave of a pen,
You ken,
And I live on a desk in a "den,"
And then
There's a man who can't think
Spills a whole lot of ink
On the paper again and again.
He, too, is a terrible bore.
What's more,
He's sure he's an author of lore
Galore,
And his pen's such a pack
He wipes all on my back,
And that's what my bristles are for.



HOMES OF MANY LANDS

The Scotch Cottage

BY PATTEN BEARD

ON the moors of Bonnie Scotland,
Bits of homes like this you'll spy:
Roof of thatch and two shy windows
Peep at you as you pass by.

Little children strong and sturdy
There learn work—and work right well,
For the Scottish lads and lassies
Are ambitious to excel.

If you, too, would learn that lesson,
Just remember to be true
To each little task that offers—
That's the way that you must do.

Fold and paste it neatly—so!
Little things all count in making
A success in all, you know.

The Old Time May Day.

IN England May Day used to be universally celebrated by young men and women, as well as boys and girls. The May pole, trimmed with garlands and ribbons, was the principal feature of the village green, and about it the lads and lassies used to dance on May Day after they had elected the May King and Queen, who were supposed to be chosen because of their handsome faces and general popularity.

In this country we call the arbutus the May flower, but in England "the May" is the hawthorne, which is in bloom in every English country side on the first of May.

It used to be the custom for the young men to rise early on May Day to go to the woods to gather fresh boughs and blossoms. They would walk through the village and out into the woods singing this song:—

"Come, lads, with your bills,
To the woods we'll away;
We'll gather the boughs
And we'll celebrate May.

"We'll bring our load home,
As we've oft done before,
And leave a green bough
At each pretty maid's door."

Young girls and children would also go through the village leaving boughs and blossoms at each door and singing:—

"Here we come, poor Mayers all,
And thus we do begin
To lead our lives in righteousness,
Or else we die in sin.

"We have been rambling all this night
And almost all this day,
And now returned back again,
We have brought you a branch of May."

FORREST IS MODERATOR

The President of Dalhousie Gets Presbyterian Honor.

Principal Patrick and Lieutenant-Governor Fraser Act as Sponsors For New Moderator of Presbyterian Assembly Now Meeting In Halifax—Important Debate on Church Union Coming.

Halifax, N.S., June 2.—The opening session of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada was held last evening in St. Matthew's Church, where between three hundred and four hundred commissioners from all parts of Canada gathered together. Dr. Samuel Lyle of Hamilton, Ont., moderator, delivered the sermon, after which he formally constituted the assembly.

It was then moved by Principal Patrick of Winnipeg that Dr. John Forrest, president of Dalhousie University, be elected moderator for the ensuing year. Lieutenant-Governor Fraser of Halifax made a bright speech in seconding the resolution. He said, he knew of no higher office than that of moderator. As a member of Red Deer presbytery, he stood before the assembly and asked that they elect Dr. Forrest, than whom none had more energy, desire to help, or more gladly do his best. There was great applause after both addresses.

Prof. Ballantyne of Toronto nominated Rev. Dr. R. D. McKay, foreign mission secretary of Toronto, in a strong speech. It was seconded by Dr. Turnbull, also of Toronto. But Dr. McKay wished his friends to withdraw his name, because he was also for the motion. It was granted, and the nomination carried unanimously.

Principal Patrick and Lieutenant-Governor Fraser withdrew to the vestry to see their candidate robed in the moderator's gown, and then took the platform and introduced him to the late moderator. President Forrest was visibly affected. It was not so much his victory that unnerved him, but the gallantry of Dr. McKay in retiring. He paid him a most friendly tribute, and then pledged himself to the moderator by the grace of God.

Dr. Forrest is a Nova Scotian, born and bred, having first seen the light of day in New Glasgow Nov. 25, 1842. Educated at the Presbyterian colleges at Truro and Halifax he was ordained to the ministry in 1866, and placed over the congregation of St. John's, this city. While still occupying this charge he was appointed to a chair in Dalhousie College, Halifax, and in 1885 was appointed principal. He also filled the chair of history and political economy. He has been honored with degrees from various other seats of learning, and was also made a fellow of the Society of Science, England.

There are many other important questions to come up for consideration and action by the commissioners at the present assembly. Church union will be one of these, and it is predicted that it will cause a keen discussion.

The assembly convenes to-day at 10 a.m., and the evening will be devoted to foreign missions. The reports show that the past year has been one of unusual missionary activity, both in the home and foreign fields.

Used Wax Flowers on Graves.

New York, June 2.—Grand Army men yesterday were angry at Gen. J. Madison Drake, because he placed wax flowers instead of natural blooms on the graves of the veterans in Evergreen Cemetery, at Elizabeth, N.J. When the survivors reached the graves Decoration Day and saw that wax flowers had been placed on the graves, they tore up the imitation flowers and threw them away. Tuesday they passed resolutions censuring Drake. Yesterday Drake said he thought the wax flowers looked better and retained their beauty longer.

The soldiers replied that the deeds of their dead were not shams, and that sham flowers had no place on such an occasion.

An Eccentric Lunatic.

St. John, N.B., June 2.—Charles Coonen, an Englishman employed on a farm at Musquash, developed an eccentric brand of insanity on Monday night and leaving his bed ran off to the woods entirely naked.

Searchers failed to locate him until the next day, and when found he violently refused to be clothed. He was tied up in blankets and taken to the insane asylum and will be deported

Went Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., June 2.—An unknown man stepped over the rail about ten feet from the brink at Prospect Point yesterday, and went over the falls.

Those who witnessed the suicide describe the man as six feet in height, medium build, 45 or 50 years old, dark moustache, dressed in dark clothes, sack coat, and soft hat.

The body has not been recovered.

South African Trade.

Ottawa, June 2.—Mr. Pousette, trade commissioner at Durban, calls attention to the fact that Canadian manufacturers have to depend upon New York commission houses for their orders from South Africa.

He says that if there were a commission house in Canada to which buying orders could be given, Canadian exports to South Africa should largely increase.

Twenty-Nine Sentenced to Death.

St. Petersburg, June 2.—Penalties of death or life imprisonment have been meted out to the men and women members of a youthful band that for eighteen months committed a series of murders and robberies.

Twenty-nine men, ranging in age from 18 to 25 years, were sentenced to death. Eight women were sentenced to imprisonment for life.

COMPLETION OF TRENT CANAL

touch most superficially, is that of the conservation of the water and its relation to the power situation in Peterborough. The only point I wish to mention in this connection is that we must realize that in the husbanding of these waters for navigation purposes great power advantages have been created.

PROMPT ACTION NECESSARY.

"In the minds of some it may appear that the present is not the most auspicious time to start an agitation of this character, but on the other hand it must be remembered that the estimates for 1912 are now being called for, and whatever is to be done in that year must be provided for now.

"As has already been explained, this meeting is of an entirely informal character, and I shall appreciate it as an assistance to me personally, and also regard it as a first step towards the further industrial development of Peterborough, if the gentlemen here at present will express whatever views and opinions they may have on this subject without the formality of being called upon to do so.

"Permit me to thank you for turning out on such short notice, and for the courteous hearing you have given to these few disjointed remarks."

A TWO-FOLD ADVANTAGE

Mr. S. R. Armstrong stated that within recent months the value of water transportation facilities was convincingly demonstrated when important industries had failed to adopt Peterborough as a place of location for the sole reason that these transportation facilities were not available.

The completion of the section of the canal to the south would give Peterborough the incoming freights and the completion of the northern arm would establish connection with the west—a rich market for the finished product.

SHOULD MAKE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. Perkins suggested that all the towns through which the canal would pass should put the matter before their respective boards of trade and co-operate toward having the canal completed at the earliest possible time.

Mr. J. H. Larmonth thought influence should be brought to bear at Ottawa to have large appropriations to carry on the work put in the estimates this year.

The Government should appropriate sufficient money to carry on the operations with dispatch. The effect on the power would be a very prominent one, because the Government would have to have the water at good level for the purposes of navigation.

USEFUL DISCUSSION.

Mr. Duggan stated that he would like to hear practical suggestions as to the course to adopt to impress the Government with the necessity of hurrying the completion of the canal.

A lengthy and illuminating discussion on this subject, of such vital importance to Peterborough and all the places along the route the canal will take, was held, and it was the unanimous opinion of the meeting that it was imperative that the Government be petitioned and urged to delay no longer in the construction of the canal.

A SHARP REBUKE.

Mr. D. W. Dumble criticized the Government's delay very sharply. "I've lived in Peterborough a good many years," he said, "and have been waiting half my life for the completion of that canal. If it had been in the States it would have been completed in three years. It's outrageous."

SPECIAL COMMITTEE CHOSEN.

After considerable further discussion, a motion by Mr. Larmonth, seconded by Ald. Buller, was carried, to the effect that a committee consisting of Mr. F. D. Kerr, Mr. Duggan and Ald. Phelan, be appointed to look after the organizing of a deputation interested in the early completion of the Trent Canal, to wait on the Dominion Government, with the view of impressing it with the desirability and great advantage of having the canal completed as soon as possible.

DANGEROUS DANDRUFF

Will Make Canada a Bald Headed Nation if Not Checked

M. Pasteur, the great French Physician of Paris, once said: "I believe we shall one day rid the world of all diseases caused by germs."

Dandruff is caused by germs, a fact accepted by all physicians.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage will kill the dandruff germs and remove dandruff in two weeks or money back.

Wm. Madill guarantees it. It will stop itching scalp, falling hair and [illegible] grow thick and abundant.

It puts life and lustre into the hair and prevents it from turning gray.

It is the hair dressing par excellence, daintily perfumed and free from grease stickiness. It is the favorite with women of taste and culture who know the social value of fascinating hair.

A large bottle costs only 50 cents at leading druggists everywhere, and in Peterborough by Wm. Madill. The girl with the auburn hair is on every package.

2004 Cheeses Were Boarded and Most of Them Went at 10 9-16 the Opening Sale Price—No Numbers Will be Used for Peterboro District Cheese.

The branding and numbering of cheese was the opening topic of discussion at the cheese board meeting Wednesday morning. It was decided on a vote of the salesmen to continue to brand the cheese without using any numbers.

As the opening bid Mr. Morton offered 10, Watkins 10 1-4, Gillespie raised it to 10 3-8. Watkins made it 10 1-2, Gillespie, after a pause, bid 10 9-16. This price was not raised and Mr. Gillespie named as his selections: Keene, Warminster, Shearer, Central Smith, Selwyn, Villiers, Westwood. All accepted. Warsaw refused. Trewern accepted, as did also Indian River, East Emily, King Edward, Myrtle, Maple Leaf, Young's Point, Pine Grove, Lakefield and Bensfort. Lang refused. Cedardale, Fleetwood and North Dummer accepted. This completed the selection, and Mr. Weir offered 9 1-16 for the balance of the board. Mr. Cook, of Cook & Sons, bid 5-8, Mr. Weir beating him out by offering the same price for the balance to the board. He named Warsaw, Oakdale, Daisy D, Ormonde, Lang, Norwood, Killarney.
